In addition, electricity consumption was down by 2.5 per cent below the 1973 level, the first decrease in 25 years. NU projected a 7.4 increase in electricity consumption for 1974.

By delaying the project, NU may be able to obtain low interest federal and state loans.

Two reactors for the proposed plant have been ordered from General Electric Co. and the general contractors, Stone and Webster Construction Co., have ordered a $90 million crane for building the plants.

The nuclear plants have been a controversy since the announcement of the proposed construction of the $1.52 billion nuclear plants on Dec. 28, 1973.

Samuel Lovejoy, last year toppled a 500-foot meteorological tower owned by NU in Montague and was freed by a directed verdict from Judge Kent B. Smith.

'Experiment fund' proposal postponed

By AVIS YUNI
Staff Reporter

A proposal creating a fund to support experimental liberal education projects has been indefinitely postponed due to its rejection from funding through the Carnegie Institute, Change in Liberal Education Project in Washington, D.C.

No reason was given for the Institute's failure to include the UMass "experiment fund" proposal in its 17-school grant project.

John A. Hunt, Acting Associate Provost for Special Programs, told the Collegian he believes UMass was rejected because the Carnegie officials, upon visiting UMass in late November, felt there was too great a distance between students and faculty for the "experiment fund" to succeed.

Hunt said the Carnegie Institute sent letters to 300 higher education institutions last September, inviting them to submit proposals for liberal education projects.

He said the Institute wanted to choose 17 schools representing all the varied types of higher educational facilities (two-year Junior Colleges, Community Colleges, Technical Schools, four-year Universities, etc.).

Among these 17, the Institute also wanted all the varied types of educational problems and projects represented.

Hunt said, the Carnegie Institute could then go to organizations wishing to fund liberal education projects and have a school to represent any of the programs in which the funding group might be interested.

UMass was included in the 38 schools chosen for further consideration from among the original 300 applicants. Hunt said Carnegie officials then visited here and discussed the "experiment fund" and talked with students, faculty, and administrators about the campus.

The officials questioned points in the proposal, which was afterwards revised and sent back. However, Hunt said, it was not among the 17 chosen in January.

The proposal sought to set up a Committee of the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs on Resources and the Improvement of Undergraduate Education which would encourage "collaboration between interested members and groups in the University community in order to continue the improvement of undergraduate education on the Amherst campus."

The proposal said the committee would do this by "providing consultation, funds, and assistance in developing proposals toward effective and systematic responsiveness to the University's needs."

This committee would be made up of six students and ten faculty members representing various areas on campus. Hunt said he thought the make-up of the membership of the committee would [illegible] the Institute's fears of gaps between students and faculty in the period.

In its first year the Committee would solicit proposals from any individual or group in the campus community. It would be "interested in proposals which stimulate reallocation of academic resources as a result of successful experiments."

Priority would be given to proposals crossing department, faculty, or school lines, and usually be expected to include student participation at all levels.

Grants would be allotted by the committee for accepted proposals, the committee hoping to have at its disposal $300,000 from outside sources to allocate over four years. In the fifth year the University would be responsible for the entire cost of a specific proposal program if it was decided that it would be continued.

Public access needs public interest

By AL [illegible]
Staff Reporter

A UMass graduate student and member of the Cable Advisory Committee of Amherst has recommended that a public access working group be formed to oversee the installation of a viable public access facility.

"The only way for public access to work is if an interested community makes it work," said Prescott Smith, a 10 year resident of Amherst, in a recent interview.

Public Access would make available to citizens of Amherst, the production equipment and technical assistance needed to produce a five-minute cable broadcast free of charge on a first come, non-discriminatory basis. Information as well as educational programming could be aired.

"In its present condition," Smith added, "public access is an example of democracy not working because of non-participation."

The public access working group could, according to Smith, be a self-governing, and possibly separate non-profit organization. Also, the group may control its own equipment, studio and staff.

On Tuesday, February 25, at 7:30 p.m. in the Junior High School Auditorium, there will be a meeting at which the public access concept will be discussed.

All Amherst residents and UMass students who are interested in participating in the working group or who are interested in finding out what public access is about, are invited to attend.

Stockbridge - our agricultural school

Stockbridge Dean John W. Denison

By JAMES OSATO

Since 1918, the Stockbridge School of Agriculture has offered a quality education to students desiring fields of study in agriculture, but actually how much does the typical UMie know about those they consider their green-thumbed, animal loving neighbors?

John W. Denison, Dean of Stockbridge, stated, "80 per cent will end jobs in their chosen fields. I believe we're the number one agriculture school in the nation."

Stockbridge School admits only the highly motivated students, using the theory that those with desire will produce. High Scholastic Aptitude Test scores and good performance in high school are secondary in importance. Out of 1200 applicants, only 280 will be accepted each year keeping the total enrollment at 670.

The school enjoys small classes, which creates an intimacy with students and professors alike. Vast resources are available, coming mostly from funds of state and federal grants. Three sources of education are offered students and professors: instructional, dealing with the classroom, experimentation, entailing detailed laboratory work, and the most important, extension, which allows practical skills to be learned in the field.

The extension program includes the Sunderland Dairy operation, apple orchards in Belchertown, and the new Tillson operation which provides sawmills, sheep operation, and poultry research. Professors devote about 30 per cent of their time in instruction, 30 per cent in laboratory, and 40 per cent in the field doing research and teaching seminars. Their work is often brought back into the classroom, so the students gain valuable knowledge about new findings.

There is much livestock available for experimentation, and the facilities at Tillson and South Deerfield provide modern equipment for laboratory work. Scientific research with ducks, turkeys, and chickens are available at Tillson. Busses bring students to neighboring fields to practice skills such as pruning, soil testing, insect diagnosis, soil fertilization, and others, which in turn are further studied in the labs.

Most freshmen leave in late March to work in summer placement related to their majors, and all others leave the last week of May. This gives the students three to five months of valuable field experience which is necessary for them to graduate and earn Stockbridge's Associate in Science Degree.

If a student can not find a job on his own, an advisor will work with him until a job arises. Often, this is when the extension program proves even more valuable, for the many operations within it offer job opportunities.

The students do more than simply work at these summer jobs; diaries, identifications, sketches, and other preparations must be returned after their "vacation" for their professors to examine.

Stockbridge offers majors of Agricultural Business Management, Food Distribution, Animal Science, Arboriculture and Park Management, Floriculture, Fruit and Vegetable Crops, Laboratory Animal Technology, Landscape Operations, and Turf Management. Each major has a specific club for its members where they can learn of job opportunities, and hear guest lecturers. At some time, the clubs arrange gatherings which untie faculty and students. These clubs are funded by the Stockbridge Service Organization (STOSO), a branch of the Stockbridge Senate.

A main function of STOSO is to bring together the students of both UMass and stockbridge in an attempt to better relations between them. They also sponsor the great number of Stockbridge activities (which all University students can attend) such as banquets, parties, and lectures. These activities increase the intimacy between student and professor.

Stockbridge, a close-knit school, consistent in quality training, and personable staff, is an answer to what can be learned in two years. The students leave with skills, practical experience, and the ability to perform well in the fields in which they've specialized. They leave as a marketable product in a marketable industry.

BigWig - politics moves into entertainment

By E. PATRICK MCQUAID
MDC Staff

"Son, in this great land of our's, any boy can grow up to become president!" claims an old adage. Well, it's true, at least on the playing board. Big Wig is the exciting new adult game of politics that has recently appeared on the market and promises to be the national pastime now held by Monopoly.

Wheeling and dealing, backstabbing, and cut-throat politics is the name of the game. The emergence of Big Wig recently is quite incidental with last year's political situation. Robert St. Cyr, a guidance counselor at the Mount Wachusett Community College, founded the game in 1972 after watching Sen. George McGovern dump Sen. Thomas Eagleton as his vice president nominee after pledging him his 1,000 per cent support on national television a short time earlier.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology Strategic Game Society has announced that Big Wig is "better than many games that are being produced by the industry's top professional game manufacturers. The game is [illegible], magnificently simple enough to learn quickly, and yet flexible enough to allow the players to play their own game rather than one enforced upon them by the designer."

Big Wig made its first appearance at the New York Stationary Show at the New York Coliseum and was later displayed and marketed at the National Convention of College Stores in San Francisco. Since its introduction, the inventors have received enormous response and propositions from major game manufacturers to purchase the rights of the game. The three inventors, St. Cyr, Joe Such, and Richard Adams, has started their own company called Explorations Inc: Imagination and Development. They presently operate out of Leominster, Mass.

The game is played on a board much like the similar game of Monopoly. Contestants climb the ladder of success beginning at the local level and moving to state, federal, and finally the office of Big Wig itself. The office of chief executive can be obtained through a lengthy process of rising from level to level or by starting at an upper level such as state or federal government or by totaling up points at the end of the game.

Players can move along independently of their opponents or they can wheel and deal as much as they please. Backstabbing need not be necessary but is quite often employed.

Besides the entertainment aspect of the game, many schools are planning to employ the game in their political science departments, social studies, and governmental studies. It is admirably suited for hospitals and nursing homes as well as recreation centers and retirement homes.

Explorations Inc. is planning to open an international market.

Mansfield urges force reduction in Taiwan

By United Press International

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield urged the United States Sunday to reduce its force of 4,500 men on Taiwan as a new step towards improving relations with Peking.

The People's Republic of China hopes to settle the Taiwan issue peacefully, Mansfield said in an interview, and the Chinese are a patient people. But he questioned how long their patience will last without some movement toward a solution of the problem.

At the same time, the Montana Democrat firmly rejected suggestions that the United States should break off diplomatic relations with the Nationalist Government of China on Taiwan, or abrogate the self-perpetuating U.S.-Nationalist Chinese defense treaty.

Mansfield, who visited the People's Republic of China in December 1974, reported on his return that the hidden problem of Taiwan is now "the last major hurdle to normalization" of U.S.-Chinese relations. Until now he has not recommended what next steps to take.

The crux of this problem is that the United States recognized the Nationalist Chinese as an independent government. The People's Republic of China, however, considers Taiwan to be a province of the mainland.

Mansfield cited the U.S.-Chinese "Shanghai Communique" of 1972 as calling for a reduction of U.S. military forces in the area around China. Before the Vietnam war the United States maintained about 1,000 troops on Taiwan and he said the present force could be cut back without ill effects.

Mansfield also urged:

—That the United States phase out its military assistance mission to the Nationalist Chinese. "The purpose of the military assistance (MAAG) mission is to help train the Chinese, and who are they training them against but the People's Republic of China?" he asked.

"There's no such thing as a free lunch."

It's a dull term, but something called the "public debt" has been piling up for years because our tax dollars haven't come close to paying for all of the services and programs we've been demanding. In fact, just the annual interest charge on this debt recently hit a cool $29 billion. Nevertheless, many politicians say, "Relax, Uncle Sam can simply print the money to cover the cost." Not so, as this story from The March Reader's Digest makes clear. For with skyrocketing prices people stopped buying. And now we've got recession. How to get out of the mess? Read on . . .

Global giants tip the scales

By DENNIS PERRY

There is much to be said for the heightened consciousness of the American public in foreign affairs, particularly sharpened by the scene of the international economic crisis. Price instability, trade deficits, unemployment — all disrupt our lofty visions of a better America. Public criticism is then understandably directed at the Arab oil-producing nations, the Third World in general. Blurred, though, is our awareness of the generally depressed economies of the Third World — the inflationary spirals of their industrial imports, their perpetual indebtedness, and their low standard of living. But perhaps the most telling influence on both of our economies has been the multi-national corporations, private concerns (such as Gulf Oil Co. and International Telephone & Telegraph) which market on a global scale.

We have no one to blame but the architects of our foreign policy for precipitating the oil crisis and the subsequent collapse of the world economy. One must trace the history of our economic development to understand why our foreign policy went awry. Because of the growth of business from merger to multi-national corporations, foreign policy has been dominated by the corporations rather than corporations controlling them. Thus the dynamic center of any future catastrophe would, inevitably, find these firms taking a leading role. Our failure to recognize the growing power has led our officialdom to overrating the idea of an "Arab conspiracy." We pay for their error in judgement: Kissinger's miscalculations.

Because the American economy is so internationalized and the international economy so Americanized, what our multi-national corporations do and say has vital consequences for each and every one of us. The growing power of these giants is suggested by facts compiled by the United Nations in a document circulated within the U.N. community. Statistics show that foreign investments in just four African Territories exceeds $15,000 million. In Angola, the monopoly capital of the United States completely controls the extraction of diamonds, petroleum, manganese, copper, and other minerals. Almost all of the cash crops, import and export trade, and banking of Mozambique are monopolized by the capital of the U.S. In Southern Rhodesia, over 80 per cent of the mining interests are owned by the capital of certain Western Powers. In Southern Africa, the foreign investment exceeds [illegible] million and monopolizes the local gold and coal mining, oil refining, chemical and machinery industries. The report emphasizes that foreign economic interests are carried on only in those sectors which yield the highest profit — much to the expense of the indigenous population.

Statistics show wages for black laborers in Angola, Mozambique, Southern Rhodesia, and South-West Africa average annually (per capita income) about [illegible]; over 90 per cent of the population in these foreign economic-controlled areas is illiterate; over 50 per cent of the children die prematurely before the age of 10 because of a conspicuous lack of medical facilities. Why do these people live in the abyss of dire misery with such abundant resources? The report concludes that the high profits earned by these foreign monopolies continue to be returned to the United States. These profits are not invested for the improvement of the economic, cultural, and social conditions of the indigenous populations. We have only [illegible]

Room deposit stirs up interest

To the Editor:

I wish somebody would explain to me how to get my $100 room security deposit refunded from the housing office before I lose my mind, along with the refund.

Last semester I filled out the required forms that inform the housing office that I was not residing on campus this semester, thus entitling me to a $100 room security refund. When the bill including room and board came I immediately went to the phone and called the housing office about their mistake. According to them I could straighten out the matter during registration day and that once my bill was taken care of there would be no problem in getting my refund. As you might guess it was not quite so easy, but after spending at least 3 hours of red tape cutting the housing office gave me two cards. One of these cards was for my bill adjustment, the other was for my long sought after refund. I was told to take this card to the Bursar's Office which I did, and then was told by the Bursar's Office that my refund would be in the mail within six weeks.

You can imagine my surprise when I called the Bursar's office to find out how much longer I would have to wait for the refund when I was told that I had better get in touch with the Housing Office because they have no idea what card I have given them and that they don't even have a record of my living off campus. When I went over to the Housing office they acted as if I had lost my mind. I was told that I wouldn't have filled out any of these forms because if I had my refund would have been processed. When I tried to explain that they had given me a card listing my refund I was told that such cards do not even exist. When I told them that I could prove I had passed in a supposedly non-existent refund card because somebody had gone with me to the Bursar's Office when I passed it in, I was informed that this was a likely story as I could get anybody to swear to it. I then was told that my $100 was going to be forfeited.

I wonder could I have imagined all of this as the Housing Office tells me, or does somebody there have plans for my money?

Victim 'a' soycumstance! (Woo-woo!)

To the Editor:

What's become of Moe Howard? You know the guy we mean: the guy with the sugar-bowl haircut. The guy who was supposed to be here last year, when his entourage of innumerable followers showed their true Stooge colors by rallying en masse in favor of his appearance on campus. The students demonstrated their true feelings, indicating their high esteem and admiration for Moe, who is now the sole survivor of the tremendous threesome.

To many on campus, the Three Stooges are not just another show on television. They are a way of life. Just to see the crowds of people who faithfully show up to each and every Three Stooges film festival (which are all too few and far between) is to realize the fact that the Stooges are a modern day institution. They are a dependable source of laughter, something which we do not have enough of in these problem-filled times of ours.

Once again, we indubitably reiterate these questions: What has become of Moe? What has become of last year's crusade to bring him to UMass? Has he mysteriously vanished? Just a victim of circumstance? Nell no, we want Moe! Students, now is the time. Let your true feelings be known.

Longshot on a lame mule

If we look back at the '68 campaign it's hard to believe what a long way George Wallace has come. The one time renegade who started his own third party has now become a respectable Democrat. However, for some of us he hasn't come far enough. Even if we were to believe that he has sincerely changed, he is still considered to be a very conservative Democrat.

When the '68 campaign began, Wallace possessed a great deal of support, but as the election day grew closer his chances began to diminish. After he lost the Democratic candidacy he started his own right winged independent party. There were several reasons why no one took him seriously, the most prevalent being that the idea of a third party was just too outlandish for most Americans to support it. Wallace's issues mainly concerned the South, and his campaign seemed like a radical rightist but [illegible]. As Wallace accepted defeat gracefully and returned to Alabama.

Before the 1972 campaign Wallace had reappeared, however, this time his "stand by America" campaign theme had disappeared. Wallace was not a liberal, but he seemed to have disassociated himself from the John Birch or Ku Klux Klan type of stand he took on issues in former years. He seemed to dress and look more liberal and the addition of a pretty young wife, Cornelia, didn't hurt his campaign, either. Wallace became a more likely prospect, for he seemed like an answer to the more liberal presidential candidate, George McGovern.

We all know what happened to Wallace's '72 campaign. The governor was struck by an assassin's bullet, and tragically crippled for life. George Wallace has the distinct advantage of being the only major political figure to survive an attempted assassination. There is a danger that people will see him as a hero and vote for him solely for that reason. Liberals are not naive enough to believe that voter's sympathy for Wallace will not have an effect on the '76 campaign. They are also aware that those who respect George Wallace's courage will probably also vote for him. True enough, he should not lose the bid for the presidency because he is crippled, but neither should he gain it for that reason.

Voters who have chosen George Wallace as their candidate should consider whether or not he really has changed. Wallace's first bid for the presidency started out as an angry rightist reaction to liberalism in the Democratic party. But Wallace and Wallace supporters are aware that no election was ever won by a politician whose view was too extreme for the people. Wallace has even gone so far as to support a few black officials in Alabama, but little impact has been made on the percentage of blacks holding high offices. We can hope that the majority of voters will remain unconvinced by what amounts to little more than an attempt to change Wallace's image.

There is little doubt that George Wallace will try for the presidency again. This time, however, he won't be running on a far rightist third party stand or as an advocator of issues only applicable to the South. Because of the lack of liberal leaders in the Democratic party, voters may turn to conservatism. As we have seen recently, the busing issue has spread to the North, too. Unfortunately, George Wallace may have a decent chance in the '76 election, but those of us who remember his '68 campaign are suspicious of his image-changing tactics. Looking back on the extreme stand the man once took, it seems hard to believe that he has sincerely changed.

The feeling's good

There are individuals, that despite the so called handicaps, they increase their ability to perform and make the best of themselves. Jose Feliciano, a singer-performer is one of them.

Jose Feliciano — said an RCA spokesperson — "although blind since birth, the Puerto Rican-born, New York bred artist long ago melded a combination of incredible, self-taught guitar virtuosity plus a hard-driving personal intensity that rises to incandescence in performance, together with an awesome versatility."

The example of Jose Feliciano to us, is not only because he is one of the best singers of the world, he had successfully overcome a lot of traditional barriers that this society imposed over its citizens: color, race, culture, sex, social origins, etc., etc. . .

Feliciano in his music presents the immense variety and spectrum of today's American music: Puerto Rican, Latino, Anglo, Black, etc. He presents many times the barrio's culture so sophisticated that only intellectual minds can follow his ideas, but especially he sings and performs for the people in the Hemisphere.

One of his characteristics is a hard-driving for quality and productivity, "in addition to mastering the guitar to a degree equalled by few, Feliciano (meaning, Feliciouts, "the Happy One") has also become adept at a few other instruments: bass, banjo, organ, [illegible], 12 string guitar, mandolin, harmonica, piano, harpsichord and accordion. And of course, his dynamic, distinctive singing style does not go unnoticed," RCA's quoted.

He had amazed the European public, especially in the San Remo Festival in Italy. His records are highly accepted also by the Japanese and Australian markets. Besides his many Golden albums, he has been awarded as one of the best singers in the New World Hemisphere.

Jose Feliciano — by Joanne Knott

Peter Reilly talking about Feliciano in Stereo Review, once said that "Feliciano is that really rare phenomenon, the complete entertainer. He plays the guitar extraordinarily well, he sings with enormous style, and he is a born communicator." And The Washington Post made the following comment: "He has a rich, bluesy showmanship that not only leans into the heart of a song but most assuredly will tear into you".

How Feliciano had been able to achieve such a performance, according to some of the people at RCA, the company Feliciano has been associated with since the beginning of his singing/recording career is that he always is driving himself a little harder, and because as Morgan Ames once said [illegible] there are few singers [illegible] in the world that [illegible] sounds, keep [illegible] and more, Feliciano [illegible] those.

I think as a student, that is the time to see one of the greatest [illegible] Hemisphere, performing [illegible]. After all, the University of [illegible] should present the best of [illegible]. I wonder why the University [illegible] Arts Council has not decided to bring Jose Feliciano to this campus. Because, obviously, if the people in this university who are responsible to take that decision, should give it to us, the students the opportunity-privilege of seeing Jose Feliciano would say as he put in his last record, "And the Feeling's Good".

"It is too soon to speculate in what ways being a woman will make Mrs. Thatcher more or less effective as British Prime Minister. She will get power for her party or dissipate it. If she gets it she will be blamed for the economy, for civil contention, for the nakedness of the human condition. She will have all the burdens that the male leaders have and virtually all the perquisites. Except that — unlike Churchill, for example, she cannot cry in public."

The UMass Sailing Club, a member of the New England Intercollegiate Sailing Association, will hold its first meeting of the semester tonight at 7 p.m. in C.C. Room 165. If enough interest can be generated, the club will rent a few boats in Florida during spring vacation; therefore, potential members are strongly urged to attend. Contact Philip Soderfield at 6-9640 for more information.

Picha resigns as Engineering dean

Kenneth G. Picha has resigned as dean of the UMass School of Engineering in Amherst.

The resignation is effective between July 15 and Aug. 1, 1975 to provide ample time for an orderly transition of administrative responsibilities, the dean said.

Picha, in his letter of resignation to Associate Provost David C. Bischoff, said he clearly stated in accepting the dean's post in 1966 that he would serve no longer than 10 years.

"It is my judgment that ten years is a reasonable time to hold an administrative post," he wrote.

The dean plans to apply for sabbatical leave in 1976-77 and to return to the University as a faculty member in the Mechanical and Aerospace Engineering Department.

One-year programs offered in Israel

Tel Aviv University (student body: 18,000) offers a variety of study programs for American students at various levels of their college studies.

The Overseas Student Program offers qualified students the opportunity to study at the University and to earn fully transferable credits toward their degree.

The programs offered are diversified and flexible. The one-year programs are geared for Freshmen, Sophomores, and Juniors. The language of instruction is English. A full Bachelor's, Master's and Ph.D. curriculum is also offered to academically qualified students who are fluent in Hebrew. These students study in the regular University program. The Hebrew-language summer Ulpan, open to all college students, is an intensive course for students not proficient in Hebrew.

In combining a classroom and a living experience, the Tel Aviv University Overseas Student Program offers a meaningful challenge. Opportunities to gain insight into the unique life of Israel and the Israeli society are given through field trips, independent study projects, participation in special seminars and student social activities.

For information, contact the Office of Academic Affairs, American Friends of Tel Aviv University, 342 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10017, telephone: (212)687-5651.

Outdoor Program offers educational experiences

The anxieties of student life and the pollution of the city need not constantly torment those who seek exercise, quiet and independence in the outdoors. The outdoors is open to everyone and the Outdoor Interest Group is attempting to offer opportunities for a wide variety of physical, emotional and mental learning experiences in the out-of-doors.

The University of Oregon in Eugene has one of the finest "Outdoor Programs" in the country. Here at UMass, the Outdoor Interest Group is closely following many of the guidelines established for the U of O program. The program operates within the student union concept where student input and organization are apparently very important factors.

Men swimmers as expected sunk by tough UConn squad

By BILL EDELSTEIN

"What are your chances against Connecticut, coach?"

"We should get slaughtered."

Thus did men's swim coach, Bey Melamed, imply that his team might be defeated by the powerful Huskies. UConn did defeat the Minutemen, but the 66-47 final was semi-respectable.

The meet, held in Huskie-land, began with the hosts taking the 400 yard medley relay (a most inhospitable thing to do).

In the 1000 yard freestyle, Ben Crooker, (How do you like that; his name didn't get mentioned until the third full paragraph!) tightened the count by not being a fingernail biter. At least it seemed that way as Crooker, with an excellent time of 10:44.5, beat the closest Huskie by a digit.

Connecticut then won the next four events (200 yard free, 50 yard free, 200 yard individual medley and one meter diving). In the 50 yard free, Ron Boucher turned in his best time ever (23.3) and Duncan Lomas was beaten by a finger for first in the 200 individual medley.

Joe Hebert ended the UMass "drought" with a victorious 200 yard butterfly (2:18.0) and Ron Boucher added to the comeback by taking the 100 freestyle with his best time every (51.1).

UConn, however, came right back with two more firsts: the 200 yard backstroke and the 500 yard freestyle.

The Minutemen came on strong at the end, winning the last three events and adding that tinge of respectability to the final score. Dave Boucher's 2:25.2 time brought him top honors for the 200 yard breaststroke and Earl McAllister plunged his way to first in the three meter diving competition. "Earl's diving was the best he's done for us," enthused coach Melamed. "He really hit some pretty ones."

UMass then took the 400 freestyle relay.

GOING OFF THE DEEP END — Ben Crooker proved he was human by being edged out in the 500 freestyle by the same digit he won by in the 1000 free. "Benjie was tired," the coach offered, but this reporter thinks Ben was biting his fingernails during the meet...Coach Melamed deemed the meet "unexciting" as neither UMass nor UConn swam their strongest teams...The Minutemen, figuring to beat Tufts (this Tuesday in Jumbo Country), fall to Vermont and take New Hampshire, are preparing for the New Englands right now...The UVM and UNH meets will be held as one dual encounter at Boyden, March 1.

NU offers no challenge as swimwomen triumph, 82-48

By LAURIE WHITING

There were lots of new faces in the winner's circle last Thursday night as the UMass Women's swim team glided past Northeastern University, 82-48. Having anticipated the easy win, Coach Pat Griffin shuffled the usual line-up to include most of the swimmers in their preferred event.

The first event started UMass rolling with a win in the 200 medley relay. Penny Noyes, Diane Perry, Melon Dash, and Reenie Groden took the first with a 2:00.4, taunted only by the National qualifying time of 2:00.0.

Cindy Whiting breezed to a first [illegible]

The shorter sprints followed, producing three first place winners in Reenie Groden-50 free (26.8), Melon Dash-50 fly (29.0) and Diane Perry-50 breast (36.3). Second placers were: Jane Loudermilch-50 back and Laurie Whiting-100 I.M.

Carol Canterbury and Linda Schuld placed second and third, respectively, in the one meter diving event.

Penny Noyes proved her swimming versatility as she sat out her usual backstroke events and won the 100 free with a 55.3 (in spite of missing a turn!). Melon Dash accumulated second place points for UMass in the same event.

The Northeast flyer sped to a first place in the 100 butterfly, but Karen Johnson touched in second in the event as Doreen Walsh followed-up with third.

The three meter diving event almost seemed to be an exhibition, as only two divers participated. UMass' single entrant Janine Wong bowed to a skillful Northeastern competitor.

The 200 free relay team (L. Whiting, Walsh, Baldueci, and Welzel) closed the meet with an easy victory.

Though Northeastern wasn't an especially strong team, [illegible] got a chance to score."

By JOHN BOCK

When the 1974-75 wrestling season ends, whatever may be said of the UMass matmen, at least nobody can say that they didn't wrestle enough matches. With Saturday's 22-16 loss to Harvard the Minutemen brought their record to 14-14. They have wrestled 28 times this season; ten matches more than either Springfield or Rhode Island — more matches than anyone in New England. While 14-14 may not seem to be very distinguished a record, fans might recall that they have only seen the Minutemen home four times this season.

Unfortunately, the home mat advantage failed to produce any of the 14 wins and proved to be more of a jinx. So much so that UMass had the match all sewed up in the 190 pound bout against Harvard, and with 11 seconds on the clock Minuteman Greg Scanlon was pinned in a move that he initiated. [illegible]

Gymnasts embarrass Cornell

By BILL DOYLE

"It was such a weird meet that I find it difficult to say anything about it."

Those were the words of the UMass men's gymnastics coach Tom Dunn after Saturday night's meet in the Boyden auxiliary gym. Oh, sure the Minutemen embarrassed the Big Red of Cornell as expected, 199.57-151.11, but a lot of weird things happened.

First of all, there were only three judges instead of the usual four, which caused "lower scores" in Coach Dunn's opinion, and conferences after just about every routine. Also, Cornell only had seven gymnasts, as its second and third best all-around men, Richard Ward and Peter Fay, and its best specialist, Dave Apple, missed the meet. [illegible]

Greece foils coup attempt by army officers

Plotters loyal to former rulers

ATHENS (UPI) – The seven-month-old Greek democratic government said it foiled a coup attempt yesterday by army officers still loyal to the deposed military dictators who ruled Greece for seven years.

A source close to the Greek armed forces said the conspiracy became known in the early afternoon, when armed forces commander Dionyssios Arbouzis burst into Defense Minister Evangelos Averoff's office with the news.

Averoff ordered the alert of armed forces headquarters in Holargos, north of Athens, and rushed to confer with Premier Constantine Caramanlis, the source said.

The source said the officers, mostly captains and the lieutenants, planned to stage the coup simultaneously in three places: the Goudi armor school in Athens, the paratroop training center in Aspropyrgos and Second Army Corps headquarters in Kozani.

The source did not say what happened to the plotters.

A government spokesman said, "The situation is under full control of the government through the entire nation."

He said Caramanlis ordered a partial armed forces alert following "conspiratorial movements by unrepenting officers related to those members of the dictatorial regime awaiting trial."

Coordination Minister Panayotis Papaligouras, speaking for the government, told parliament last night, "There is no cause for anxiety and no need for a debate" on the attempt, as demanded by opposition leader George Mavros and radical leader Andreas Papandreou.

Armed forces sources said the officers who planned the coup were loyal to Brig. Dimitrios Ioannides, former strongman and military police commander, and wanted to have him and two of his top lieutenants released.

The three are among 11 members of the former junta now jailed and awaiting trial on charges of overthrowing democracy with the April 21, 1967, military takeover of Greece known as the "colonels' coup" and with torturing political prisoners.

Ioannides overthrew former dictator George Papadopoulos in November 1973, but his strongman regime collapsed last July when Turkey invaded Cyprus after a Greek-inspired coup temporarily ousted President Makarios.

Caramanlis returned from self-exile in Paris to head the new democratic government.

Twenty Indians seize N.M. electronics plant

SHIPROCK, N.M. (UPI) – Twenty "heavily armed" Indians protesting poor health care and the layoff of Indian workers seized an electronics plant on the Navajo reservation yesterday and said they would stay there until their demands have been met.

Led by American Indian Movement leader Larry Anderson, 28, of Fort Defiance, Ariz., the group occupied the Fairchild Semiconductor Corp. building before dawn. They took two security guards into "custody" but later released them before beginning discussions with Fred Johnson of the Navajo Tribal Council.

Anderson refused to describe the type of weapons the Indians carried and police did not know.

Navajo tribal police cordoned off the plant and turned back about 300 employees on the day shift. Chief Roland Dart said officers would not try to force the occupiers out of the plant.

"We expect to stay until our demands are met," Anderson said. "We have food and water to last a month and are heavily armed."

Anderson said Fairchild must agree to rehire the 140 Navajos laid off last week. He said his group was still deciding the final form of their other demands to be negotiated.

The plant had employed 1,300 Navajos, Anderson said, but had laid off about half its employees since Jan. 1.

US lifts India, Pakistan arms embargo; India files protest

WASHINGTON (UPI) – The United States yesterday announced an end to its 10-year embargo on arms to Pakistan and India who have fought three wars in the last two decades on the subcontinent.

Indian Ambassador Triloki Nath Kaul, whose country has been getting arms from its own industry, the Soviet Union and elsewhere, lodged a "strong protest." After noting the action "with deep regret" at a news conference, he said it "further reduces the credibility of U.S. assurances which have proved inoperative in the past."

Pakistani Ambassador Sahabzada Yaqub-Khan, at another news conference a half hour later, "welcomed the decision which alters a policy introduced 10 years ago." He said he did not believe Pakistani orders for American arms "would run into the hundreds of millions, but more likely in the tens of millions."

State Department spokesman Robert Anderson said the United States in the future will consider requests by both countries for arms exports for cash on a case-by-case basis.

While Pakistan has been anxious to resume purchases of U.S. arms, India supplied by the Soviet Union and its own production has shown no interest in obtaining weapons from this country, the State Department said.

The United States embargoed arms exports to both India and Pakistan in 1965 when the two countries were at war.

On his recent visit to Washington, Pakistani President Ali Bhutto urged President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to lift the embargo, specifically noting Pakistan needed such defensive armaments as anti-aircraft and anti-tank guns, according to Roy Atherton, Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern and East Asian affairs.

Anderson said the United States would consider each military order on the basis of "...the high importance we attach to continued progress toward India-Pakistan normalization, the effect of any particular sale on the outlook for regional peace and stability, the relationship between U.S. sales and those of other external arms suppliers, and of course the relationship of the request to legitimate defense requirements and the level of armaments in the region."

Oscar nominees announced

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) – "The Godfather Part II" and "Chinatown" grabbed 11 nominations each in various categories yesterday in preliminary Oscar nominations for 1974 announced by the Academy of Motion Pictures.

Both films were nominated for best movie of the year along with "The Conversation," "Lenny" and "The Towering Inferno."

"Godfather" got five nominations for acting awards.

Selected for best performance by an actress were Ellen Burstyn in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore," Diahann Carroll, "Claudine," Faye Dunaway, "Chinatown," Valerie Perrine, "Lenny," and Gena Rowlands "A Woman Under The Influence."

Rail plan would close 20 state lines

Thousands of jobs would be eliminated

BOSTON (AP) - Twenty Penn Central railroad freight lines throughout Massachusetts would be abandoned, costing thousands of jobs, under preliminary plans for rail abandonment by the United states Railway Association, state officials said yesterday.

Peter Metz, assistant state transportation secretary, said the USRA's preliminary recommendations are scheduled to be announced in Washington, D.C., tomorrow and will be vigorously opposed by Massachusetts.

Metz told reporters at a news briefing that the state will try to overturn some of the recommendations before the USRA makes its final report to Congress in July. Congress must approve the final rail abandonment plan.

Metz said that a total of 256 miles of track, or about one-third of the Penn Central's Massachusetts operation, would be abandoned.

At the same time, he said the state will seek approval of legislation which would provide $2.5 million in state subsidies to keep the proposed abandoned branch rail lines in service.

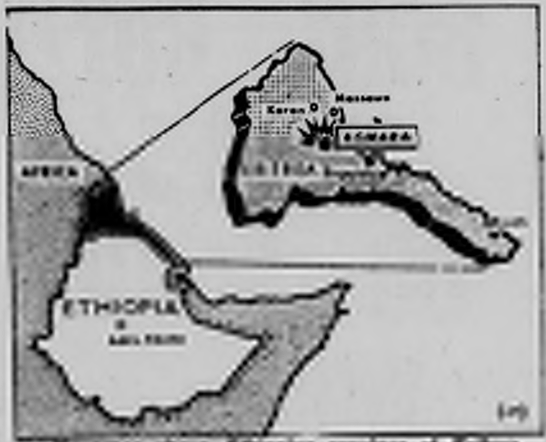
Metz said some 25,000 persons are employed by firms that use the rail lines proposed for abandonment. If all the lines were dropped, he said thousands would lose their jobs.

The 20 branch lines are scattered throughout the state, with heavy concentration on Cape Cod and central Massachusetts. All but two provide freight service exclusively, and only one – a branch that runs from Forest Hills to Needham Junction – provides weekly passenger service.

The USRA has been working on a reorganization of rail service in the northeast and has surveyed a total of 38 branch lines in Massachusetts.

Metz said of the 38 lines, seven have already been abandoned. He said the USRA will recommend that 11 of the remaining 31 be included in a future Consolidated Rail System (CONRAIL), a system that is required by law to make a profit.

Metz was critical of the USRA recommendations, saying they relied only on the profitably of the branch lines, rather than the economic and social impact of proposed abandonment of the lines.



Newsmap shows Ethiopian province of Eritrea, where rebels are fighting for independence. The government has said that it will not let the province on the Red Sea go. Washington yesterday announced that it was considering an emergency airlift to the Ethiopian government.

Nitric acid blamed in Logan plane crash

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The National Transportation Safety Board yesterday blamed the crash of a Pan American World Airways jet freighter on improperly packed and loaded nitric acid.

It was the first time the federal safety board had pinned the responsibility for a major air disaster on hazardous material handling.

The board's 117-page report on the loss of the Boeing 707 at Boston Nov. 3, 1973, sharply criticized the Federal Aviation Administration's failure to make sure dangerous cargo was handled safely.

All three crewmembers of the freighter were killed. There were no passengers.

The board said the FAA "did not exercise adequate surveillance of shippers and carriers to effectively detect and cause the removal of improperly prepared or otherwise illegal shipments from commerce."

The board said nitric acid being shipped to Scotland aboard the Pan Am jet apparently leaked out of containers incorrectly stowed on their sides and, soaking into "improper sawdust packing," started a fire by spontaneous combustion.

Dense smoke filled the cockpit, the board said. It said the Pan Am crew, apparently blinded by the smoke, lost control of the plane which crashed while trying to make an emergency landing at Boston's Logan airport.

Eastern states argue for offshore rights

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Twelve Atlantic Coast states told the Supreme Court yesterday their claim to ownership of offshore oil, potentially worth billions of dollars, would not hinder the nation's effort to achieve energy independence.

Opening two days of arguments before the Court, the states and the federal government presented their contentions in the long-standing dispute over mineral resources in the seabed.

The coastal states have laid claim to millions of acres of undersea land extending to the brink of the continental shelf at least 100 miles offshore.

The United States says it owns the land past the three-mile limit.

Solicitor General Robert H. Bork asked the seven sitting justices for a quick decision "so that the long process of developing the continental shelf for our energy needs can begin."

"The urgent efforts of the President to improve the energy program require immediate judgment here," Bork said.

Both the federal government and the individual states want to begin leasing the undersea land for oil exploration as soon as ownership is decided.

Turkey warns US

ANKARA (UPI) - Turkish Foreign Minister Melih Esenbel said yesterday that Turkey will shut down American bases if the U.S. military Turkey's ability to defend itself against Soviet retaliation.

Asked in an interview if the bases, used primarily to monitor military movements in the Soviet Union, would be closed because of the U.S. congressional arms-aid ban, Esenbel said:

"If we are not able to sustain our military effort, yes, because these joint defense installations mean Turkey has to assume additional risk."

Gurney trial opens

TAMPA, Fla (UPI) - The bribery-conspiracy trial of former Sen. Edward J. Gurney, the first U.S. senator in a half century to be criminally indicted while in office, began yesterday with the opening of jury selection.

"I feel fine and I'm in good health," said Gurney, responding to questions about a recent operation for an undisclosed ailment that delayed the start of the trial.

The former Republican member of the Senate Watergate Committee, only the sixth U.S. senator in history to be indicted in office, arrived 20 minutes early for the beginning of the U.S. District Court trial, which could last as long as three months.

Rail aid rushed

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Emergency funds were rushed to the Penn Central Railroad yesterday and a move was started to crack a Senate filibuster against [illegible] million in grants and loans to keep the bankrupt line operating.

The Transportation Department made available about [illegible] million and promised another [illegible] million so that the Penn Central could meet its payroll today.

Ford pushes tax cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) - An income tax cut is President Ford's No. 1 priority and the chief executive considers it tragic that a tax bill has not yet cleared Congress, the White House said yesterday.

S.C.L.C. endorses boycott

Cesar Chavez' nationwide consumer boycott against Gallo wines won endorsement from the Southern Christian Leadership Conference Wednesday during a visit to the United Farm Workers headquarters by SCLC President Dr. Ralph Abernathy.

Dr. Aberthany, in a meeting with UFW President Chavez here, said the 300 chapters of the SCLC will cooperate with the farm workers' boycott to help the UFW win its strike against Gallo.

"My pledge to you," said Dr. Abernathy, "is to call on Black people and all others interested in putting justice into American business to link up with you in the boycott. We will drink no more Gallo wine."

Dr. Abernathy said the SCLC is asking the great number of Blacks who purchase wines like Gallo to cooperate with the UFW in the interest of a "tighter boycott." He said, "We are going to help you win this strike against Gallo. The SCLC is calling on its people throughout the nation to refrain from purchasing Gallo wines until the boycott is victorious."

The SCLC leader added, "We want to help you in your struggle, and we want you to help us in ours. This will benefit the farm workers, and us, and the entire nation."

Chavez responded, "The Chicano and Black communities have come to see that the job is too big to do separately. From now on we will take more and more united actions to win concrete gains by combining our strengths in one cause. There is a great love in our movement for Dr. Abernathy and the memory of Dr. Martin Luther King. The SCLC founded the first non-violent mass movement in this country and showed us the way."

The United Farm Workers union mounted its boycott against Gallo wines after the E&J Gallo Winery of Modesto, California refused to renegotiate its UFW contracts in 1973.

Voices of New Africa in concert tonight

The Voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir, a unique vocal group from the Five Colleges in the Pioneer Valley will appear in concert on Tuesday, February 25, 1975 at Bowker Auditorium on the campus of the University of Massachusetts at 8:15 p.m.

The vocal ensemble, composed of fifty (50) students is made up of students from the University of Massachusetts, Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Hampshire Colleges. Featuring a repertoire of all types of Afro-American vocal music, the choir specializes in gospel and soul songs. The concert will open with a group of well-known Negro Spirituals, not performed in the traditional manner, but in the jazz arrangements of drummer, Max Roach, a Professor in the Music Department of the University of Massachusetts, who organized this group in 1972.

Among these selections is an unusual arrangement of "Go Down, Moses", retitled "Let The People Go", arranged in a fast tempo with instrumental interludes featuring a trumpet solo.

The second part of the concert deals with the songs of the Afro-American heritage, and includes work songs, shouts, hollers, cries, and an example of urban blues in "Stormy Monday." The section comes to a close with a contemporary song, "Keep On Movin" by Semenya McCord, a member of the choir, which sums up the difficult struggle for survival and acceptance in the world of today.

The first half on the concert comes to a close with a group of gospel songs, the speciality of the choir. Among the selections included are Beverly Glenn's "I Want To Be Free", and the famous, "How I Got Over," by Clara Ward.

The fifth section of the evening is dedicated to vocal jazz, and opens with a swinging arrangement by Clifford Jordan of Malotte's "The Lord's Prayer." Count Basie's arrangement of the blues, "Everyday I Have The Blues" will serve as the vehicle for the demonstration of the technique of scat singing, and the beautiful, "Everything Must Change," from Quincy Jones' album entitled "Body Heat," brings this section to a close.

The last portion of the concert is given over to popular and soul music and features small groups of singers backed by the full choir. Two selections, especially written for the Voices of New Africa House Choir by the saxophonist and composer, Archie Shepp, will be featured.

The Black News Service is a student training and placement organization. Its function includes the training and placement of News reporters, photographers, graphic-arts, and lay-out personnel.

Up to date, B.N.S. has been operating with a limited staff. As a result we have not been able to service the needs of the entire Third World Community. It is, therefore imperative that all Third World students (studying and-or interested in communication) join the staff and participate in informing the people.

Our goals are realistic because they reflect the conceptions of those who are daily involved with media operations.

The staff and editors of B.N.S. welcome all energetic and seriousminded students to come in and join our action team. We accept faculty assistant too!

The Black News Service is located at the Daily Collegian Newspaper, 3rd floor Student Union Building, and in Room 114, New Africa House. All phones are 545-3500.

We need graphic artists, photographers, reporters, layout personnel, fine arts critics and writers. Put your Knowledge to work!

Study in Paris...no extra cost

If you are interested in spending a year in Paris as a UMass student, come to the special meeting to be held today at 1:30 p.m. in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall. Two faculty members from the Boston campus, John MacCombie and Jerry Volpe are scheduled to speak on the nature, structure and requirements of this UMass-sponsored program which will be entering its sixth consecutive year of operation.

For approximately the same cost as spending a year on the Amherst campus, a qualified student is able to cover all expenses involved in the program i.e. round trip travel to Paris and back, excursions, books, room and board and enrollment at various French faculties. Generally speaking, the average student takes half the program of courses with the two resident UMass faculty members and the rest at various schools in Paris which offer courses to foreign students. For admission to the program one need not be a French major. Along with a good academic standing, what is mainly required is a basic, rudimentary grasp of some conversational French in order to be able to take courses in that language. So if you are interested or merely curious, come to the meeting this Tuesday or contact Professor Frederick Busi in 328 Herter Hall.

Women's League presents workshop on litigation

Joanne Hayes, Vice-President League of Women Voters-United States, will present a litigation workshop today, from 10:00 a.m.-1:30 p.m. at the Jones Library. Sponsored by the Amherst and Massachusetts LWV, the workshop will be a discussion of public interest law and its place in League activities.

Topics to be covered: why litigate? how to get a lawyer? how to work with a lawyer? what costs are involved? and what litigation does for the League image.

Hayes was elected to the League's National Board in 1972, and has served as national litigation chairperson. She is married and has five children.

There will be a panel discussion at noon for those who can only come at the lunch hour. Participating will be Sally Greene, attorney, who has worked for OEO Legal Services Program in Chicago and Washington, D.C.

Registration for the workshop is $.50 which includes coffee and sweet roll. Lynn Stuart is in charge. Information 549-4422.

Commentary - on energy

Commentary on energy will be a regular weekly column in the Collegian throughout the semester. It will explore the problem of energy on a state, national, and international level, from environmental, economic and political viewpoints.

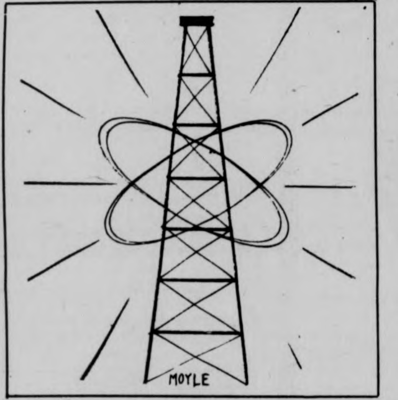
By GREGG WILSON

The U.S. is in the heart of what promises to be an extended energy crisis. Suddenly a nation long accustomed to exploiting the world's energy resources is faced with the prospects of real shortages in the future.

Yet today, more than a year after the Arab oil boycott jolted our self confidence, the realities of the problem have still not penetrated our consciousness. Example: A simple law mandating a 55 mph speed limit on our highways is constantly abused by Detroit's gas guzzlers. Cars, which are for some unknown reason engineered to reach speeds in excess of 100 mph.

Closer to home conservation measures vainly publicized by the University administration have fallen by the way side. Whitmore's "save a watt" campaign is a relic of the past. The library even in non-peak hours is constantly ablaze with lights.

In hope of a more organized response, the public has turned to the nation's capital for a comprehensive energy development and conservation plan. In answering these pleas, President Ford instituted an oil tarriff program destined to increase inflation while providing additional profits for the oil companies. It is clear the American citizenry will not face the realities of the crisis until its elected officials provide an adequate and logical response to the situation.



Energy, be it solar, geothermal, coal, oil, or nuclear power will be the profits for the oil companies. It is clear the American citizenry will not face the realities of the crisis until its elected officials provide an adequate and logical response to the situation.

Energy, be it solar, geothermal, coal, oil, or nuclear power will be the subject of much political debate in the months ahead. The amusing stories of Richard Nixon and his followers are behind us. Energy along with the state of the economy are sure to dominate headlines in 1975. So if you're sick of hearing about it now you better head for the Ozone for there is bound to be plenty more in the months ahead.

In the ivory setting of University life, policies do appear distant and inconsequential to most. They will however shape our lifestyles for years to come. Did you realize that the U.S. that the defense budget for 1976 will approach 100 billion dollars and that energy research and development will receive only 3.9 billion? Clearly our policies need restructuring.

We must yell, kick, and scream out in protest to make certain that our nation's leaders provide a program that will benefit the consumer and not the owners of Standard Oil and Exxon.

The purpose of this weekly energy column is to keep the UMass community aware of these developments and explore different and often radical proposals. It will criticize, at times even compliment our politicians' responses. Give it your attention, or provide us with any alternative ideas you might have.

Notable Quote

Every American eventually should be required to carry a government identity card—complete with fingerprints—to cut down on fraud and related crimes, says Frances G. Knight, director of the State Dept's, Passport office.

"It is my considered opinion that the US government owes every American citizen a true, recorded national identity to protect him from criminal impersonations," she said.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

Bored of living like chessmen

To the Editor:

I wonder how drastically the present administration's order of priorities would be changed if the President and his economic advisors were to find themselves in a situation similar to many of those constituents whose lives they maneuver daily like so many chess men.

Let us imagine Mr. Ford "laid off" from the presidency, and reduced to paying for the things he has, as we do. Hypothetically, he receives $100 a week in unemployment compensation, and $180 monthly in food stamps. Out of this, he must pay rent or a mortgage payment, electricity, and fuel oil. If he has a car, he must furnish it with gasoline at least — assuming the car is paid for, which by today's American standard is fairly unrealistic. He must satisfy the phone company, and perhaps even an insurance payment now and then. All this assuming he has no outstanding bills, such as loans, medical expenses and the like.

After two or three months of living like this, how anxious would he be to suggest raising food stamp prices, oil tariffs, and cutting back on economic assistance programs?

How many of us who have two rooms in overcrowded and badly kept apartment complexes would not gladly trade our nightly Hamburger Helper for whatever sumptuous victuals are served at the frequent White House state dinners? How many would hesitate to exchange a bank owned, ailing Volkswagon for a chauffered limousine? Who pays for that gasoline?

The expression "The rich get richer and the poor get poorer" was never as applicable as it is today.

An alternative to the Universal Fee

To the Editor:

Most students here at UMass have had to reside in a dorm. I do not need to repeat the complaints of cramped living, poor food and high fees. Being a senior I recently escaped the dorm scene and now reside comfortably in Northampton. The recent debate over the Universal Fee does concern me even though I will be long gone when a final decision is made. I feel bad for any student that is forced to live in a dorm because the administration or personal finances dictate it. Thus I have followed this issue and offer some ideas.

The administration [Whitmore] is faced with a 2.1-2.5 million dollar deficit. It is not clear to myself nor many other students where this deficit came from. But the fact remains there is a large deficit.

It is clear that Gov. Dukakis will not let the State absorb this deficit in this time of fiscal austerity. Thus the administration is forced to hit the students. The plan that has the most appeal is "The Universal Resource Fee."

This fee would be charged to all freshmen and transfer students. The fee would be $275 for all students. But there would be a roll back of $150 for dorm residents. Thus, most students would pay $125. Once again the student is castrated.

All the complaining in the world will not make the administration deficit go away. It is up to us, the students, to come up with an alternative.

Chancellor Bromery has given the ball to the SGA. He will listen to viable alternatives from the SGA. Rick Savini is organizing a task force to come up with an alternative. This committee needs our support.

I feel that the only alternative is to cut out unnecessary expenses. For example, take dorm counsellors.

They are granted a tuition waiver of $300 per year. They are also paid a weekly amount of at least $10. [These figures are conservative.] Thus total compensation for one [1] floor counsellor for two [2] semesters is approximately $600.

If you multiply that by 20 you come out with $12,000 which is the cost of counsellors in a high rise dorm for two [2] semesters. Multiply that by 5 and we spend $60,000 on counsellors for the five [5] high rise dorms per school year.

Thus you now have some idea of the cost of counseling for the entire campus. Then you must realize that this is a duplication of effort when you consider we have C.A.S.I.A.C., Room to Move, Mental Health, Women's Center, etc.

This is just one large area where cuts could be made. Why do we need so many assistant area directors? What about the Heads of Residences, etc?

Finally, I ask you to help the SGA task force by voicing support for budget cuts in areas where we are wasting money. Let's not leave any stone unturned, nor make any position sacred. Question every paid position that exists. And finally cut those positions and programs that do not serve necessary purposes. We may have to go without a few of the extras but I know I could do without a $275 fee! What about you?

Errors noted in budget article

To the Editor:

The article in last Tuesday's Collegian on budget cuts in relation to the Universal Fee is in error in certain important areas. The writer describes me as suggesting cutting salaries for classified employees. I would never advocate such an idea, especially as classifieds generally get the worst break of any employees of the University. The writer also has me suggesting cuts in the Campus Center reserve accounts. As far as I know, there are no Campus Center reserve accounts of any sizable amount, and my intention was to cut overall University reserve accounts, not Campus Center reserve accounts. The writer also omitted mention of my proposed cuts in the trust fund budgeting of the Computer Center.

The issue of budget cuts in general and in reference to the Universal Fee in particular is quite an important one and I just would like to have known my views on the matter as I had presented them at the time of the writing of the article.

World quakes at Sirica sentence

The verdict has been in for some time. And now the sentences have been handed down for the Watergate big-wigs who masterminded the whole coverup operation. H. R. (Bob) Haldeman got the most brutal sentence as Judge John Sirica sentenced him to 20 months hard labor at McDonald's with the harsh admonition "I'm sending you where all you clowns belong." Former Attorney General and Head of CREEP John Mitchell received a sentence worse than death from the unmerciful John Sirica. Mitchell's worst fears were realized when Sirica sentenced him to spend the rest of his days with Martha Mitchell on a tiny island in the Aleutian chain. Mitchell, upon hearing the disposition of the court, broke down miserably as he sobbed and twitched uncontrollably on the courtroom floor. "Not that your honor. Not that! I'd rather have the Chair. Give Me The CHAIR!!!" But instead of a chair, Mitchell was given a strait jacket and was led away. Former CREEP aide Robert Mardian was then sentenced to 10 months as Jeb Stuart Magruder's tennis partner at Allenwood Prison.

The most significant sentence meted out by Sirica was to former Chief Domestic Advisor John Erlichman. Taking the counsel of Ehrlichman's chief lawyer, Ira N. Lowe who advised the Judge that "it wouldn't cost the taxpayers a peso" if John Ehrlichman were sentenced to public service work among the Pueblo Indians," Sirica turned dramatically and sentenced the Pueblo Indians to seven years of John Ehrlichman. "That he may walk about you and sow his seeds among your fields, women and even animals."

No sooner had this been said than the shock tremors were felt in the Capitol and in New Mexico. As John Ehrlichman ran about hysterically doing cartwheels on the benches and baying with a savage frenzy, Washington shook in disbelief. Long a town used to injustice, even the most hardened residents broke down in a pitiful weeping at the gross inequity of the sentence. For what had the Pueblo Indians done to deserve John Ehrlichman? For centuries they had been living peacefully tending their crops and their livestock, existing from one season to the next. Now they would have to bear their biggest burden since the white man subjugated them and herded them into reservations. By shackling them with the likes of an Ehrlichman, Sirica was sentencing them to seven lean years of famine.

In distant New Mexico, Pueblo women ripped out their hair and burned their clothes, while the men gathered in cellars and backrooms plotting to attack the viscious white man who was saddling them with yet another indignity. War paint was lavishly donned at the Pueblo at the Pueblo men prepared to defend what was rightfully theirs. "We could stand Custer, we could even tolerate the Lone Ranger and Tonto, but we sure as hell won't sit still for Ehrlichman!!" roared a Pueblo Indian who was sharpening his arrows with his official Boy Scout whetstone.

After the initial waves of disbelief had subsided, Washington buzzed with questions. Why the Pueblos and for what diabolical purpose? And then it came out. In a statement released by the War Department, it was learned that this was part of a new attack system, dubbed appropriately enough Demoralization Warfare. It consists of unleashing the basest, crassest and most dispicable forms produced in our society among the enemy, to mate and reproduce with them and thereby forever weaken them. Thus this would enable American to remain strong and dominant. But before Demoralization Warfare would be put into practice among the Chiles and Cubas of the world, it had to be tested out. And since all U.S. weapons systems are tested first in New Mexico, it stands to reason that the Pueblo Indians would become the target population. "We may be witness to the worst outrage against our first citizens since Wounded Knee!" cried out Marlon Brando, who is thinking of buying Kansas and handing it over to the Indians.

God Save The Queen!

The property of education

By VICTOR M. GOMEZ

Could a graduate program at the School of Education fulfill its academic, intellectual and professional responsibilities to its students and the University, and maintain its integrity, and its freedom of inquiry and scope, while at the same time being a service organization for this country's foreign policy institutions? If so, what is the justification for allowing a supposedly academic institution to become a tool, a service agency for this country's foreign policy institutions? Is it that at the School of Education people already gave up on the conception of higher education as being an independent, free, responsible endeavor whose ultimate objective is the search for truth? Or is it that they are so naive, or ignorant, that they equate the achieving of the U.S. foreign policy objectives with a responsible, independent, competent academic pursuit?

> . . . bring back the School . . . to a level of responsible scholarship, independent research, and intellectual integrity.

None of these questions have been asked by the auditors who have discovered a massive mismanagement of funds, and administrative corruption in the School of Education; nor have they been asked by the people who have rightly accused this School, of low-quality education.

So, it is high time to put things in their proper perspective. The "businessman of education" mentality, the "poverty pimps" practices that have sadly characterized the School of Education under Dwight Allen, have found similar expression in those "foreign aid pimps" who derive great personal benefits from the poverty of the underdeveloped countries. Such are the reasons for the existence of the Center for International Education at the School of Education. It is not surprising then that many concerned faculty and students view that Center as an accurate reflection of the prevailing mentality and practices of the School of Education in general.

About 85 per cent (!) of all the resources that this Center needs to function come from one single source, and a very political one; the State Department through the Agency for International Development (AID). Left to the resources that the Legislature allocates for Teacher Training in International Education, this Center would be a very small one indeed. This Center has grown because it has plugged itself into the money market of grants, contracts, consultant ships..etc., created by the foreign policy institutions of this country. Thus, it is the State Department who almost totally determines and shapes what goes on in this institution.

The objective of the AID grant is Non Formal Education for Rural Development in Asia, Africa or Latin America. The following ideological, political and cultural biases shape the scope of the study or project: 1-In defining what "Rural Poverty" is, what are its causes...etc., the prevailing view must be that which is put forth by the U.S. or other Western capitalist nations. For example, the World Bank-financed book, "Attacking Rural Poverty," by P. Coombs, a former State Deparment officer, is being used at the Center as a textbook for a course, regardless of the fact that the book has been analyzed by U.S. and Latin American scholars as being ethnocentric, culturally-biased, and basically incorrect in its assumptions.

An alternative view of rural underdevelopment which might be contrary to the U.S. foreign policy ideology, and political and military needs, can only be paid, at best, lip service. Since the choice of books, publications, faculty, visitors,...etc., necessarily reflects the views of the controlling organization (AID), then any pretenses of providing a responsible education for the students are invalid.

Thus, we have a blatant example of an academic institution actively engaged in a relationship of dependence and complicity with the State Department.

2—All the different areas of analysis that supposedly form the inputs for the education of the students are similarly biased toward a conception of underdevelopment that is shaped by the economic and political needs of the U.S. Whether the topic is 'education for development', or 'educational efficiency', the analysis of this topic will necessarily be a function of the prevailing ideology of the controlling organization: AID.

3—The choice of development strategies must also reflect the dominant political interests. For instance, the socialist strategy as a valid alternative for abolishing poverty; as China and Cuba have amply demonstrated; is directly inimical to AID's philosophy.

AID's Public Safety Program finances purchase of weapons and material, conducts training programs in counterinsurgency, and even in torture techniques.

4—Many other allegations could be made, suffice it now to raise the important issue that in the past, several foreign students, and black Americans, who opposed the Center Director David Evan's policies, and his relationship with the State Department have been forced to leave the Center as a result of certain tactics such as isolation, intimidation, and exclusion from monetary support. Since the Center for International Education is nothing but a mere tool and a service agency for the State Department, those foreign students who were critical of the Center, its faculty, and its funding sources, had to be neutralized, coopted or disposed of entirely.

The complicity of U.S. Universities with the State or Defense Departments is nothing new. It has been well documented as in I.L. Horowitz's study of the famous "Camelot" project in Latin America. Other examples of complicity include the utilization by CIA-AID of Michigan State University professors for intelligence and cover-up operations in Laos and Southeast Asia in general. Soon after these programs were terminated the President of that University, Mr. Hannah resigned to become the Director of A.I.D.

In this realm many questions could be raised regarding the relationship between AID and CIA and the utilization of the rural development strategies developed at the Center.

The questions presented here, and many others excluded for lack of space, should be closely analyzed by the Faculty Senate ad hoc Committee to evaluate the academic standards and integrity of the School of Education programs. In the wake of the shocking revelations of the past few weeks Chancellor Bromery cannot remain indifferent to these issues, as before, regardless of whether he has worked or not for A.I.D. in the past.

Similarly, it is the responsibility of the new Dean Fischer to bring back the School of Education to at least a minimal level of responsible scholarship, independent research, and intellectual integrity.

Victor Gomez is a guest commentator and former student at the Center for International Education.

Jobs For Summer Look Promising

Informed sources report that summer job opportunities for college students "look good" this year. National Parks, Dude Ranches, Guest Resorts, Private Camps, and other tourist areas throughout the nation are now seeking student applications.

Summer job placement coordinators at Opportunity Research (SAP) report that despite national economics tourist areas are looking for a record season. Polls indicate that people may not go for the big purchases such as new cars, new homes, furniture or appliances, but most appear to be planning for a big vacation.

A free booklet on student job assistance may be obtained by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Opportunity Research, Dept. SJO, 55 Flathead Dr., Kalispell, MT 59901. Student job seekers are urged to apply early!

Professor pioneers rehab program

Dye chose to start his programs at Berkshire because the sheriff, John Courtney, was "receptive to the idea of changing the institution," according to Dye.

Since then, other jails in the area have expressed an interest in the programs. Dye noted that the Northampton jail has had contacts with the Belchertown State School, and the Hampden County Sheriff Michael Ashe has gone to Belchertown to examine the programs.

Dye noted that one of the results of the rehabilitative program has been a lessening of tension in the jail. There are less conflicts between the prisoners and between the prisoners and the prison officials, according to Dye. He said that the jail could become a more "humane place."

Also, many former inmates have been placed in vocational jobs and in schools. Dye said that two former members of the program are presently full-time employees at the Belchertown School.

Dye noted that at present, there are about 95 prisoners at Berkshire, where the capacity is 125. When the program started two years ago, Dye said that there were 62 inmates. He attributed part of the increase to the depressed economic conditions, when crime tends to increase, and to an increased number of transfers to the jail to take advantage of the programs.

MassPIRG supports small claims court reform

MassPIRG small claims court advocate Pamela Benepe yesterday testified before the Judiciary Committee of the General Court in support of two bills, (S-812 and S-813), introduced by Senator William Bulger (D-Boston) to "open up small claims court to the people and provide consumers with a more effective mechanism for resolving their own disputes."

Senate 812 would make the courts more accessible to consumers by requiring each district court to hold at least one small claims court session every month on Saturday or in the evening. Benepe noted that because only three Massachusetts small claims courts presently hold Saturday sessions, a large number of consumers must choose between forfeiting their legal rights altogether, or paying dearly to enforce these rights through increased day care costs or lost wages.

Senate 813 would increase the monetary limit in small claims court from $400 to $750. Since the 1971 $400 limit was established the cost of goods and services has skyrocketed due to double digit inflation, thus making the $400 figure an unrealistic indicator of a "small claim". Benepe also cited the high toll which legal fees take when consumers are forced to resort to the more complicated civil courts. "Many consumers simply cannot afford the added expense and time which pursuing their legal rights in regular civil court requires, particularly when less than $750 is involved.

In her testimony, Benepe commended a recent Boston Globe editorial which stressed the need for improving the Commonwealth's consumer complaint resolution system. She also supported the paper's call for increased publicity of the small claims courts, including booklets explaining how to use them.

"Senator Bulger has served consumers well by introducing these proposed statutes," noted Benepe; "and MassPIRG urges a favorable report on these bills."

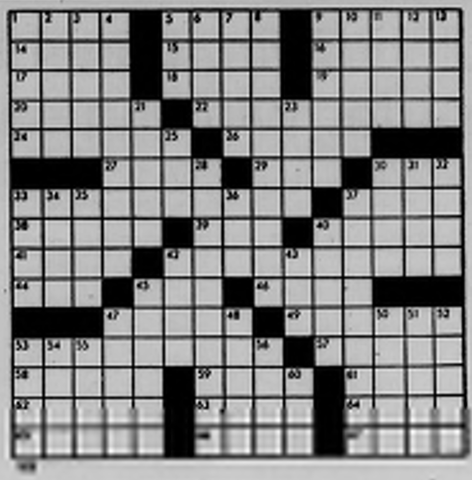
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved



Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, February 25 — Born today, you possess the kind of self-confidence that enables you not only to conceive of an idea but also to transform that idea into a feasible, ultimately profitable project or enterprise. You know how to assign the details of a project to those best able to attend to them, while you oversee the whole and continuously iron out the wrinkles in the parts, or, at any rate, discover where those wrinkles are and how best to get rid of them.

You are sympathetic, compassionate and at the same time forceful and highly determined. You know how to put yourself in another's place so that you can understand him and his problems — but you also know how to protect yourself against having another's problems complicate your life beyond listening, sharing, and advising. In short, you want to help others and know how to help others — but you do not do so at the expense of your own well-being.

[illegible] your personal and public image, bold and at the same time extremely sensitive about breaking in upon another's privacy: of such a contradictory nature is your character. The contradictions do not, however, stand in the way of your being able to influence others to work on your behalf, intrigued by you, they always do.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — You may receive help from an older friend during morning hours. Don't be so unkind as to look a gift horse in the mouth — though you may be tempted to.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — You have a great capacity for compassion. Employ it today where the feelings of the young are concerned. Put up with disappointment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Originality is what will bring you and your work to the attention of those who are in a position to advance your career. Be creative.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — There are certain conditions relative to the present situation on the employment scene which cannot be changed. Be prepared to accept such finalities.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — You can be a great source of inspiration to another if you are willing to expose your recent past. Otherwise, lend moral — but purely verbal — support.

Letters to the Sports Editor

Don't dunk, Bill!

Dear Sir:

In response to Bill Edelstein's article advocating the reinstatement of high school and college dunking, we would like to make the following observations. There are essentially two reasons dunking is presently illegal in high school and college games: 1) to prevent damage to equipment and 2) to prevent injury to the player.

In terms of damage to equipment, the danger is not in pulling the backboard down, but rather in pulling the rim off the backboard or in the fiberglass backboard shattering into literally thousands of pieces. The danger to players then becomes obvious.

Indeed, both damage to the equipment and injury to players have occurred because of dunking. The management of the Chicago Bulls can testify to the high dollar cost of equipment and medical care resulting from dunking and shattering the backboard. The player who performed this "crowd pleasing" act required surgery to remove slivers of fiberglass from his eyes.

The purpose of pregame warm-ups is to develop and practice skills to be used during the game. Since dunking is not a skill, and because it is outlawed during the course of the game, it is similarly an illegal act during pregame warm-ups. This is precisely the reason Al Skinner last year and Mike Pyatt this year have been assessed technical fouls for dunking during pregame warm-ups.

If Edelstein is seeking to criticize basketball rulemakers for taking away any advantages that may occur to a tall player, he might more properly look to legislation which was passed several years ago increasing the width of the foul lanes.

Bridgewater next BBallwomen foe

By CHAS O'CONNOR

Tonight the UMass women's basketball team will face one of their toughest opponents of the year when they travel to a 7:30 encounter at Bridgewater State.

The Minutewomen will be looking for their seventh victory tonight, hoping to continue the fine play exhibited in recent wins over Vermont, New Hampshire and Worcester State.

Senior co-captain Pat Glispin, who turned an ankle last Thursday night against Worcester State, no doubt will be able to see some action tonight. How much is not known.

The coach of the squad, Carol Albert, would probably love to see the playmaker in action for most of the game. Bridgewater State is in a good position to hand UMass its second defeat of their season with or without the help of a UMass injury.

Men swimmers face Tufts; try for winning campaign

By BOB HIGGINS

With the chance of a winning season waiting just around the corner, the men's swim team travels to Medford today to take on the Jumbos of Tufts University.

The Minutemen, coming off an expected loss at the hands of UConn, are now 5-5 on the season, with three meets remaining. The chances are good that they will be able to handle Tufts today, and then split Saturday's dual meet with Vermont and New Hampshire.

A year ago the swimmers just got by Tufts, 62-51, winning the meet with a victory in the final relay. However, things should not be as difficult this year. although the Jumbos will offer a challenge.

Although the prospect of a winning season is very important to the team, Coach Bey Melamed is busy preparing his men for the New Englands, to be held March 6-8 at Brown. One swimmer who is preparing particularly hard—is distance swimmer Ben Crooker. Melamed feels that Benjie has a chance to do extremely well against the best in New England, and is preparing him for his best performances.

TAKING A DIVE . . . In Saturday's 66-47 loss to the Huskies, the Minutemen turned in some fine performances. Ron Boucher won the 100 freestyle with his best time every (51.1). Crooker took the 1000 free in 10.44.5, an excellent time, and Ron Boucher turned in his best time ever in the 50-yard free . . . If you happen to be heading to Tufts today, meet time is 3:00 . . . The UVM-UNH dual meet will be at 2:00 Saturday at Boyden.

UMass swimmer Ben Crookers gets set to take off at UConn Saturday. Swim team lost 66-47, and hope to rebound tonight in a meet against The Jumbos of Tufts University.

Matmen vs Navy Prep

The Minutemen matmen will wrestle their last match before the New Englands this evening at 8:00 at Boyden gym, as they host the United States Naval Preparatory School.

The USNPS is in its first year of wrestling after the school was moved from Bainbridge, Md. to Newport, Rhode Island. It is currently 5-2, including a win over the US Coast Guard varsity.

Gymwomen to experiment; tune for Southern Conn.

By BILL DOYLE

It'll be another meet for "trying out new routines and giving some other gymnasts a chance" tonight when the UMass women's gymnastics team carries its 4-1 record to Boston State for a 7:00 p.m. encounter.

Although Coach Virginia Evans said that Boston State has improved over the last few years, she said she doesn't expect much competition from the State women tonight. The UMass line-up excludes Jeannine Burger, Susan Cantwell, Alicia Goode, and Debbie Law, as for the second meet in a row (the last one being Salem State) the gymnasts that are competing will either be working on new routines or attempting to break into the starting line up with good performances.

Coach Evans said that Keeley O'Rourke and Gail McCarthy have a chance to move up to the starting line up with good performances tonight on the uneven bars.

McCarthy, Evans said, has the potential and a good routine on the bars but has had problems putting it all together so far.

Ann Olson will get her first try at all-around tonight, as she will be the only Minutewoman performing in every event. Regina Hartman, who missed the last meet with contact lens problems, will be performing in the floor exercise. Pam Steckroat will be using a new mount tonight on the uneven bars and Cheryl Smith has added another back handspring to her beam routine which she will try out tonight.

The Minutewomen may be able to use this type of meet to tune-up for Friday night's key encounter at Southern Connecticut. Coach Evans said that the Southern meet "should be a close one."

As the season winds down to the end (there are only two more meets after tonight), the Minutewomen will be preparing for the eastern regional championships. A good showing there would propel UMass to the nationals in California, where the Minutewomen would be shooting for their second national championship in three years.

A ref's position on fouls

By MIKE KNEELAND

A guard moves into the path of a dribbler and contact occurs. Who is responsible?

Fouls. When the home team chorus breaks into "the ref beats his wife," you can bet the crowd believes the ref needs a set of thicker glasses.

When calling fouls that could perhaps go either way - offensive or defensive - the refs will usually look at the dribbler's head and shoulders to determine the call. (Shirt colors don't matter.)

If the dribbler has passed an opponent sufficiently to have his head and shoulders in advance of him, the foul will be called on the defensive man.

A dribbler is not allowed, however, to try and dribble between two opponents - or an opponent and a boundary line - if there is not sufficient space for him to get through. This type of foul frequently occurs when dribblers try to drive against a zone defense.

A dribbler commits a player control foul, of course, when he drives into a defensive player who has established his position. That doesn't mean the person on defense has to be in that spot for any specific length of time. Generally, it means the defensive player has "beat" the offensive player to the position.

Despite these guidelines refs follow, much lies ultimately with the judgement of the individual official. The key in calling fouls, and this can hardly be stressed enough, is consistency...calling the fouls the same way throughout the game.

In case one ref calls fouls "differently" than another, and this is usually not the case, the officials always switch their position after each foul. This means official A is not always at the top of the key for one team and at the bottom of the key for the other team.

When are fouls shot? The key to that question is whether or not the player shooting had possession of the ball when the foul was committed, for player control fouls are never "shot."

For example, If Player A1 charges into B1 while shooting, the basket will count if sunk and B1 will shoot if it's a 1 and 1. A1 did not have possession of the ball so it was not a player control foul.

If A1 charges into B1 and then shoots, the foul on A1 makes the play dead immediately. No basket can be scored and B1 will not shoot. A1 has committed a player control foul.

If player A1 shoots and scores, then by his momentum strikes player B1, the basket is good and B1 will shoot if there's a 1 and 1. A1's foul was not "player control."

Player control doesn't necessarily mean the player himself has possession of the ball. If A1 is dribbling, and A2 fouls B1, then A2 has committed a player control foul.

ECAC's confusing? Here's a hoop guide

Confused? Well, you're not alone.

The new post-season college basketball tournament scene even has so-called experts in a state of bewilderment. In Sunday's Boston Globe, Joe Concannon, who regularly surveys the college scene, mistakenly described the set-up.

So, in order to relieve some of the confusion, here is the tournament picture in a nutshell.

The first hurdle that must be passed is an invitation to participate in the New England ECAC playoff, which will be held on March 6 and 8 at the Springfield Civic Center.

The selection committee, headed by Holy Cross athletic director Ron Perry, will meet on March 1. (The New England bracket of the ECAC is made up of Boston College, Providence College, Holy Cross, Northeastern, and the seven Yankee Conference schools.) Invitations are scheduled to be issued on that date, but if the schools involved still have important games to be played, the bids could be delayed until March 5 at the latest.

The winner of the tournament will automatically advance to the eastern bracket of the NCAA playoffs. The New England winner will join ECAC winners from the New Yrok State, Metropolitan New York-New Jersey, and Southern divisions and champions from the Atlantic Coast, Southern, East Coast, and Ivy Leagues in that east bracket.

The NCAA tournament will get underway on Saturday, March 15, with the eight eastern qualifiers meeting on neutral courts. The four winners will advance to the eastern regionals, to be played on March 20 and 22 in the Providence Civic Center.

The winner of the eastern regional will join the other three regional winners in San Diego for the national playoffs on March 27 and 29.

The NIT selection committee, headed by Fordham's Pete Carlessimo, will issue its initial invitations on March 6, but will not round out the 16-team field until March 10. By that date, all four ECAC regional tournaments will have been completed, and presumably several of the losing teams will be invited to New York.

Big men score 70; dance by UNH, 93-71

By STEVE SARACENO

DURHAM, NEW HAMPSHIRE — For the Wildcats of New Hampshire here at Lundholm Gym last night, it was a case of "'ashes to ashes, dust to dust; if UMass' defense don't get ya', the Big Men must...'"

And so it went as Minuteman forwards Greg Duarte (high man with 22 points), John Murphy (19), Jim Town (19), and Mike Pyatt (10) combined for 70 points in a 93-71 work-a-day-world victory over UNH.

The boards just belonged to UMass. The Minutemen enjoyed a 48-29 rebounding advantage, and scored nine times on second shots — compared to once for the Wildcats. And once more, UMass didn't really take that many second shots, for they hit a magnetic 57.1 per cent from the floor.

Its not that UNH is small up front (the Wildcats' front line about matches UMass'), it was just that they suffered a distinct talent disadvantage and thought boxing out is something you do in a cardboard factory.

UNH just had no business under the boards. Once, when Wildcat Dennis Sargent did manage to snare a defensive rebound, he waited until almost everyone had cleared out before letting go an outlet pass. Almost. Sargent went through the motion, but Jim Town had stolen the ball and simply layed one in.

The Minutemen never trailed, and after scoring ten straight (from five different players) to go up 18-8 early in the first half, it was never close again.

It was 45-33 at the start of the second half, and soon after that it was iced for the Minutemen on a run of nine straight, five of which came from smoother-and-smoother Duarte, who has to be the most improved player on the team over the last three weeks.

After that, it was your basic UMass-UNH trash time (UMass won, 85-44 earlier this year), with many UNH people getting irked about the way UMass coach Jack Leaman kept Murphy and Jim Burke in with the Minutemen ahead in the late going by 20-odd points.

But it was almost worth it because Burke came up with a defensive Rembrandt when he stopped a two on one break by grabbing a feed pass with one hand, as if he had glue on it — the ball just attached itself to him.

Perimeter Pops — UMass is now 8-2 in the Yankee Conference and 15-7 overall, while UNH drops to 6-16, and 2-10 in the Yan-Con...Wayne Morrison, the touted New Hampshire backcourtman, looked good with 9-18 for 20 points...

Skiers cop title, NewEnglands next

By PETER McDONNELL

The UMass men's ski team completed regular season competition by winning its fourth Osborne Division title in the last five years this past weekend at Prospect Hill in Waltham.

After a rather disappointing sixth place finish on Saturday, Coach Bill MacConnell's skiers came back with a decisive first place showing Sunday despite a pouring rain.

Because of the small size of the area, the nine teams in the division had to race slalom both days instead of the giant slalom on one and slalom the other.

"Whatever that happens it's usually not to our advantage. We're in better physical condition than most of our competition so the longer the race the better it is for us," said MacConnell.

The trio of Dick McWade, Dale Maynard and Steve Tonelli [illegible] fourth, fifth and sixth respectively on Sunday for UMass while Jim Hawkins took 18th.

As a team, UMass finished a healthy seven seconds ahead of second place [illegible].

On Saturday, Dale Maynard was best for UMass with seventh. Larry Peck was 16th, Steve Tonelli took 17th and Jim Hawkins placed 24th.

Despite a sixth place finish, only four seconds separated them from Amherst College, who won the event.

Dick McWade, performing before his hometown folks, had two fine runs Sunday and would have finished near the top on Saturday had he not fallen on his second run.

"Dale Maynard has been our steadiest skier all year. The worst he's finished all year in slalom competition was seventh, and he's only a freshman," said MacConnell.

"Jim Hawkins deserves a great deal of credit. He's been consistently in our top four throughout the year," continued the coach.

"Equipment trouble more than anything else had been holding Steve Tonelli back, but now it looks as though he's ready for the conference meet and the Can-Ams," MacConnell said.

The next stop for the skiers will be at Cranmore in two weeks to defend their New England Intercollegiate Ski Conference championship.

Freshman Dale Maynard from Hancock, Mass. and the [illegible] of Jimmy Peek, steps through a gate on his way to another fine finish. Maynard has been instrumental in the success of the men's ski team which won another divisional title last weekend.

Russell Daniels' trial commences Friday

By JAN ALEXANDER and CINDY ROGERS
MDC Staff

The hearing for the trial of Commonwealth vs. Russell W. Daniels has been set for this Friday at 10:00 a.m. at Springfield Superior Court.

A hearing is held for the purposes of setting a trial date, and is "expected to be lively and contested," according to UMass professor Benjamin Ricci, President of the Belchertown State School Friends Association.

Russell Daniels is a 30 year old Belchertown resident who was convicted last spring of murdering an 83 year old Springfield woman. The State Supreme Court overturned the conviction this January, stating that Daniels had been a victim of "a miscarriage of justice."

Ricci said that as a result of a national search, several eminent authorities have been found who will testify as expert witnesses at the trial. Some of these are:

— Dr. Burton Blatt, director of the division of special education and rehabilitation at Syracuse University.

— Dr. Herbert Grossman, director of Illinois State Pediatric Institute in Chicago.

— Teams from Children's Hospital in Boston which includes:

— Dr. Bernie Yudewitz, forensic psychiatrist

— Dr. William Kiernan, forensic psychiatrist

— Dr. Ludwik Szemanski, specialist in delinquency and retardation.

— Dr. Bruce Cushna, professor at Harvard University

"What we have to do is put together the kinds of people who will best serve our purpose," said Ricci. He added that he has contacted experts from Indiana, Nebraska, Texas, North and South Carolina, and Atlanta, Georgia.

Ricci estimates that a Russell Daniels Defense Fund of $30,000 will be raised in the Hartford, Springfield, Boston area alone.

Jessica Kitay and Helen Rees of "The Boston Eight" were in Hartford, Springfield and Amherst, yesterday. "The Boston Eight" is a fund-raising group which is doing public relations for the Daniels defense fund. The money raised will pay for the expert witnesses according to Rees.

Rees said in an interview that she and Kitay had spoken to media people in the Hartford area to publicize the fund.

She also said in the Boston area the group plans mailings, talking to people and will show the film, "A Nine Year-Old in Norfolk Prison."

"We will be chatting with people who have been active in the past," Rees added.

Although the Boston Eight is making a large effort to obtain funds from the communities, Rees said "the colleges are our major source of strength."

Rees and Kitay commended UMass students on their involvement in the case. A Russel Daniels night and several fund-raising events are planned for the UMass campus.

The Boston Eight has been talking to young people at colleges in the Boston area. Kitay said the Harvard Crimson was doing a page on the Daniels case and has set up collection boxes in dormitories.

Last night, they met with UMass faculty members. "Students have shown great interest, the time has come for the faculty to get involved," Rees said.

Rees called the Daniels case, "a landmark case, and should be treated accordingly. Massachusetts is one of the five remaining states that does not legally make the distinction between mental illness and mental retardation," she added.

To become Hampshire College treasurer

Torrey resigns as town manager

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Allen Torrey, Amherst's town manager, announced yesterday he is resigning from his 21-year old administrative position to become treasurer at Hampshire College. Torrey's resignation will become effective May 1.

Torrey, jokingly, said it was "old age" that prompted his decision to resign. He added, "I find this a good opportunity to try something new, earlier I called it a mid-career change."

When asked if he had found UMass officials cooperative, Torrey answered, "yes, we had a pleasant relationship. We've had conflicts but we've been able to talk back and forth and solve the problems." He said all anybody had to do was to look around and see the progress made in the past 21 years.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said Torrey's resignation came as a surprise. "It came as a surprise. I was surprised how fast it happened." Bromery said that Torrey has been cooperative in working with the university. "My relationship has been good with Torrey and I'm going to miss working with him," Bromery said. He added Torrey had been town manager for a long time and in a critical time for Amherst when the town was growing, "he has done a good job".

Since Torrey has been Town Manager, Amherst police and fire department has grown from a handful of men to more than 40 people, the elementary, junior and senior highs schools have expanded, and he has personally developed Town Hall staff of planners, engineers, assessors, and others.

Appointed by the board of selectmen each year, Torrey has held the highest and most powerful single office in the town. He has had the power to hire and fire most town employees, to appoint committee members, to select land which the town will vote to buy and to draw up the town's budget every year.

Torrey said it was "merely a speculative assumption" that the town has moved to shift some of the town manager's powers in recent years and plans further decentralization. "The town manager's position is very much in contact," he said.

Toorey will be moving from the responsibility of handling the Town's present $4.34 million operating budget to a post at Hampshire College in which he will oversee the college's [illegible] million budget.

In these trying economic times, Torrey admitted that he could foresee financial problems at Hampshire College. "It is not wealthy like Amherst College, it's not big an

Debate Union suffers budgetary ills

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

The Debate Union "financially stands six feet under the ground," Jill Peltin, president of the union, said yesterday at a general meeting. Prof. Ronald Mation, union director, said the debate union needs $3,068 to meet its plans for the rest of the year.

Peltin said the debate union has appealed to the administration and the Recognized Student Organizations (R.S.O.) for funds, but no money is available. The debate union has two alternatives: they can ask Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to appeal to President Robert Wood, or they can try to raise the money through raffles, movies, or other activities.

Peltin said the union's individual Events (I.E.) team, a first year program at UMass, has qualified five people for a national tournament while the debate team has qualified two people for a national tournament. They will not be able to attend the tournaments because of the union's budgeting problems.

Tim Hynes, a coach for the debate team, said, "There are several good reasons why we should have these funds. First of all, we have one of the largest programs on the east coast, in terms of the number of people involved. Secondly, unlike many programs in the country who cater only to experienced speakers, this program works vigorously with anyone interested in issues of national concern. Thirdly, we are one of the most frugal programs anywhere, in terms of spending. In sum, we need the money not because of our spending behavior, but because we want to give more opportunities to more students."

Peltin said the debate union offers many services to the university by teaching students about reasoning, argumentation, and self expression, and by drawing students interested in forensics to the university. "We do a lot of work to draw people to the university," she added, "then once we do that the administration cuts our funds. We host two high school tournaments and two or three college tournaments every year, which is a service to the university."

Mation said the debate team is doing well this year, and cited last week's Dartmouth tournament as an example. "This is the first time in twenty years we've won anything there," he added. The teams of John Gross and John Adams, and Howard Steinberg and Dave Donovan compiled a [illegible] record, winning four trophies.

Mation said on the previous weekend Nick Burnett had won a third place trophy for oral interpretation at Fordham University.

Other subjects discussed at last night's meeting include an April phonothon, a future banquet, and officer nominations.

No meal ticket $ increase slated

By DEBBI DIMASSIMO
Staff Reporter

UMass Food Services has counteracted the dramatic food price increases of the last year and a half by small measures, and no meal ticket price increase has yet been slated, according to Maria Cappadona, assistant director of Food Services.

Costs have been reduced by literally "leaving the frosting off the cake" said Cappadona. "Seriously, giving the students a choice between portioned slices of frosted and unfrosted cake amounted to a substantial savings in sugar usage."

Student response to the Dining Commons food ecology program has been good, according to Cappadona. Less waste is reported, translating into lower costs. Tighter planning of the amount of food prepared for given meals has also resulted in savings, said Cappadona.

Soy proteins aren't being used as extensively as they were two years ago, said Cappadona. "We still use soy proteins to texture our ground beef and chicken casseroles," she said, "but we are gradually discontinuing the use of bontrae ham and tuna seafood."

Students are missing fewer meals this year, said Cappadona. An absentee rate is figured into the price of meal tickets; there are no refunds granted for missed meals. About 60 students who miss meals because of their class schedules have arranged with their DC managers to pick up box lunches, she added.

Approximately 8500 students purchased meal plans this year, with 78 per cent opting for the [illegible] meal plan, said Cappadona.

Optional weekend meal plans will be implemented in the fall. Two meals, lunch and dinner, will be offered on Saturdays and Sundays for interested students, Cappadona said.

The Kosher dinner kitchen located in Hampden DC, a new program instituted this semester, is utilized by about [illegible] students. While Kosher meals are more expensive, the program is not costing regular meal ticket holders money because the students who purchased Kosher meal plans have only one choice for dinner, according to Cappadona.

Selectman Bouchard pushes student municipal input

By JUDY BOUCHER

Leo Bouchard, a member of the Amherst Board of Selectmen up for reelection hopes for more input from the community and UMass students in regards to municipal affairs.

Leo Bouchard is up for re-election as a member of the Amherst board of selectmen and feels all the folks here should be involved in town government—including the 24,000 UMass students.

Bouchard, 48, in an interview at his home at 203 Middle Street, said a better avenue for student involvement would be the student senate electing a town co-ordinator.

"It's difficult to keep students involved in the town and in the past the committee appointments were the only thing that could be done", he said.

If the dormitory policy changes to a voluntary policy, Bouchard said, it's difficult to gauge how many students will move off-campus. "There is a tremendous potential impact with a potential for victimizing the elderly, the low income and middle income, graduate students and single-parent families," said Bouchard.

According to Bouchard, what may happen is bidding on apartments.

He said at present he does not support rent control, but if a study indicates that "rent control is necessary" then he would endorse rent control.

Bouchard, who is completing his first term in office, said the problems that face Amherst in the next three years continue to be those that have resulted from a long period of uncontrolled growth now compounded by a down turn in the economy with its resulting decrease in revenues at a time of inflation."

Bouchard said he feels the proposed zoning bylaws will guide the "uncontrollable growth" where previously "you could build anything just about anywhere."

In addition, Amherst is facing new capital expenditures as result of spiraling growth, namely a new police station, fire station, waste disposal project and a sewer treatment plant.

Bouchard said the university should contribute to the town's operating budget. He has proposed that the university pay 33 per cent of the town's fire department's budget and some money for the proposed new police station.

He said for Amherst's core population of 13,500 there "was a large police force" while UMass has no lock-up facilities on campus.

Bouchard is running against two other candidates who will be featured in Thursday's and Friday's Collegian. There are two openings for selectmen in this year's April [illegible] election, both for a three-year term.

Bouchard has been an Amherst resident for 17 years and is employed by Johnson Electricity Co. in Springfield. He was formerly chairman of the citizens advisory committee, a former Town Meeting member and former finance committee member.

Sokol outlines Outreach internship programs to 200

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

"Outreach is an educational program to facilitate your going off campus."

This is how assistant director of Outreach, Rich Sokol, defined the program at an orientation meeting of about 200 students last night.

He said the next full time internships would be available Sept. [illegible] and run to Dec. 19, 1975. A part time summer internship program is scheduled for June 2 to Aug. 15, he added.

Citing the cost of the program would be the same as the present tuition and room fee at UMass, Sokol said an added fee of $30 is charged for interns working outside the western Massachusetts area.

"The number of students that the Outreach program could accept could run from 100 to 200 students, Sokol estimated. They include students who can either find jobs for themselves or obtain one from Outreach.

"The three main areas selected for this program are Washington, D.C. for political interns, New York for social, business, art and communication interns and Massachusetts for social interns."

Pointing out that most openings are in the arts and social fields, Sokol said that fewest are in the communications fields.

CASIAC dean, Dr. James Shea also spoke at the Outreach meeting and outlined the contents of the program.

Shea said that students would be given up to 15 credits for full time internships and up to 6 credits for part time internships. Of the 15 credits for full-time internships, 9 would come from the Practicum 200 program which has been in effect for the past one and one half years. The other six credits would come from independent study programs which a professor must agree to sponsor, he said.

Shea stressed the fact that the Practicum 200 course and the independent study program must be closely related to the course of study that a participating student is following.

"The only requirements needed to enter the program are 45 academic credits and a 2.0 cumulative average," Shea said. "When you enter the program you must not only agree to apply the knowledge of a course that you have taken to your internship, but you must be willing to take a post course related to your internship placement."

Director worked at New York's Lincoln Center

Ed Berkeley directs 'As You Like It' at UMass

By WENDY GROSS
Below the Salt Staff

Ed Berkeley does the play "As You Like It" and the play "does" Ed Berkeley.

Berkeley, imported from New York, is directing the Shakespearean comedy, UMass' First Studio 75 production in the Fine Arts Center.

Berkeley, when interviewed, is almost existential about being at UMass. (Maybe he's existential 'cause his car just got towed and he's living in Prince House and the "dressing room space in the Fine Arts building is foolish" and previews are just an hour away and...?

Asked why he is doing 'amateur' collegiate production here after directing plays in places such as New York's Lincoln Center, he said, "David (Knauff, chairman of the department) asked me...I had time..." That simplistic answer doesn't include the lure of the new Fine Arts building. "The support facilities are poor, the lights aren't really ready — it's almost like the building isn't finished." But his attitude with that is consistent with his feeling about being at UMass. "I complain a great deal about spite, but generally..."

"Generally," Berkeley slouches in his chair, [illegible] "I'm relaxed, not tense." This is how the director faces the transition of working with students from the five college area — relaxed effort. "I deal with students as professionals, as many as possible. With others less skilled, I give more guidance."

Congress gambles with US future, says Ford

Suspension of oil tax criticized

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (UPI) — President Ford accused Congress yesterday of taking a gamble on energy that threatens America with disaster.

By voting to suspend his increase in oil import fees and by failing to enact a national energy program, "Congress is embarked on a massive gamble — a risk of increasing this nation's vulnerability to future embargoes which we cannot afford," Ford said in a speech prepared for delivery to a White House-sponsored conference on domestic affairs and the economy.

"So far, the only legislative move Congress has taken on the energy problem was to block my proposal to increase tariffs on oil imports. This is a purely negative action which will force me to use the constitutional power of veto for the first time in the 94th Congress.

"In effect, the Congress voted to continue for the time being our ever-increasing dependency on Arab and other oil-producing nations. This course could lead America to disaster."

The speech, opening two days of politics and golfing in this Miami suburb, mirrored the Harry S. Truman-type stumping the Republican president displayed in grass roots campaigns for his energy-economic programs in Atlanta, Houston and Topeka, Kan., in the past month.

As on earlier visits, the politics took a now set form — dining with southern mayors Tuesday night, meeting at breakfast with regional news executives Wednesday morning, and holding a locally-broadcast news conference.

But on this occasion, Ford will take time out for 18 holes of golf with Jackie Gleason and Bob Hope. And the First Lady, Betty Ford, was along, but only for the sunshine, not the politics.

In his speech to the conference of civic leaders on energy problems, Ford talked somewhat tougher than he has in Washington, but on the same theme — that he has acted and Congress has not.

"Nearly six weeks ago, I presented an action program to the Congress — I made detailed economic and energy proposals," he said. "But the nation is still waiting for action by the Congress — even such action that would make Americans just one gallon less dependent on imported oil or put just $1 back into citizens' pockets through the tax rebates I proposed."

Arms to Ethiopia may pass, says Kissinger

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday the administration is still trying to make the "difficult" decision of whether to send arms to Ethiopia to put down a rebellion in Eritrea.

But he discounted press reports that the decision would be made today by the Special Action Group which he serves as chairman.

Kissinger told a news conference that the group would "try to sort out the problems of the request by the Ethiopian regime which asked for [illegible] million in arms aid and then make its recommendations to President Ford.

He said the main issue is whether military aid should be denied to Ethiopia. The United States has had a military arrangement with Ethiopia since 1953.

Utility will delay Montague nuclear plants

Northeast Utilities airs 4-year halt

MONTAGUE (AP) — The board of trustees of Northeast Utilities delayed yesterday the construction of a nuclear power plant proposed for Montague for up to four years, according to NU vice president Charles Bragg.

But the trustees decided to continue work on a third nuclear unit at the Millstone Plant at Waterford, Conn., he said.

"The action changed the in-service dates for the Massachusetts unit from 1982 and 1984 to 1986 and 1988," Bragg said.

"The decision to defer the two units at Montague confirmed a recommendation made last Friday by NU Chairman and President Lelan Sillin Jr.," Bragg said.

Sillin said the company's shaky financial condition is making it necessary to postpone the $1.5 billion project, but he added the company remains committed to nuclear power.

Bragg said construction at Waterford will continue because NU has invested $50 million in the project already.

Bragg said whether this unit is completed "hinges directly on our financial ability. If we feel that we have sufficient revenue and we have the support of the government and the regulatory bodies, [illegible] will continue.

"We feel [illegible] deteriorates, [illegible] legislation came out of the General Assembly in Connecticut that would hamper our ability to finance the plant, why then we would certainly have to defer it."

Bragg said completion of the third nuclear unit at Millstone in Waterford is "subject to a month-by-month review of our ability to finance completion. That completion is now being scheduled for late 1979."

NU serves [illegible] per cent of Connecticut's electricity customers and also serves Western Massachusetts.

Testimony concludes on offshore rights

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court ended two days of arguments yesterday over offshore seabed rights from Maine to the Florida Keys with pleas that it prevent the government from chipping away at state's rights.

Florida Attorney General Robert Shevin, defending his state's claim to fishing and mineral rights up to 30 miles in the Atlantic, said "the federal government has a policy of trying to chip away at state marine authority and state sovereignty."

He told the justices they could end the policy by ruling favorably in Florida's case. The state contended that when it was readmitted to the union in 1868, Congress accepted its state constitution which provided jurisdiction up to 30 miles in the Atlantic and 10 miles in the Gulf of Mexico. But in 1947, the Supreme Court ruled that states had no jurisdiction over waters beyond the low-tide mark. In 1953, Congress granted states power over waters up to three miles offshore, except where a valid historical claim could be made for greater authority.

Monday, the justices heard arguments from 12 other Atlantic coast states that colonial grants entitled them to historical jurisdiction over seabeds up to 100 miles offshore.

Boston busing costs $26 million this year

BOSTON (AP) — Court-ordered school desegregation in Boston will cost the city [illegible] million this year and perhaps $26 million in 1975-76, State Education Secretary Paul Parks said yesterday.

Parks told Gov. Michael S. Dukakis at the weekly governor's cabinet meeting that next year's final costs will depend on the new city desegregation plan ordered by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, Jr.

Dukakis said the city will defray some of the cost, but he does not yet know how much. Some state aid will come from the Highway Fund, the governor said.

Parks said this school year's costs are [illegible] million for desegregation transportation, [illegible] million for police-related work at the schools, [illegible] million for school aides in the buildings and on the school buses, and lesser costs for planning and conversion of school buildings.

For next year the estimates are less definite, Parks said. But he said desegregation transportation may cost [illegible] million, plus [illegible] million for police, [illegible] million for school aides and perhaps [illegible] million for conversion of non-school buildings to school use.

"The question is what portion of this should the state pay," Dukakis said.

He said a recommendation for preliminary reimbursement will be made within 30 days, probably to be followed by a continuing series of payments. The governor said state aid may be based in part on the Boston school population, which has declined by about [illegible] this year due to protest of the court-ordered desegregation program.

Parks said the city may have lost even more than [illegible] students from an official estimate of [illegible] student total.

House votes to hire more social workers

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts House moved swiftly yesterday to bring the state into compliance with a federal court order and avoid the loss of some [illegible] million a year in federal welfare funds.

The House, after lengthy debate, passed a bill providing for around [illegible] new social workers.

The [illegible] million appropriation bill now goes to the Senate, where quick action was expected.

Yesterday's House action came in response to an order by U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman, halting the flow of federal monies to the Massachusetts welfare program.

Freedman said Monday, however, that he might stay his order if the legislature passed the [illegible] million bill by the beginning of next week.

The order was the result of a suit brought by the Boston Legal Assistance Project contending that public aid recipients have been denied benefits because of a shortage of welfare workers.

Normally, under a recent legislative rule change, money bills must wait seven days after being printed before they can come up on the floor for debate.

Rep. Charles W. Long R-Dover, objected to suspending the rule during Tuesday's debate, saying, "A federal judge is trying to take over the appropriation and taxing power. This is our prerogative."

Navajos vow not to go

SHIPROCK, N.M. (UPI) — Rifle-toting Navajos who took over a reservation electronics plant and vowed not to leave until their demands had been realized, met with tribal leaders yesterday to discuss better working conditions and health care on the country's largest reservation.

The Indians, led by American Indian Movement treasurer Larry Anderson, also demanded the rehiring of [illegible] Navajos laid off for economic reasons.

Anderson said the [illegible] Indians wanted better health care, higher wages, improved hiring practices and amnesty from prosecution for the occupation.

Elijah Muhammed dies

CHICAGO (UPI) — Elijah Muhammed, plantation-born son of former slaves and for more than 40 years spiritual leader of the Nation of Islam or Black Muslims, died yesterday of heart ailment. He was 77.

His death came on the eve of the black separatist sect's Savior's Day observance, and more than 20,000 followers were already gathering here for the annual meeting. A spokesman said tentative plans were to go ahead with Muhammed's son, Wallace, as speaker.

In 1962 he told his followers that "with the help of Allah, you will start a civilization for yourselves in the next 20 to 25 years." He pictured a black nation on territory either set apart in the United States or procured elsewhere with the help of American whites trying to compensate for 400 years of oppression of blacks.

Muhammed advocated strict authoritarianism, racial dignity, economic self-improvement and pacifism except in self-defense.

Cambodia aid urged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warned Congress yesterday that Cambodia will fall to the Communists "within weeks" unless it receives additional U.S. military aid.

Ford said the controversy over his proposed emergency [illegible] million for Cambodia — whose capital of Phnom Penh is surrounded by rebel forces — is "a moral question that must be faced squarely."

Oil bill defeated

WASHINGTON (UPI) — House Democrats voted 153 to 98 yesterday to force a House vote on whether to kill the oil depletion allowance.

The depletion repeal would be attached to a pending [illegible] billion tax-cut bill, which is tentatively scheduled for House floor action tomorrow.

The tax cut bill contains rebates of 1974 taxes up to [illegible] plus personal tax cuts for 1975 and business tax cuts and investment incentives for 1975 and 1976.

Minority Student Day

Last Saturday the Black Scientist's Society, in conjunction with the school of Engineering, held the third annual minority day. This program is designed to recruit minority students for the engineering field. The program consists of two hundred students from the Boston, Springfield and Worcester areas.

The program began at 10:30 with statements from various people. The co-director of the B.S.S., Anselmo Lopes, opened with words of the Black Scientist's Society and also gave the students a short synopsis of the day's events. Chancellor Bromery spoke next, speaking on the need for dedicated Black scientists, especially in the engineering field. The last speaker was the assistant dean Joseph Marcus, who introduced the students to the engineering department's various facets.

The students proceeded next to short demonstrations on the many diversified engineering aspects. This included discussions entitled "Robot in Manufacturing", "Laser Communication", "People and Machines" and several others. Students were allowed to witness and actually participate in many of the demonstrations, including operating a television camera or observing microorganisms in a water quality setup.

The program closed with statements from Muriel Wiggins of the admissions office, Carl Brown of financial aid, Greg Maynard, a freshman in engineering explaining some of his experiences, and Greg Somerville, a graduate student in engineering. Students were given an opportunity to question people on different aspects of UMass environment.

It was a successful and informative day. The Black Scientist's Society hopes to continue the program and possibly expand it to include many other scientific disciplines.

to the state boys school. The killings were committed in two different episodes in a deserted foothill region frequented by many teenagers for parking, drinking and partying. These murders were unusual only in that persons were actually tried and convicted for the actions. Lack of investigations concerning such murders are a constant source of friction and motivation for demonstrations in many western Indian communities.

Instead of attacking the source of the alcoholism-alienation problem, public agencies have another solution: adoption and sterilization. The Indian child in four will spend a major part of their childhood in foster homes, adoptive homes or institutions. This extremely high rate of adoption of Indian children is due to a lack of standards for [illegible] relevant to Indians, failure of officials to follow due process in removal of children, and the low income, poor health and housing conditions that provide readily available reasons for adoptions. Yet, even if the motives were the best possible, the future of a culture lies in its children, and when so many Indian children are put in homes, and with non-Indian parents, it's clear that their traditional learning is lost and their heritage diluted.

Sterilization is a particularly heinous form of genocide. Several hundred sterilization operations have been performed in the Indian Health Service Hospital in Claremore Oklahoma within the past two years.

The operations were either bilateral tubular ligations or hysterectomies, complete removal of the womb. The latter operation is usually rare in "women of child bearing age unless there is cancer or other medical problems. In most medical centers, any hysterectomy under age 40 must be reviewed by a medical review board." However, these operations were performed usually on women in their 20's, a day or so after having given birth. In the words of John Davis, Indian Health Service Area Director, "The record of surgical procedures at this hospital resulting in sterilization of young Indian men and women is genocidal. Even if many of these operations were done at the request of the patient, it is all too obvious that there is little or no attention given to proper counseling as to the serious implications of such a decision."

Many forces, some well planned and intentional, and others only coincidental, combine to deprive the Indians all over the U.S. of their human rights, their livelihoods, and their culture. Fortunately the Indian beliefs are hardy. Indians are fighting each of these forces to maintain their existence.

The dilemma of prostitution

prostitute is illegal, and laws concerning vagrancy, loitering, disorderly conduct and obstruction of sidewalks and public places are all used to legally harass prostitutes. Many of the laws related to prostitution are challengeable on the basis of the Constitution, as is the enforcement of those laws.

The existing statutes are designed to legislate the morality of our society, and in so doing are an invasion of personal privacy and the right to control one's own body. "The Griswold case (1965) elevated the right to privacy to the status of a Constitutional doctrine," Marilyn Haft, who is the director of the ACLU Project on Sexual Privacy, said.

The private sexual act involved in prostitution is no less a personal right for being commercial. Therefore, the government should not be able to prohibit it unless the state can meet the very heavy burden of proof that banning it is beneficial to society.

Haft addressed herself to the basic question which is oftentimes ignored: whether or not the government has any right to pass legal sanctions against certain behavior on the basis of morality. According to the doctrine in Griswold, the state would have to prove a reason for the necessity of legislation against prostitution.

The laws regulating prostitution are clearly discriminatory on the basis of sex. While the woman who sells her body is a criminal, the man who buys it is not. Prostitutes' customers are only criminally liable in a few instances; more often, though they are partaking of an illegal service, the only legal sanction they face is a "violation"—not considered a crime. In many more instances, the men are not considered culpable at all for their participation in the act. In Indiana, North Dakota, Wisconsin, Louisiana and Wyoming, prostitution statutes apply only to females.

Such legal discrimination is clearly reflective of a society which justifies man's use of prostitutes without justifying the prostitutes' rights as citizens. Kingsley Davis, noted sociologist, said, on the matter of prosecuting customers:

Though the service is illegitimate, the citizen cannot be held guilty, for it is both impossible and inadvisable to punish half the populace for a crime. Each citizen participates in vital institutional relationships—family, business, church, and state. To disrupt all of these by throwing him in jail for a mere vice would be, on a large scale, to disrupt society.

Davis, in referring only to the customer as a "citizen", makes clear that the prostitute is not

Natural resources lecture

Dr. Irving S. Goldstein will present a lecture in The Natural Resources Seminar Series, entitled, "Chemicals and Energy from Wood", on Thursday, February 27, at 4:00 p.m. in Room 203, Holdsworth Natural Resources Center. Dr. Goldstein will discuss the nature of chemical and energy storage in wood tissue and the potential as source for replacement of fossil fuels or for synthetic organic materials such as plastic and rubber.

Dr. Goldstein holds a Ph.D. in Chemistry from Harvard University and is currently Head of the Department of Wood and Paper Science at North Carolina State University. He will be on campus as a Visiting Scientist under sponsorship of The Society of Wood Science and Technology, and will be meeting with faculty and classes in Wood Science and Technology.

CEQ lecture

The Coalition for Environmental Quality is sponsoring an Environmental Lecture Series which will begin this Thursday and continue every week thereafter. The first presentation will be by Professor Charles E. Carver Jr. and will be on "The Identification of Pollution Sources in the Connecticut River Basin by Aerial Photography." The presentation will include slides and a discussion, and will be given this Thursday night, February 27 in Thompson 102 at 7 p.m. The entire series is open to the public.

Fellowships offered

There are fellowships here for research studies in the polymer (plastics) field. The deadline for application receipt is February 28, 1975. Fellowships will be awarded by April 1, 1975. Funds will be awarded for studies conducted during the summer vacation of 1975 or on a part-time basis during the school year. Contact Roger S. Porter, head of Polymer Science and Engineering Dept.

Stu Sen meets tonight

On the agenda set for tonight's Student Senate meeting is a motion which, if passed, will empower the Senate treasurer to freeze, when he deems necessary, any RSO accounts which don't reflect good financial standing.

There should be much discussion on this issue, since a degree of exploitable power would be invested in the office if the motion passes.

Students are urged to attend this, and all other meetings of the Senate in order to add much needed input, and also to check up on their representatives to see if they are doing their jobs. The Senate can only work within itself unless outside participation is prevalent.

Tonight's meeting will take place in room 163C of the Campus Center at 7:00 p.m., for those wishing to attend.

Prostitution laws discriminate considered one, and that she does not participate in any vital part of society. Furthermore his practical argument, based on the fact that punishment for customers would result in punishing half the populace is quite a guilty verdict for all men. The Kinsey reports that the actual figures are fairly close to this -70 per cent of all men visit a prostitute at least once.

Laws such as vagrancy, loitering and disorderly conduct are often so vague that any person could be charged under them simply for "looking suspicious". Laws which make it a crime to Be a prostitute are also vague and undefined. In California, the state Supreme Court held that a law charging persons for being a "common drunkard" and "common prostitute" was unConstitutional.

Laws against solicitation by prostitutes are based on individuals' rights to be free from the annoyance of solicitation. However, since solicitation occurs in a public place, to criminalize it is to deny the right of free speech to the prostitutes. Courts have held in other instances that if a person has the opportunity to escape the solicitation, there is no denial of privacy. In the case of solicitation for prostitution, there is ample opportunity for any unwilling mark to escape. In fact, it is generally women, whether prostitutes or not, who suffer attempted solicitation and verbal abuse on the street. The potential violation of a man's right to privacy by a prostitute's attempted solicitation cannot compare with the violations which women suffer everyday in walking down the street.

Student support parks bill

By NORMA FRIEDMAN
Staff Reporter

A contingent of approximately 40 UMass students traveled to Boston in a show of support for Senate Bill 1003, which would allow cities and towns to legally operate self-supporting park and recreation services, without need for appropriations from the local tax levy.

"This bill would prevent commencement or continuation of illegal procedures by public officials in the delivery of fee oriented recreation activities including such things as private checking accounts or special funds," according to the Massachusetts Recreation and Park Society.

The Senate Local Affairs Committee decided to set up a subcommittee to amend the bill.

Joel Dalton, a leisure studies and services major, testified before the Committee in support of the bill. He suggested the bill would free funds for the establishment of more jobs.

Dr. Larry Klar, Assistant Professor of the Department of Leisure Studies and Services, who accompanied the Leisure Studies and Services majors and Park Administration majors on the trip, said, "This bill will permit municipal recreation and park departments of offer fee-based recreation programs throughout the year. At present, these programs can be [illegible]"

Psssssst, look here

By PAUL LOGUE

The world may be void of all life by the year 2000 if aerosol cans are not immediately banned, according to an article in March 7, 1975 New Times magazine.

F. Sherwood Rowland, UCLA chemistry Professor, discovered that the fluorocarbons released by the aerosol cans rise up into the atmosphere where they work to destroy the ozone net which covers the earth. Ozone protects life on earth from harmful ultraviolet rays transmitted from the sun.

This discovery has been confirmed by three other groups, Harvard, the University of Michigan, and the National Center for Atmospheric Research. The threat is bad enough but research for a cure has not even begun. In fact, since it is a world-wide problem, nobody has put pressure on the government except DuPont, who is the world's largest producer of fluorocarbons. Business is so good that DuPont is building a new 100 dollar plus factory in Corpus Christi, Texas that will double the company's output by the 1980's.

Says DuPont's division manager Raymond L. McCarthy, "I have faith in the biosphere acting to preserve life."

With the Ozone not slowly wearing thin and the UltraViolet waves entering the atmosphere at a greater flow, the number of skin cancer deaths may rise by [illegible] in one year and 150,000 more may contract the disease. This year the production of the aerosols will increase 10 percent. What can be done?

A Federal Interagency Task Force on the Inadvertent Modification of the Stratosphere meets in Washington on February 27 but, according to the New Times, no action is expected. Each year we wait, more while more people face possible doom. Pretty scary, eh?

You can make a difference! Write, cable, or call your Congressman, Representative or anyone else who makes our laws for us and voice your concern about the issue. The world will not wait.

Dancing as art

To the Editor:

Presently, in the Five College Area, the various Dance Clubs, are situated within the P.E. Depts. of the colleges. This means that in order for a student to have a major in Dance, he or she must major in P.E. with a concentration in Dance. It is my opinion that Dance cannot realize its full potential within the P.E. department. Dance is a fine art. It has been a fine art throughout history, and it continues to be one now. Why must we put a fine art in the P.E. dept.? Dance works very close in conjunction with all the other arts, theatre in particular. A dancer must learn how to act, how to project, how to capture an audience. Composition and line are as important to the dancer as they are to a sculptor, or painter. Although it is true that dance involves physical exercise, the dancer does not want to project physical exercise on stage. The dancer dances, performs, presents an artistry as perfected as he or she can make it. Whether modern, ballet, or jazz the dance is a fine and necessary art, and should be accepted as such. Let's get it where it belongs, so it can grow and expand within our Five College community.

Unjust ticketing?

To the Editor:

This letter concerns one specific incident, but the implications and the moral questions raised by that incident are more far reaching than the incident, when taken out of context, is by itself.

The incident referred to in the above paragraph concerns the ticketing of a car while it was parked in front of MacKimmie [illegible] on Sunset Avenue. It was parked in a "no parking zone," we do not plan to dispute that. The car was located on the near side of the road directly in front of the MacKimmie main doors.

The time was approximately 3 p.m., and the mothers of the children attending the Third World Day School were, as they have been doing for several semesters now, arriving to take their pre-schoolers home for the day. This day, no different than any other school day, saw several cars parked on the wrong side of the street.

The reasoning behind parking on the wrong side of the street stems from the fact that doing this eliminates the possibility of a serious mishap befalling one of the children. Young children, after being released from a "confinement" such as school, have a habit of expending pent up energy by running. If the cars were parked on the opposite side of the street, then some day one child might run across to the car and be struck by another vehicle driving by.

Nevertheless, the woman was given a ticket for her "illegal act." All this occurred this past Monday afternoon.

Another relevant incident occurred earlier in the school year. A man came out of MacKimmie with a child in each arm, and he was greeted by an Amherst town policeman ticketing his car. His vocal objections were not heard.

As one distraught with anxiety once said [illegible], "What's going on here?" The issue here seems to us to be something much deeper than parking regulations.

The issue seems to us to be a matter of a lack of human respect, consideration and common sense. Cars are being ticketed, they have been ticketed and they will continue to be ticketed unless some enlightened minds reflect and come up with a solution to the problem.

Are the cars being ticketed because of a quota system employed by the Amherst police department that people are not aware of? If so, no solution would present a workable answer to the problem. Dismissing that possibility, we present the following solution.

Arrange for parents of children in the Third World Day School to be given stickers allowing them to park in front of the dorm during designated hours of the morning and the afternoon. The police would then be able to judge whether or not the cars involved had a valid reason for parking where they did.

Save Red River Gorge

To the Editor:

Hi, I'm Larry Leach. I'm from Kentucky and I'm up here visiting the five college area. I was wondering if I could get your help on an environmental issue facing the people of Kentucky and also the people of the United States. There's an area in Eastern Kentucky known as the Red River Gorge. It is one of the most uniquely wild areas in the country. The Gorge is so beautiful that it has been called the "The Grand Canyon of the East." However, because of pork and barrel politics, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, one of the biggest destroyers of the environment in the U.S., wants to build a dam on the Red River which would flood and destroy 80 per cent of the Gorge area.

Thousands of Kentuckians have been successfully fighting the Red River Gorge Dam since 1967. But the hour is getting late. The Corps, after years of court injunctions against it, plans to begin construction of the dam sometime this year. Yet, there is hope. Kentucky has a new governor. He has not made his position on the dam known yet. If he comes out against the dam then most likely the Corps will not build the dam because in the past when a governor opposes a Corps project in his or her state, then the Corps does not continue the project. This is where your help is needed.

Please write Governor Julian Carroll, Frankfort, Kentucky, [that's all the address you need] and tell him that you have read about the Red River Gorge and all its beauty and that it is a national environmental treasure and that it should be preserved. Urge him to oppose the dam. Your letters to the Governor from this area would do very much to impress upon him that the Red River Gorge is also a nation-wide concern. Please write today. Time is of the essence. Your letter will undoubtedly have a big effect upon him and his final decision.

For more information on the Red River Gorge write the Louisville Audubon Society, [illegible] Windward Way, Louisville, Kentucky [illegible]. Thank you.

Why waste time?

To the Editor:

Today I received from Whitmore a [illegible] set of instructions and a 10" x 12" form to fill out, accounting for the way I spend my time as a faculty member. Last Fall I went along with this request on a one-shot basis, but I won't do it again.

My working day is from 8 to 6; my lunch is usually a sandwich and a cup of tea at my desk; the hours of reading I must do each day to maintain the competence for which I was hired is done at night; I spend several hours almost every weekend trying to keep up with the responsibilities of my job. The work week is appreciably less than that put in by my younger colleagues — I can no longer maintain their pace. I will not waste even 5 minutes of my life trying to decipher these instructions or filling out the form. If this refusal is considered dereliction of duty by the administration, trustees or legislature, then we can fight it out in a suitable forum. I would rather spend my time fighting such asininity than being subservient to it.

AID increases US influence

To the Editor:

The recent Collegian commentary "The Property of Education" by Victor Gomes points up the traditional function of university education. The Center for International Education's AID grant to develop educational programs in Asia, Latin America, and Africa is part of a much larger AID program to implement educational measures in these areas which will solidify the United States' hold on the people and physical resources of the areas. Now that overt U.S. military intervention in other countries is temporarily out of style, efforts are underway to control and manipulate the affairs of nations in much subtler ways. Just as "poverty pimps" in the School of Education stole monies from the Malcolm X College in Chicago, Worcester Model Cities, and the Brooklyn Career Opportunities Program, and learned how to regulate the poor in the process, the Center for International Education hustles for AID money to regulate the poor and oppressed of other countries. If the Center were interested in participating in the liberation struggles now going on in Latin America, Asia, and Africa it might consider calling itself the Center for International Revolution. But, then, under this name I wonder if it would receive funds from the same source linked to the coup in Chile, the strategic hamlet program in South Vietnam, the crushing of the Tupamaros guerillas in Uruguay, etc? The educational interests of any oppressor class lie not in changing the structural reasons for oppression. The 'poverty pimps' and 'foreign aid pimps' Victor Gomes wrote about could also be called 'social pacifiers' though this title is a bit gentler to the ear.

Strangetown, USA

Winthrop is a strange town. We all grew up a little crazy because half of us were missing one or both parents. The other half grew up a little crazy because they thought it was abnormal to have both parents.

Amherst is a strange town. No one here has any parents yet the University powers that exist try to control us. [illegible] UMass tries to tell us where to live, when and where to eat, and what to do. Yet the University is about as strict as the parents of Winthrop. Which means if your alibi is good enough, you can get away with anything.

Winthrop is a strange town. In Winthrop, everyone skips school so they can hang out at the beach to get high.

Amherst is a strange town. In Amherst, everyone skips school so they can hang out at the Campus Center to get high.

If anyone from Winthrop is insane enough to go to college, the crew would nickname them Doctor, because the crew would rather go out and work and then play.

Everyone in Amherst is sane enough to stay in school until they get their doctorate because they know they can't get any work. So they might as well stay here and play.

Provincetown is a strange town. In Provincetown everyone is concerned with their own liberation. While no one in P-town is totally free, they are at least cheap.

Amherst is a strange town. In Amherst, everyone is concerned with everyone else's liberation. While everyone in Amherst has their price, they try to come off as being free.

Mostly everyone in Provincetown is collecting welfare benefits.

Mostly everyone here in Amherst is collecting scholarship money or Veteran's benefits.

Tijuana is a strange town. But at least you can barter with the merchants so they don't rip you off for as much as they would like to.

Amherst is a strange town. There's very little competition for the local merchants, so they can try and rip you off for as much as possible.

Caracas is a weird town. In the midst of some of the most beautiful beaches in the world lies an American monstrosity, a Sheraton Hotel. Yet, the people who stay there and don't venture out into the countryside actually think they've seen Venezuela.

Amherst is a strange town. In the midst of some of the most beautiful farmland in Massachusetts lies a state monstrosity, UMass. The people who stay there, or perhaps venture out as far as Fulton Village actually claim to live in the Valley.

It seems as though all the towns that I lived in and/or visited have been strange towns. But the strangest place that I've ever been has been Amherst. For it seems that Amherst is just a conglomerate microcosm of them all.

Think about it.

Homo-Mechanicus

I am troubled; troubled because you are not. I am troubled because you don't care, you don't give a damn. You are passive, irresponsible, meek individuals, fascinated with individualism, materialism, and irrelevance. Your main concern is you; the world be damned. Your life has entered into a pattern of meaningless axioms and norms. You have lost touch with reality; reality has become distant and clouded, your peripheral vision has been all but eliminated. Your goal is success; nothing wrong with that — success is desirable by most. Your definition of success though, is crude, perverse, egocentric, and materialistic. You and only you — nobody else. Achieve your success by stepping on the back of a stranger, a friend, a neighbor, perhaps your brother or sister. You just don't care.

You have become highly elaborate robots, controlled by outside forces (you know the forces, I don't have to list them). Automation fascinates you, and so do the "sciences." Is it because your future belongs with the sciences? You may like History or Anthropology but what kind of future is in them? Not much is there? So, you "wisely" determine that perhaps you should study Biochemistry, or Nuclear Physics, or Industrial Engineering. That is where the future is. That is where the money is. You dream, empty dreams with no essence. Success — graduation, a managerial position, your own business some day, a family, the suburbs, church on Sundays, retirement at 65, Florida, the sun, perhaps involvement with charity organizations to lighten your guilty consciousness, senility, Nursing Home, death. Success?

You are fools, too blind to see the real world, too [illegible] to lend a helping hand, too automated, [illegible], too preoccupied with materialism and absurdity. You think that you have everything under control, but you are asleep and you don't know it. You are sleeping and your life is floating by you.

You despise ideals because you are too inactive to transform them into reality. Democracy? An ideal. Freedom? An ideal. Equality? An ideal. Values with an essence have become ideals, materialism and religion have become accepted norms.

You are satisfied because you are good liberals — you pride yourselves with opposing war, racism, oppression. Bullshit. You support these vile practices. You support them by allowing the institutions which encourage and practice them to exist. You allow them to exist because you are weak children, because you have no ideals. Yes, you good liberals, you might even buy, and perhaps glance over, Marxist literature, and there is a remote possibility that you have heard something about (gasp), Anarchism. It is fashionable nowadays to have some Marxist books on your bookshelves. You don't read them, but nonetheless, they look good.

You are hypocrites, reactionaries, unaware of the distinction between essence and superficiality. Your castle is the Bluewall, your domain is your half of your room. You cannot reach out because you are tied down, but you are too drunk with the nectar of egocentricity to realize your imprisonment. Your chains are huge, but you cannot see them, you cannot feel them. They are there.

I see you all around me — carefree, unconcerned with the plight of your fellow human beings, and saturated with empty values. You surround me, and you are suffocating me. I despise you for what you are, and the institutions responsible for your present state.

I wonder what you are thinking by now. Perhaps you think that I have been too general, too vague, too unfair, too pessimistic. Perhaps I am doing you injustice by accusing you of apathy, passiveness, and reaction. Yes, perhaps I am doing you injustice. Perhaps the term "You" which appears throughout this article does not apply in your case. I really, and honestly, hope that I am wrong — dead wrong. I hope that my outlook is vain and inapplicable. I hope that you are not associated with the "You" of the article. If that is the case, then send your response to this paper. Cut me down, destroy my hypothesis, prove me wrong. Prove me wrong and believe me, I will be the happiest man on the campus.

Come on people, prove me wrong — please prove me wrong.

Elevator etiquette

"They should put music in here," I said.

Everybody looked at me.

"Yes," I said, "that's what they should do."

Everybody looked at me.

I put my hands in my pockets and stared at the numbers. "Oh, well," I muttered.

How should one act in an elevator? Really now — what would Dear Abby have to say? What are proper elevator manners?

My friend Fraser tells me to jump in the air before the elevator stops at the floor. "It's a rush!" he says.

There does seem to be a certain ritual involved in taking an elevator — a ritual that always varies with the situation. People develop their own little elevator habits concerning where they stand and what they do. Some take a commanding position near the buttons while others resign themselves quietly to a particular corner and yet others shift around to attain various angles and perspectives on the situation.

There are those that crave for elevator solitude so they can perform numerous insidious acts ranging from scribbling graffiti to pissing on walls. Candid Camera would find more entertainment from a John Adams elevator than it would ever be able or allowed to see.

Perhaps UMass should offer a course in Elevator Psychology. Just think...they could open up a new Elevator Studies Department dedicated to answering the question, "What makes those rooms move up and down, anyway?"

Who knows? It might become a new fad — getting into elevators. What next? Maybe Truman Capote and Jackie Onassis will start a new "elevator set."

People would start having "elevator orgies" and the automobile companies could start making nice, large, luxurious elevators, "beautifully designed for comfort and handling."

They could build colossal, three-story elevators that would hold 150 people. Maybe they'd film a disaster movie — "The Towering Elevator," about an elevator moving so fast that it would crash through the roof moments after leaving the ground floor.

President Ford could present new "elevator measures" designed to curb the ever-increasing "elevator crisis." He could address Americans and tell us that climbing stairs is healthy and that he does it all the time. Pickets and bumper sticker manufacturers could find new slogans like, "Elevate Yourself," or "Don't Let Ford Give You the Shaft."

In the long run, UMass could become the leader in the elevator sciences and they could build a new Otis Elevator Hall of Fame right next to the new Kennedy Library. People everywhere would journey to UMass to get their ups and downs.

By now I've worn out the subject of elevators. It's just as well. Most of the elevators around here are pretty worn out, anyhow.

So always remember that life is just a big elevator ride to that last stop in the sky. And the next time you're in one of those little rooms, look around and smile. You might be on Candid Camera.

"Endangered" wolf film tonight

The Long Plain Nature Center and the Outdoor Special Event Committee here will co-sponsor an outstanding film about one of America's most misunderstood endangered species, the wolf. The film will be shown Wednesday evening, February 26th, at the Amherst Junior High Auditorium (7 p.m.) and again at Mahar Auditorium (8 p.m.) on the UMass campus. Some controversy has surrounded the film because of its explicit treatment of reproduction, birth and killing of the animal. Parents are advised not to send young children unaccompanied by an adult.

It is probably true that if the National Film Board of Canada did not exist, it would be necessary to invent it. The environmental films made by our northern neighbors consistently make their American counterparts look unprofessional and superficial by comparison. "Death of a Legend" must easily rank among the three or four "great" movies that examine ecological topics. This is a story of wolves and the mistreatment that have received at the hands of superstitious hunters and up-tight farmers. The wolf is well established in North American folklore (cf. Little Red Riding Hood) as a creature only slightly less deranged and dangerous than a vampire. In reality, only one case of unprovoked wolf attack on a human being has ever been substantiated upon investigation. Wolves, like Indians, were popular scapegoats for the countless fears and uncertainties facing the earliest pioneers. If a hungry settler came upon a mauled deer, he would blame the killing on the wolf. If a rancher's sheep disappeared in the middle of the night, the wolves were immediately suspected of being the culprits. Crops damaged? Fences broken? Children crying? Why, it's the wolves who are responsible, of course.

Even today, in an age of tracking by helicopter and radar devices, the fantasies surrounding the wolf simply will not die. Hundreds of cubs are killed each year by "sportsmen" who point sawed-off shotguns into lairs. In large areas of Canada and the U.S., the wolf is nearly extinct. The film includes some remarkable footage of a mother wolf giving birth and of a cub learning to survive in a hostile world. The camera-work is consistently excellent, the narration is literate and moving, the direction is sharp and lively. "Death of a Legend" cannot be praised too highly. Donations of 75 cents will be collected at the door.

That weekend found a robber wandering from room to room in two dormitories early Saturday morning, pilfering wallets of at least ten students. A stereo worth [illegible] had been stolen the day before from a frat house and a student's car had been taken from a parking lot during inter-term, the newspaper reported.

Campus Security Chief Bill [illegible] is quoted as saying that "There is not only a crime wave, but it's on the upswing."

He added: "If a guy wants to steal something today and he's got the nerve, there's no place better than a college campus...The majority of crimes reported today involve unlocked doors."

STEAK WITH EGGS is the surprise breakfast served students at [illegible] where Saga food service feeds students in their dining commons.

According to The [illegible], the dietary delight was made possible by money saved in a recent program that warned students they were being wasteful. Ten per cent on the cost of food was saved by the awareness program, plus nearly [illegible] a week on napkins alone.

Other savings have been realized on milk, bakery goods and vegetables, according to a Saga spokesman. Whatever savings are realized, he added, "we are going back to the students."

resources and its still young. It will be a tough battle, but with a strong administrative staff, problems will be worked."

Hampshire College has been searching for a new treasurer since last June, when Treasurer Kenneth Rosenthal was named College Secretary. In the interim, Rosenthal has been acting in both capacities at the college. Torrey said he has been considering the move for almost a year.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy said that the selectmen have discussed a nationwide search to seek a successor, although board members made no decisions. She said selectmen will discuss hiring procedures in an open session at future meetings.

Torrey said the Board of Selectmen would not have problems in finding a new town manager but in selecting a town manager among many qualified candidates. "It's not important for the new town manager to be living in Amherst," Torrey said. "I'm more concerned in seeing them hire someone who is professionally qualified."

HANG GLIDING

Instructor Bob Judd gives Dick Leonard on the ground training.

Since the beginning of time, man has been obsessed with a desire to fly, and now, with the right wind and a steep hill, it is possible. Hang gliding, the art of flying feet off the ground down a mountainside has become the latest fad on the nations slopes.

Running or skiing down a hill, holding a 35 pound aluminum frame kite, then leaping into the air with expectations of flying is what hang gliding is all about.

Before one takes to the air, there is first a series of films and discussions on physics and aerodynamics in preparation for the first attempt. Then, once on the hill, the hardest part is carrying the kite properly without getting blown over by the wind. Once this is mastered, the first time hang glider tries his maiden flight which more often than not ends [illegible] face down in the snow. But with a little coordination and alot of concentration one can easily find himself sailing gracefully through the air, free and frightened for life.

Said one novice glider "You just ski down the hill and when you hit the right speed, the wind lifts you almost straight up. It's really fun."

When asked about the danger involved, the aspiring flier said, "I'll try anything twice, I'm going back next weekend."

Unfortunately there are still a few bugs to be worked out. Such things as collapsing kites, changing winds and [illegible] often hamper even the most experienced of gliders.

Boog Powell to Cleveland

MIAMI (UPI) — Boog Powell, the American League's most valuable player in 1970 and the second all-time leading home run hitter in Baltimore history, was traded to the Cleveland Indians Tuesday in a four-player swap that brought catcher Dave Duncan to the Orioles.

Don Hood, a promising left-handed pitcher, also went to the Indians in the deal while the Orioles received minor league outfielder Alvin McGrew, who will report to their Rochester Farm Club in the International League.

The trade reunites Powell with former teammate Frank Robinson, now the manager of the Indians. The two sluggers were teammates for six seasons at Baltimore and averaged 56 homers per year between them.

"I like the deal," said Robinson. "Hood will be given a chance to start and I think he could also be valuable in the bullpen. The trade also gives us a set lineup. With Powell at first base and John Ellis behind the plate, we have solidified two positions."

Powell hit 303 home runs in his [illegible] years with the Orioles and ranks second to Brooks Robinson in six different club offensive categories. His best season was the Orioles' world championship year of 1970 when he hit 35 homers and drove in 114 runs to win league MVP honors. He has played in four different world series, five American League Championship series and three times was chosen as the starting first baseman in the All-Star Game.

However, the big first baseman's power declined sharply the last two seasons and in 1974 he played in fewer games, 110, and had the lowest RBI total, 45, of his career. He hit 12 home runs, which was just one more than his all-time low in 1973.

Bruins top Penguins, 6-4

BOSTON (AP) — The slumping Boston Bruins came to life with a flurry of third period goals by Carol Vadnais, Hank Nowak and Andre Savard for a 6-4 National Hockey League victory over the Pittsburgh Penguins Tuesday night.

Pittsburgh has not beaten the Bruins in 19 straight games at Boston Garden since Jan. 28, 1968, the Penguins' first year in the league.

Jean Pronovost got his 33rd goal of the season to give Pittsburgh a 1-0 lead in the first period and the Bruins played catch-up hockey for most of the night.

Gregg Sheppard tied it up in the first period but Rick Kehoe and Bob Kelly rallied in quick scores to put the Penguins in front 3-1. Don Marcotte and Terry O'Reilly scored to tie the game again, but Lew Morrison scored his second goal of the season to give Pittsburgh a 4-3 lead going into the third period.

Vadnais then scored on a power play, Nowak tallied in a Vadnais rebound to put Boston ahead and Savard canned a pass from O'Reilly for the insurance tally.

Cowens may be missed

BOSTON (AP) — Star center Dave Cowens of the Boston Celtics suffered a severe spasm of his upper back on Tuesday and may be lost to the National Basketball Association club for a couple of games.

A Celtics spokesman said Cowens had been bothered by a lower back ailment for about 10 days and was injured Tuesday during practice at Christian Academy in Lexington.

X-rays of his back showed no broken bones, and Cowens was given ice treatment after being examined by team physician Dr. Tom Silva. The center was to begin heat treatments Wednesday.

The Celtics said a decision on Cowens' playing against the New York Knicks at Boston Garden on Wednesday night will be made at game time.

Cowens missed the first 17 games of the season after breaking a bone in his left foot. The team's record was 9-8 when he joined it, and now stands at 42-18.

He has shot [illegible] from the floor against the Knicks, sinking 43 of 82 shots and averaging 25.6 [illegible] against the old rivals.

John Havlicek also has scored on 41 of 92 shots from the floor against New York, with an 18.8-point average.

Pucksters are primed with pride on line

With only their pride on the line, the UMass skaters close out the season tonight against Division II powerhouse Merrimack at Orr Rink at 8:00 p.m.

The Minutemen's hope for a playoff berth went down the drain with Saturday night's last minute loss to Boston State. They will be trying to avenge a 10-3 wipeout by Merrimack in December.

Merrimack, with a 20-2 Division II record and the top seed in the upcoming playoffs, skates four solid lines, four pairs of defensemen, and has one of the best goalies in the East.

Merrimack goalie, Bill Pieri, was a pre-season All-American choice. His goals against average has risen over a goal this year to 3.51. But this can be attributed to the free-wheeling hockey his team has played in front of him. Merrimack, has scored 167 goals so far this season, thirty more goals than any other team in the Division.

Tonight will be the final collegiate game for four Minutemen. Steve Nims, John Muse, Mike Ellis, and Bob Quinlan will be donning the UMass uniform for the last time.

Bruce Gledhill will replace the injured Dana Redmond in the nets for the Minutemen. Redmond, along with the team scoring leader, Chris Lamby, and the White twins, Bill and Bob, turned in exceptional performances in their freshman season.

Five grapplers paced the UMass wrestling team to a 22-16 win over the Naval Academy Preparatory School last night in Boyden Gym.

Falls from Kevin Griffin at 150 pounds and Dennis Fenton at heavyweight assured the Minutemen of their final victory in five tries at home this season. The NAPS is a team composed of wrestlers who are boosting their grades in order to enter the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland. Consequently they are strong and well conditioned and were the type of team that would keep UMass sharp for the upcoming New Englands this weekend.

NAPS swept the next three bouts as Frank Kenney, Bob Spaulding, and Greg Scanlon lost one or two point decisions at 167, 177 and 190 respectively.

Heavyweight Dennis Fenton gives more indication every time he wrestles that there is no stopping him in his quest to defend his New England title and advance his position as a national calibre wrestler. He pinned NAPS John Snyder in 1:15 seconds with a single leg takedown that he turned into a Turk ride pin combination. (see photo)

'Words to the Whys'

Over the past couple of weeks, the Collegian has run a series of articles by Mike Kneeland on basketball rules — depicting sometimes tricky situations and then telling just why and how officials handle them.

Since I'm a basketball writer (no snickers) and all, the series has been of interest to me, and I've literally thrilled to the exploits of such players as A1, B1, and the redoubtable Mr. B2. However, it must be noted that Kneeland himself is a referee (his idol being the NBA's atrocious Mark [illegible]) and is therefore — as a person — to be despised and ridiculed.

Anyways, I'd like to know if you, Joe and Joanne Fan, have properly read and digested Kneeland's treatises—not to mention the rulebook. Hence, this multiple choice quiz:

Ex-deans salary cut

By CHRISTINE DILLARD
MDC Staff

The four deans who recently resigned from the School of Education will receive cuts in salary of 15 per cent or more, the Collegian learned yesterday.

"The preparations are in the works, and the details will be worked out and confirmed in discussions with them," Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs, Robert L. Gluckstern said in a telephone interview last night. He added the cuts were related to the standard reduction which results from going to a 9 month salary from a 12 month salary, but were not simply that.

The deans are presently tenured faculty at the School of Ed. Dwight Allen is on sabbatical in Africa where he is starting a teachers college.

The other former deans affected by the cuts are Atron Gentry, formally Associate Dean, Earl Seidman, formerly acting dean, and Robert Suzuki formerly dean.

Faculty rights in danger

By HILLARY MARTICK
Staff Reporter

University faculty could lose rights and responsibilities they now hold, according to a UMass teachers' group, if policies proposed in a recently released report are implemented.

The 28 page report, issued by the Ad hoc Multi-campus Academic Personnel Policies Committee, has run into vocal opposition from the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), a campus affiliate of the Massachusetts Teachers Association. But David Booth, Faculty Senate Secretary, feels the report would merely put into writing policies that already exist.

The twelve month, old committee, formed at the request of UMass President Robert C. Wood, is comprised of ten members: two professors and an administrator from the Amherst campus, and seven others from the University administration and the two other campuses.

An MSP notice to faculty members cited the "far-reaching and grave significance" of the proposed document.

The notice alerted faculty to some of the "implications" contained in the document:

—the elimination of "a program of instruction or an entire department" and the firing of all faculty within the program or department by the Board of Trustees and the President.

—the substitution of "departmental administrative officers" for department heads or chairmen. "By implication and usage in the document, departmental administrative officers will be agents of the administration."

—the reduced authority of the faculty's elected Grievance Committee, "with corresponding increase in administrative power", and the elimination of that committee's right of appeal.

—the nullification of personnel in all existing governance documents.

—the removal of areas of faculty 'primary responsibility' as defined in a major governance document.

—the adoption of "institutional need" as a criterion for academic appointment and reappointment.

MSP President and English department chairman Joseph Frank commented, "The thing I find so upsetting about this document is that it gives the President the power to define our institutional needs."

An MSP meeting will be held at 4:30 p.m., March 5 in the Campus Center "to help formulate a strong faculty response to the proposed policy document," according to the MSP notice.

Booth, on the other hand, feels that Wood's request for documented policies is "a logical thing for the President's office to want to do."

On behalf of the Faculty Senate, Booth is coordinating a proposed response to the report in consultation with the Senate Rules Committee, Academic Personnel Policy Committee, and the Grievance Committee.

"This document is significant," said Booth, "in that it will affect the interests of the entire faculty. Although it has been initiated by the Ad hoc committee, life can't be breathed into it unless the Senate acts on it."

Senate denies added power to treasurer

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate defeated a motion last night which would allow the treasurer to make category changes in existing accounts and categories when he deemed necessary.

The main opposition to the motion was that it gave too much power to the treasurer.

A move to authorize the treasurer to freeze all accounts when he deems necessary due to a reflection of poor financial standing, was tabled to next week. This was due to an unfavorable committee report and the absence of the Senate treasurer.

Student unionization was seen as having no legal obstacles for Doug Phelps, Student Organizing Project Coordinator, who stated a policy enabling students to create a student union would show the trustees that the students want to unionize.

The Budget Committee reported that since the University is in an austerity year all funds should be used as effectively as possible to cut the fee as much as possible. The projected fee for next year is [illegible] per student per year.

A ruling was made by the Student Attorney General, Cindy [illegible] stating that a senator elected from an area, who moves from that area cannot represent his old living area. All senators must represent the area that they are currently living in.

The commuter assembly election results of February 18 and 19, were contested, since less than 2.2 per cent of the commuters voted in the election. Poor advertising and improper representation were the reasons cited for the poor turnout. A decision on this was tabled until next week.

The Academic Affairs Committee reported approximately 50,000 dollars could be saved if the Rhetoric Department was dispersed into the Communication Studies, English, and Theatre Departments. Also suggested was limiting the requirement to three credits.

'Universal fee' dilemma

Gage will accept student input

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage said last night at a Commuter Assembly meeting he would work with "any group of students who would participate in a systematic evaluation" of the student resource fee.

Gage said no set fee has been decided upon and options are being explored. "The best solution," he added, "seemed to be one fee for incoming students, and a smaller fee for students who are already here, but we discovered legally this would not stand up."

Gage said the alternatives were to make extensive budget cuts with a resource fee of about [illegible] per year for all students, to make more extensive cuts and charge a [illegible] resource fee, or to begin the fee with incoming students and charge about [illegible] per year.

[illegible] said, "Students should decide where the administration will make cutbacks, because it's difficult to have a department cut its own staff. It's like asking the White House to investigate itself."

"In order to do this," he added, "we need the salaries, programs, and job descriptions of all administration employees so we can make our own program."

Gage said this information is available in the library.

John O'Keefe, a spokesman for the assembly, said, "If students are living at home why should they have to pay a resource fee?"

Gage said people who live off campus can best afford the fee.

Larry Gendron, former president of the assembly, said, "Some students that live off campus, married students for example, cannot afford this fee. If we're going to have a resource fee, certain people should be exempt. Otherwise the fee will be discriminatory."

Gage asked the group for alternative suggestions. "With any plan you can think of," he added, "some groups will suffer."

Mike Costa, an employee of the Commuter Assembly, said, "You're looking at one proposal without enough input. It's like having only one dress in the window."

"The purpose of the resource fee," Gage said, "is to reduce dorm fees by [illegible] to [illegible]. This would make voluntary dorm living possible, by making residential halls financially competitive with outside living facilities."

Gage said the residential halls are not financially competitive now because they must be built to State specifications, which create different construction costs than outside facilities, and because their fee structure is different.

"With the resource fee," he added, "the table will be turned. (In [illegible]) campus living will be cheaper than off campus living. If dorm living is going to be voluntary we must make residential halls attractive."

Gage said the administration plans to increase renovations. Instead of renovating one dorm per year, they would like to renovate two dorms per year. "With 60 dorms, we'd make a cycle once every half a century."

Gage said he would like dormitory living to be voluntary, but before we do this, we must make sure there are no adverse effects on Amherst. "If we turn thousands of students loose on Amherst, the rent will increase," he added.

"The few people who have filed suit to get off campus," he said, "have muddied the water. It is important that the change is made in an orderly way, and not in the form of a [illegible]."

Allen Torrey's decison

Hampshire College delighted

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Hampshire College administrators are delighted about Town Manager Allen Torrey's acceptance of treasury position at the college while Amherst town officials lament his resignation from town management.

Charles Longsworth, president of Hampshire College, said he "was pleased that the college was obtaining Torrey's services" while Kenneth Rosenthal, secretary of Hampshire College, commented "he (Torrey) is an excellent choice for the college."

Michael Sullivan, chairman of the board of selectmen, said he was "both happy and sad" to hear about Torrey's resignation. "It came as a surprise," he said, "we had no idea he was thinking about leaving."

Gerald Grady, UMass community relation coordinator, said Torrey had done an excellent job in managing Amherst and in working with the University.

"Allen Torrey is an old friend, I'm pleased and proud of his work at Amherst. Amherst is the best managed town in the U.S.," he said. Grady, who knew Torrey when he was town manager of Camden, Maine, said Torrey's decision to take the post at Hampshire was "personal" but he is "pleased Torrey is staying in Amherst."

Allen Torrey in his office after announcing his resignation as Amherst's town manager. He moves on to assume the position of Treasurer at Hampshire College.

Torrey announced Tuesday he was resigning from his 21-year old administrative position as town manager of Amherst to become treasurer at Hampshire College.

Sullivan said he does not expect the town to encounter any difficulties in hiring a new town manager. "We expect to receive a 100 applications. This is considered as a top position in the country because of Amherst's strong town charter which gives the town manager much authority," he said.

Sullivan said another enticing quality to the position is the salary. "The salary is competitive with similar positions around the country," he said.

Steve Schaffer, assistant town manager, will be acting at temporary town manager until someone is found to replace Torrey when he leaves May 1.

Torrey will be moving from the responsibility of handling the Town's present $4.34 million operating budget to a post at Hampshire College in which he will oversee the college's $6.99 million budget.

He assumes the post at a time when the school is in a period of "belt-tightening."

In an earlier interview, Torrey said in these financially trying times balancing Hampshire College's budget would be a tough battle, but with a strong administrative staff, problems would be worked out."

Garvey—students must play more active role

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

Robert Garvey, one of three candidates running for selectman, views students as a resource and never thought students would take over the town.

He said the student senate should take more of an active role in recommending students for committees to the board of selectmen.

If more students become involved, communication will be improved between the students and the town and the "threat disappears" said Garvey.

He said it was mostly the older town residents who have been here a long time that view students as a threat.

One issue of concern to many students is housing, and Garvey said he feels that rent control has a possibility of passing in the state legislature because of the "uniqueness of the town." He added that he would endorse rent control, but "its hard to say if it's necessary".

If 1200 students are coming off campus then that will dictate some kind of rent control, he said.

According to the rent control law, it can only apply to cities over 50,000.

Garvey said if he is re-elected to serve the three year term, he will propose a plan whereby the university would pay for "contracted services". Contract services would cover fire services rendered and use of the town's lock-up facilities.

However, he said he was "not overly confident that these problems will be that easy to iron out, they're dollar and cents problems."

He said if the town doesn't receive additional revenues from the university or the state legislature "very soon," Amherst will be faced with a "large tax increase."

Another problem Amherst has to reckon with is the aftermath of UMass' growth in recent years.

Garvey said "Amherst was very inactive in planning and preparing for growth, it was not a question that the university was growing to 26,000 — no one wanted to face the issue."

Garvey, 37, lives at 51 Blue Hills Road with his wife and two children. He is a teacher in the South Hadley school system.

Emily Dickinson house—a museum?

By HEIDE STEPNO
Staff Reporter

Ellsworth Barnard, an Amherst English professor, says he would like to see the Emily Dickinson house converted into a public museum.

The house, located at 180 Main St., Amherst, was designated a national historic site in 1963. Here she wrote all by five of her remaining poems and her letters. Her home provided her with a refuge against society and her friends.

Amherst College purchased the home from Rev. and Mrs. Hervey Parke late in 1964. Since then it has become primarily a faculty residence. However it is open to visitors by appointment each week.

Barnard, who has always found her poetry a joy to teach, was shocked to discover the house was open to the public by appointment only.

Barnard feels he does not stand alone when he says, "Dickinson is the greatest women poet who has every lived." Therefore, he said, it is not unreasonable to request that the Dickinson homestead be changed into a national museum, which would be open to visitors daily, alleviating the need for a prior appointment made through the office of the Secretary of Amherst College.

He has approached Amherst College with his idea but it never went beyond the discussion stage. According to him, "Amherst College won't get involved, due to the cost of these renovations."

He realizes that converting the Dickinson house to a museum and also a resource library would cost a great deal; an estimated 11 million. Barnard does not expect Amherst College to be responsible for this great a financial burden. Rather he respects the college for having assumed ownership of the house and making possible even the present limited measure of access by the public.

Barnard is optimistic about the possibilities of obtaining money necessary for his proposal. He suggested that perhaps private foundations, the townspeople, an historical or a group of English teachers might contribute to the project.

Law enforcement discriminates against the prostitute

By ELLEN GAVIN

Progressive News Service

This is the second part of a four part series on the legal aspects of prostitution. Part One contained the discriminatory nature of the laws which affect prostitutes. The laws as they now exist are not enforced against the prostitute's customer, which seems blatantly discriminatory. The lawr are vague and undefined, and they appear to violate personal rights of privacy and free speech.

If the laws on their face are discriminatory, the enforcement of the laws can only be reflective of this fact.

PART TWO:

The discriminatory nature of the enforcement of existing laws against prostitution is even greater evidence of the bad faith on the part of the legal system toward prostitutes. There is a vast gap, even in those states where there are laws to punish customers between the treatment of the prostitute and the treatment of her client, under the law.

In New York City, for example, the prosecutor is calling for stronger penalties against prostitutes; he is trying to invoke the maximum sentence, 90 days in jail, in place of the usual fine or 10 days in jail. The customers, or "johns" are not arrested: in 1968 there were 112 customers arrested, as compared with 8000 prostitutes. In Washington, D.C., a solicitation statute was declared unconstitutional because of discriminatory enforcement. Male undercover agents, intended to arrest prostitutes, did so successfully, but female undercover agents, intended to arrest

Cable TV to become accessible to public

By BRIAN COYNE
Staff Reporter

An ad hoc committee of Amherst citizens proposed to the Town of Amherst Cable Advisory Committee II the preliminary blueprint of an independent television access center.

The proposed access center would oversee operation of the public access channel, which will begin operation in June, on the Amherst cable television system.

A public access channel is required by the Federal Communications Commission for any cable television franchise operating in the top 50 television markets. The Boston-Worcester market includes Amherst. The franchise operator must provide facilities, equipment, a technician and at least five minutes of free air time to any individual or community organization that asks for it.

John Fischer, an employee of the Student Organizing Project, introduced the proposal, saying, "There must be some means of insuring that people get access." He said the center would be completely independent of the cable operator.

The proposed center would consist of a coordinator to carry out the daily operation of the channel, a support committee of about 10 workshop members who would advise the coordinator on policy and operational matters, and any other interested community members. Support committee members could serve terms of no longer than six months during one calendar year.

John O'Keefe, president of the UMass Commuter Assembly, said the proposed center was organized in such a way as to preclude the possibility of any one individual or organization controlling the center.

Pete Wallace, also of the Commuter Assembly, said another meeting for all community people interested in forming the center would be held within the next two weeks. He said much work had to be done to set up the center before the new license goes into effect in June.

The license of the present cable operator in Amherst, Pioneer Valley Cablevision, expires on June 3. A provisional license will be granted at that time, with a final license to be granted in July 1967. The license will be in effect for eight years.

The Cable Advisory Committee has already submitted a report to the Board of Selectmen. It is now holding public meetings to solicit citizen response to the idea of public access television. The deadline for franchise applications is March 17, with a public hearing on all of the applications scheduled for March 26.

Several committee members raised the question of how public access television would be funded. John Caldwell, committee member and general manager of WGBY from Springfield (Ch. 57), estimated that the minimum investment to set up a facility would be about $50,000, and that the franchise operator might only be required to provide $10,000. "Where is the rest of the money to come from?" he asked.

Committee member Charles Keenan noted that present subscribers to cable television would probably be faced with higher monthly charges with public access in effect. "If you get access, someone will have to pay for it," he said.

Proposal defeated in SW, special committee formed

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Southwest Assembly defeated a proposal Tuesday to allocate $100 to fund a self-defense colloquium at the group's weekly meeting in Hampden Student Center, according to Craig Sanderson, assembly president.

The funds would have been used to pay the instructor "but there was a potential from students to do it free," Sanderson said.

The Assembly also decided to form a special committee to develop policy guidelines for the funding of Southwest courses and colloquia with the Student Activities Tax.

A Southwest Voter Registration Task Force was formed by the Assembly after the Student Government Association requested that such a force be established in the area. It is the responsibility of this task force to encourage eligible student voters to register with the town of Amherst by initiating a voter registration drive.

According to Michael Sullivan, chairman of the Amherst Board of Selectmen, very few UMass students are registered to vote.

In order to be more aware of Amherst's proposals affecting students, Southwest Assembly voted to establish a liaison committee with the town. This resolution was backed by the Student Government Association.

Finally, the Assembly approved the rental of its studio camera for the remainder of the 1974-75 basketball season to the Student Video Project.

Wounded Knee

Banks to review status

By ELLEN GAVIN
Progressive News Service

Dennis Banks, co-founder of the American Indian Movement (AIM) and participant in the 1973 Indian occupation of Wounded Knee, will open the three day Wounded Knee Anniversary Symposium with a speech in the Campus Center Auditorium at 8:00 tonight.

Banks is a forty-two year old Chippewa who is recognized internationally as a spokesperson for the Indian struggle.

He and Russell Means were the first of six AIM leaders to go on trial on a 10-count conspiracy indictment which arose out of the takeover of the Wounded Knee hamlet on the Pine Ridge reservation on February 27, 1973.

The nine-month trial of the two leaders ended last October when presiding Judge Nichol dismissed all charges against the two leaders because of what he called "the misconduct on the part of the United States Government, misconduct on the part of the Department of Justice, the [illegible] of the FBI, and the [illegible] of the [illegible] the United States Attorney."

Facilities inadequate now

Finances plague Fine Arts Center

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

The Fine Arts Center (FAC) is not yet fully equipped to handle all types of cultural performances, causing complications for upcoming events planned by the Fine Arts Council, according to Allen Light, Director of the Council.

"Financial and budget problems are responsible for the lack of equipment," said Frederick Steinway, Manager of the Fine Arts Center.

Steinway says, the financial problems are "tied up" in Boston.

According to Steinway, "every building constructed by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts must have an 'equipment list' drawn up, which describes the types of equipment necessary to the building."

"This list," Steinway said, "is then submitted to the State, and subsequently when funds are available the money is allocated to the University for equipment. In the case of the FAC, it was necessary to make two lists, one for furnishings, office supplies, etc. The second list, referred to as Contract II includes specifications for the technical equipment needed as well as the estimated cost of it. The list was drawn up by the architect of the building, Kevin Roche, Dinkeloo & Associates of Hamden, Connecticut," he added.

"Contract II was submitted in October and as of late December, we were advised that the money needed wasn't readily available," said Steinway.

No bids for equipment have been solicited or reviewed at this time because the State cannot legally allow this until the money has been "identified" for the equipment, Steinway said.

"Basic equipment now needed in the Center include technical lighting and electrical hookups. This equipment is very complex and expensive, some of it has to be custom made. It will take months to order, receive and install this equipment. I am sure that it will not be completed by fall," Steinway said.

There are plans for performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Canadian Opera Company. Asked if these performances, which are scheduled for the Center would be moved to another place, such as Bowker Auditorium, Light said, "definitely not." Equipment can be rented, which wouldn't be too expensive — that would serve the purpose, he added.

"Until such time as we are given funds to order equipment, no bids will be solicited and we will operate as effectively as we can with what we have," Steinway said.

Tax cut not likely until June, says Ford

Calls on Congress to unify programs

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (UPI) -- President Ford predicted yesterday that an anti-recession tax cut he had hoped for by mid-March now is likely to be delayed in Congress until June.

But he promised to "keep the pressure on" and credited his attacks on the "dilatory tactics" of the lawmakers with having "elicited more response from Congress than they have shown in the past few years."

Ford was in Florida as part of the national selling campaign which he credited with spurring congressional movement. He arrived here Tuesday and after an afternoon round of golf with Jackie Gleason and Bob Hope, he arranged to fly back to Washington last night.

Repeating his call for a unified Democratic energy and economic program which might be blended with his own, Ford said at a news conference:

"I wish there were a single plan proposed by the majority party of Congress...then we can sit down and negotiate."

Congressional Democrats currently are putting the finishing touches on such a program, and expect to finish it this week.

Meanwhile, the president said, Congress is not making fast enough progress on the tax rebate and tax cut he proposed.

"It could take until June," he said, but added a few moments later that he hoped it would not take that long:

"I hope Congress passes the tax cut before June. I submitted my economic plan on Jan. 15," Ford said. "The House of Representatives has not yet acted. Hearings start in the Senate Finance Committee next week."

He said he had "hoped Congress could act by mid-March...I hope Congress will realize the need for action."

"I intend to keep the pressure on," he said, repeating his oft-stated opposition to gasoline rationing and import allocation. In discussing the economy, Ford said "some experts agree that some bottoming out of increasing unemployment" would take place "in the third or fourth quarter" of this year, but made no firmer predictions than that.

On the subject of Indochina, Ford said the Cambodians will soon run out of ammunition and added, "I think that would be unfortunate."

He said the situation in that country is "very critical," but "if they are able to maintain national integrity until the end of the dry season there is a possibility of negotiations to end the war in Cambodia."

Senate passes emergency funding for bankrupt Penn Central RR

WASHINGTON (UPI) -- The Senate voted yesterday to provide the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad with emergency financial help to prevent it from ceasing operations at the end of the week.

The legislation, already approved by the House, was sent to President Ford for his approval.

The bill provides a [illegible] million authorization in grants and loans to help out the Penn Central and the Erie-Lackawanna railroads. Most of the funds are earmarked for the Penn Central.

The Senate must still approve a House-passed [illegible] million appropriations bill to provide the actual funds needed immediately by the Penn Central.

The bill was approved [illegible] to [illegible] after the Senate voted [illegible] to [illegible] to bypass a power struggle over changing the Senate's filibuster rule.

The [illegible] had stymied the rail bill and it required a two-thirds majority to end all Senate debate and force a vote.

The Transportation Department rushed to the aid of the Penn Central on Monday and Tuesday, providing [illegible] million so that the beleaguered railroad could meet its payroll. But even with the immediate cash flow, trustees of the Penn Central said it would hold them only until the end of the week.

Sen. Vance Hartke, D-Ind., warned the Senate against any further delay, reminding his colleagues that the jobs of [illegible] Penn Central employes were at stake and that every state would be hit by a shutdown.

Hartke said if the Penn Central shut down "the United States will be facing a depression that would make the current situation very attractive," [illegible] a shutdown would skyrocket unemployment to 25 per cent in 30 days.

Meanwhile, the United States Railway Association declared yesterday that re-building deteriorated northeastern railroads will cost more than anticipated, but a scaled-down [illegible]-mile system could become profitable within three years.

However, 16 northeastern and midwestern states must be prepared to either lose or subsidize [illegible] miles of lightly used lines and the federal government must underwrite [illegible] billion in loans over the next [illegible] decades to partially finance the rehabilitation of the freight carriers, the USRA said.

Federal commitment will be as large and will last so long that Congress may want to consider outright purchase of the track of bankrupt lines with private companies operating trains over the federal track, said USRA, a federal agency set up in [illegible] to finance and plan a new railroad system for the East.

Plant says it won't negotiate with Indians

SHIPROCK, N. M. (UPI) -- Fairchild Camera Co. announced yesterday it would negotiate no longer with 45 Indians occupying the company's Navajo reservation plant and gave them until 6 p.m. Sunday to get out or consider the facility closed indefinitely.

The Navajos, armed with rifles and led by American Indian Movement officials, took over the plant Monday and vowed not to leave until their demands concerning health care and hiring practices were met.

Fairchild Vice President Frederick M. Hoar made the deadline announcement a day after a meeting of protesters, tribal officials and company representatives. Tribal officials walked out of those negotiations saying the Indians should be removed forcibly.

Indians inside the plant, later joined by American Indian Movement Chairman John Trudell, asked the Navajo people to give them food and support for a "long stay."

Hoar said the company had decided to pay the Navajo employes still employed by the plant, about 350, through this week even though the occupation closed the electronics assemblying plant.

He said if the occupiers did not leave by Sunday, Fairchild would lay off all remaining employes and close the plant indefinitely. He said the protest was not supported by the Navajo employes at the plant or by the Navajo nation.

"We're asking our people to send in food to us," said spokesman Lorenzo Levaldo, "because we're expecting a long stay here."

Levaldo said the Indians inside the plant now number 45, more than double the 20 who took over the plant.

Wilbur Atcitty, administrative assistant to Navajo Tribal Chairman Peter MacDonald, walked out of a meeting with the company and protesters Tuesday, saying the tribe did not want the protesters to negotiate directly with the company.

Levaldo said the Indians hoped to continue negotiating directly with Fairchild.

The occupiers have demanded the company rehire [illegible] Navajos laid off last week.

Panel hears vet school testimony

Spokesman for Wood hits regional plan

BOSTON (AP) -- A plan for a regional school to educate veterinarians in New England was brought before a state legislative committee yesterday with proponents for the measure packing the hearing room.

Those testifying before the Education Committee in favor of the bill ranged from Dr. Alan D. Ferguson of the New England Board of Higher Education to college students seeking admission to the 19 already crowded veterinary schools in the nation.

The lone opposition to the plan came from a spokesman for Dr. Robert C. Wood, president of the University of Massachusetts.

The matter has been before the New England Governors Conference, with the region's chief executives expressing doubts because of economic uncertainty at a meeting last December.

The bill would locate the school at the abandoned Grafton State Hospital, about 5 miles from Worcester. The 1,000-acre site already has dormitories, kitchen facilities and a power plant.

Dr. Ferguson told the committee members that he had been "reliably informed" that the federal government would finance about 80 per cent of the start up of a veterinary school, and that another 10 per cent might come from private sources.

Under the Grafton plan, participating New England states would share in the cost of operating the facility. Under committee questioning, Dr. Ferguson admitted that states could withdraw their support.

He also said similar bills to that filed in Massachusetts have or would be filed in Connecticut, Rhode Island and New Hampshire. He indicated Vermont had adopted a wait-and-see attitude toward the regional approach.

Dr. George D. Whitney, a veterinarian from Orange, Conn., said it would be too expensive for a single state to finance a veterinary school, but "it becomes realistic if all the states share . . ."

Dr. Philip N. Good of Randolph, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Farm Bureau Federation, said public support for the regional concept was significant. He said he even discouraged some people from coming to testify because of the size of the hearing room. Approximately 100 persons were in the audience.

Donald E. Nicoll, chairman of the joint operations committee of the Land Grant Universities of New England, spoke for Dr. Wood.

Nicoll said his committee concluded that the Grafton proposal was not sound economically or educationally.

He said his group favored an alternative whereby existing schools share resources, in conjunction with a long-term contract plan with existing veterinary schools. Under the contract concept, schools make space available for out-of-state students and the contracting state pays a set fee for each student admitted.

Quincy company fined for improper dumping

BOSTON (AP) -- A Quincy firm paid a $1,500 fine for dumping explosives into the ocean without properly weighting down the containers in an apparent violation of its ocean dumping permit.

The fine, believed to be the first civil penalty levied for such an offense, was assessed against Safety Projects -- Engineering Inc. by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The EPA said yesterday children playing near Strawberry Point in Scituate last Nov. 3 discovered a metal drum containing explosives. The father of one of the youngsters notified authorities.

The company did have a permit to dispose of damaged or defective blasting caps in the ocean, providing the material was encased in concrete in a metal container.

The permit also required that the material be dumped in an area [illegible] nautical miles ([illegible] land miles) northeast of the Boston lightship.

The EPA said the firm dumped several metal barrels last March [illegible] and all were weighted with sand and contained no concrete.

The Coast Guard later found a rusted, broken metal drum containing explosives on Minot's Beach, Scituate. The blasting caps were inside cardboard boxes sealed with paraffin. There was no evidence of concrete, the EPA said.

Arizona defeats ERA as House women split

PHOENIX, Ariz. (UPI) -- Rejection of the Equal Rights Amendment in the Arizona House of representatives produced a sharp split among the 13 women members, who voted 8-5 against it.

Rep. Clare Dunn, D-Tucson, a Catholic nun who voted for the amendment, yesterday accused its opponents of giving the matter "shabby and belittling treatment." On the other hand, Rep. Diane McCarthy, R-Glendale, who voted against it, charged ERA supporters with "bullying, badgering, bribing, and blackmailing tactics."

The vote for rejection Tuesday was [illegible], leaving the amendment still needing the approval of four more states to become part of the Constitution. Thirty-four states have approved so far.

Two of the female opponents in the Arizona House were Democrats and six were Republicans. All five women supporters were Democrats.

Rep. Donna Carlson, R-Mesa, told the House the ERA "would give nothing to women that they don't already have."

But Sister Clare claimed the House Republican leadership forced a floor vote after making sure ERA would be overwhelmingly rejected.

"Many citizens watched the process with astonishment and incredulity," she said. "They saw that the nefarious methods by which a serious piece of legislation could be manipulated were not only operative but quite orthodox under our horse-and-buggy procedures."

Rep. McCarthy said, "I'm a woman and I'm proud of it. I'm a legislator and I'm proud of that, but I'm fed up with bullying, badgering, bribing and blackmailing tactics" of ERA supporters.

State evaders return

BOSTON (UPI) -- Forty draft evaders from Massachusetts have returned under the clemency program of President Ford.

U.S. attorney James N. Gabriel said four more potential applicants are to meet with him this week. He said there were 197 persons eligible for the program, and of that number 71 are listed as fugitives.

The federal clemency program allows draft evaders to return to normal life by performing alternate service instead of being prosecuted as criminals. The program expires on Saturday, but there are efforts underway to extend it.

A Five-College symposium

'Other Voices: The arts and San Francisco'

A Five-College symposium, entitled "OTHER VOICES: THE ARTS AND SAN FRANCISCO 1945-1965", to run from February 28 through March 14, will introduce to the Pioneer Valley a unique collection of artists, dancers, poets, writers and theatre artists. The symposium will be an intensive study of the artists who were the major forces behind what has become known as the San Francisco Renaissance, a highly creative and often controversial artistic movement.

Jack Kerouac, hitchhiking, "beats", Allen Ginsberg, San Francisco are all words that evoke in most minds a vague memory of a past era, a time, more than twenty years past, when an upheaval of arts and cultural focus took place in America. No matter how obscurely that time is remembered, its personalities, arts, issues and tensions will be brought together in an honorarium never before witnessed on the East Coast.

1974 National Book Award for Poetry winner, Allen Ginsberg, will read at the Student Union Ballroom at the University of Massachusetts, at 8 p.m. Saturday, March 1. Ginsberg will be joined by fellow poets and friends, Peter Orlovsky and Gregory Corso.

Ginsberg, Orlovsky, and Corso's reading is the second event of the symposium, the first being the opening of the art exibition "ART AS A MUSCULAR PRINCIPAL", on February 28, in the Warbeke Gallery at Mount Holyoke College. The exhibition will include the works of ten artists who flourished in San Francisco after World War II.

Ginsberg and Corso are core poets of the Beat Generation, which had its roots in New York in the early 50's, but emerged on the national scene when they traveled to San Francisco in 1955 to join poets Michael McLure, Gary Snyder and others in a now-famous reading at the Six Gallery. When Lawrence Ferlinghetti tried to publish Ginsberg's "HOWL", first read at the Six Gallery, he was arrested by San Francisco police on obscenity charges. The resulting trial brought national attention to Ginsberg and his peers and the San Francisco Renaissance emerged. Orlovsky, a poet in his own right, [illegible] Ginsberg [illegible] Corso.

Corso, who grew up in Greenwich Village in New York, [illegible] where he learned to study and read the works of others, [illegible] Corso credits much of his growth as a poet to Ginsberg who he met in New York in 1950, where the latter was at Columbia. Corso is the author of "The Vestal Lady on Brattle and Other Poems," "The Happy Birthday of Death" and the novel, "American Express".

Along with the Ginsberg reading, "OTHER VOICES" will present an impressive compendium of noted beat poets: William Everson, John Wieners, Michael McLure, Robert Creeley and Diane DiPrima; film makers James Broughton, Bruce Baillee, Robert Nelson and Larry Jordan; Ann Halprin and the Dancer's Workshop; and movement and theatre artist, George Herms.

The critics and historians will feature Ann Charters, author of the highly criticized biography, "KEROUAC", and John Clellon Holmes, author of "GO" and "THE PHILOSOPHY OF THE BEAT GENERATION."

Lectures, concerts, films, exhibitions and dance and theatre presentations are planned for each of the Five College campuses. Considerable interaction between the visitors and the Valley is anticipated through the scheduling of workshops, seminars and informal gatherings. All events are open to the public, most without charge. Poet Robert Creeley will partake in a closed workshop with Professor Joseph Langland and his poetry writing class at the University.

Thermography brightens conservation picture

BOSTON (UPI) – A company has been formed in Massachusetts to apply modern technology to achieving energy conservation in buildings.

The company, U.S. Thermographics of Woburn, plans to use sophisticated infra-red equipment and radiometric concepts to locate heat leaks in buildings, according to the firm's technical director Martin L. DeRoy II.

DeRoy said the heat detection techniques and the corrective measures dictated can result in a basic energy consumption reduction of 10 to 40 per cent, depending on the building.

He said the technique can be applied to industrial, commercial and residential structures.

The thermographic technique uses a television-type infra-red camera which enables the viewer to see a picture of energy being radiated from a building surface.

New Africa Choir electrify audience

By SANDRA JACKSON
Black News Service

The voices of New Africa House Workshop Choir stormed the audience at Bowker Auditorium last Tuesday night. The group is a mixture of Voices so rare, so soothing; yet they alarmed the audience with their electrifying harmony and moving lyrics. "I doubt whether Bowker auditorium has stopped vibrating from the impact yet.

The audience was moderate in size, but huge in enthusiasm, and they reacted to the soul-shaking, footstomping sounds with whistles and cheers of appreciation.

African American music covers a spectrum wide and vast. Popular selections on the program performed were "Stormy Monday" by soloist Beareather Reddy; Freda Pullen was 'doin it to death' on the gospel rendition, "I want to be Free"-(the sisters can sing). The Reconstruction Voices, (Van Jackson, Les Anderson and Walter Bradford) closed the show with their act. The applause was like thunder in that little auditorium.

The musical performance as produced by the relaxed and soulful competence of musicians: David Jackson on organ, John Walker jamming on trumpet, Warren Smith on percussion and Avery Sharpe, doing it on bass guitar. A selection composed by Choir member [illegible], "Keep on Movin'" was done with [illegible] Voices.

Special thanks also are extended to Max Roach and Archie Shepp (whose compositions were well done and well received).

Dr. Horace Boyer's fine talents, experience, and vocal mastery, combined with the fiery talent of the Voices of New Africa, complemented each other harmoniously. Congratulations to Dr. Horace C. Boyer, under whose direction the voices soared.

To put it mildly, "It was a hell of a show", explained one student.

If you missed it, you can catch it tonight at 11:00 p.m. on 'Universal Rhythms' - a product of the Black Mass Communications Project. It will be aired over WMUA 91.1 F.M.

The magnificent vibrations of the Voices of New Africa House, on Tues. Feb. 14, stormed Bowker Aud. with joyful sounds.

Elijah Muhammed dead

By [illegible]

CHICAGO (UPI) – Thousands of Black Muslims mourned their late leader, Elijah Muhammad, in cavernous International Amphitheatre Wednesday. Wallace Muhammad, 41, second youngest son of the "Messenger of Allah" took over leadership of the Black Muslims.

The Muslims gathered for their annual "Savior's Day" observance [illegible] into a memorial for the elder Muhammad's death Tuesday. Beneath huge photographs of the 77-year-old, long-time spiritual leader and 4-foot-high slogans praising him as apostle of Allah.

The ceremonies, which in past years have lasted several hours, started on a quiet, orderly note with no outward sign that Wallace Muhammad's selection as the new spiritual leader of the Nation of Islam would be challenged in a sect sometimes wracked by strife and violence.

Wallace Muhammad's succession to his father's post was announced by Black Muslim leaders who also indicated they expected Elijah's other sons to help direct the 70,000 member sect's activities and financial empire.

A spokesman for Muhammad Speaks, the sect's weekly newspaper, said Elijah himself chose Wallace to succeed him. Black Muslim leaders from several cities indicated the hierarchy of the sect had approved the choice.

Women members, dressed in white and wearing [illegible], sat in the lower tier of the bleachers in the hall. Their male counterparts, including husky "Fruit of Islam" guards attired in blue, military-like uniforms, spilled through other parts of the Amphitheatre.

Four large photographs of Elijah looked down on the faithful from the sides of the arena. At one end of the podium was another picture and the slogan, "There is no God but Allah and Muhammad is His Apostle."

Other slogans proclaimed "We must make jobs for ourselves," "We must do something for self," and "We must have some land."

Women and men were searched carefully for weapons and matches as they entered the hall. Police guards conducted the search, [illegible] with such instructions as "Move along, Sister," and "Move along, Sister, you will have time to adjust your [illegible] later."

The elder Muhammad died Tuesday at Mercy Hospital, where he had been listed in critical condition for three weeks with congestive heart failure.

Media involvement at B.N.S.

The Black News Service is a student training and placement organization. Its function includes the training and placement of News reporters, photographers, graphic arts, and lay-out personnel.

Up to date, B.N.S. has been operating with a limited staff. As a result, we have not been able to service the needs of the entire Third World Community. It is therefore imperative that all Third World students (including and/or interested in communications) join the staff and participate in informing the people.

Our goals are realistic because they reflect the conceptions of those who are daily involved with media operations.

The staff and editors of B.N.S. welcome all energetic and serious-minded students to come in and join our action team. We accept faculty assistance too!

The Black News Service is located at the Daily Collegian [illegible], 2nd floor Student Union Building and in Room 114, New Africa House. All phones are 545-[illegible].

We need graphic artists, photographers, reporters, layout personnel, fine arts critics and writers. Put your knowledge to work!

The Great American Dream

By MICHAEL BELL and CHRISTINE ULWICK

Question: What do you think college is going to be like?

Rubin Grundy: Sacramento, Calif., living in Brittany Manor. Ten years old. Wildwood Elementary School. "I am gonna try to go there after I go into the Air Force. I guess it's kinda hard and easy. Older kids go there and study hard trying to get the basic facts about whatever to do: like about people. I would like to study History."

Pia Weigel: Shutesbury Elementary School, five years old. "College teaches a lot. Older people work a lot. My daddy teaches psychology at college. There are big buildings there and I know a few people who go to college but never asked if they like it."

Kevin Silver: Thirteen years old, Holly School in Northampton. "I don't know if I want to go to college. Smart people go there and work hard. I want to go into the army."

Mike Laizer: Granby, eleven years old in the sixth grade. "College is okay; people are nice there. People go to college to learn and get a job. I want to go to college to get a job too. I want to study chemistry."

Kevin Kousch: Westfield, fourth grade nine years old. "College is nice and I would like to go there when I grow up. People that go there are nice. My sister and brother go to college and they both like it. The buildings are brick and warm: colleges look nice the way they are. Colleges I have been to are very clean. I would like to study math."

Collegian conservation

The effects of inflation have been felt by just about everyone at the University, and the Collegian is no exception.

At this time, the Collegian is funded through the combination of Student Senate funds, Graduate Senate funds, and advertising. Last year, a large portion of the Student Senate funds were turned back to the Student Senate, from advertising revenue.

Due to the general state of the economy, advertising is decreasing, yet the Collegian must maintain such support if it is to go on publishing.

Recently though, there have been many compaints from various parties that Collegians have not been available at various spots around campus, and the Editors are trying to alleviate the problem. An examination is being conducted of the drop-off points and possible redistribution plans, and an additional 1,000 papers per day have been ordered for distribution. This will solve part of the problem, but there is still the additional problem of student funds paying for staff members' and faculty's privilege of taking Collegians.

The Collegian is essentially a student newspaper. It is written for, run by, and financed by students. Therefore, it is a basic assumption that students should have priority access to Collegians. Staff and faculty members, while being active entities on campus, do not contribute to its funding, and are requested to take out subscriptions for themselves or their departments. It is unfair to place the whole financial burden upon students.

There are other steps which students can take to make Collegians go around. Recycle them in the Dining Commons or dormitories. If you are only going to throw it away, why not leave it in the Dining Commons for someone else to read?

The Collegian is "everyone's paper." Let's share it.

Get out and vote

I am a candidate for Amherst Town Meeting in Precinct 2. I feel that students should have a voice in our town government, especially when it is so relevant to our lives.

With the probable end of mandatory dorm residency next September, the present exorbitant rent prices in Amherst shall rise even higher. The competition for apartments will be keen and rigorous, while everybody will suffer, except the landlords.

Rent-control and the possible formation of a Landlord-Tenants Relations Board is an issue that affects all of us living in Amherst. Most of us feel that Amherst politics have little effect upon our lives, and therefore, we register to vote in our home towns, or not at all. Rent prices affect us all. I am attempting to do something about them but I need your help. I need the support of students in Precinct 2 [Southwest and surrounding area], as registered voters in Amherst.

If you wish to vote in Amherst, the registration process merely requires your signature at the Clerk's Office in Amherst Town Hall. Those of you who desire to vote in your home town can easily switch your legal residence back home, anytime you desire, simply by re-registering at the town hall there. But in order to vote in Amherst you must register here by March 19.

If you want to use your voting power to protect your rights and your wallet, then register to vote. If you do not reside in Precinct 2, register and vote for a rent-control candidate in your precinct. But do vote or do not complain about insensitive or complacent government because I want to change that, and here is your chance to help. If you need any information on voter registration, please feel free to call or visit me.

A great loss to UMass

To the Editor:

I was greatly saddened to read of the death of Prof. William H. Ross. His death is indeed a great loss to this campus.

I consider it a great privilege to have been able to work with Prof. Ross fifteen years ago, when I was an undergraduate. He was unstinting of himself in his help and kindness to me, and to all his students.

To one who remembers him turning cartwheels down the corridors, and his "figure-8" races through old Hasbrouk, the ravages wrought on him by arthritis were most painful to see. Although he has now gone to rest, he will live on in the affectionate memory of his students.

I am curious (green)

Eet wuz Irrrish nigh' ut th' Bluewul, doon cha know, und we all gut haf croacked ta the gills. Aye, we were ta sittin' thar geetin' stewed noice un mellow like, an' een wooks ma' goood friend, Stephen Daedalus.

"Ha-ya Steve, how ere ya, lad?"

"Cut it, willya. I'm not up for it tonight."

"What's wrong," I asked.

"Midterms, of course, There all catching up on me at once. Papers due, reports, exams, ah! I need a brew!"

"Aye, then draw oop a char me boy." He pulled a seat from a nearby table and joined us taking a draft from our near-full pitcher. Everyone was silent for a while as the ringing peal of an Irish tenor, mounted on a high three legged stool commenced. His fingers deftly moved up and down the lines and frets of his guitar and soon he had stirred up the rowdy crowd into a fit of rythmical clapping.

Our attention was drawn by the sudden appearance of commentator Norm DePlume. He strolled over to the table like he owned the place dressed in his usual decor of stripped trousers, plaid jacket and a brown speckled hat complete with a crowning press pass. He began to pour himself a cup of beer.

"Just came back from the Five College run."

"What?"

"Hot story out at Hampshire and Amherst. Had to cover it. Just shot it up to the office and now I'm due for a brew." He brought the plastic utensil to his lips and made a groan of relief as he withdrew it running his tongue across them.

"What a time I had at Amherst College," he continued. "All I wanted to do was find this building. I can't even remember the name of it for the life of me. Somethin'-Burrows or-Smyth, with about six initials and two or three numbers after it; guy musta been a duke or king or somethin'. Anyways, I'm lookin' for this place, see, so I asks this kid wearing a blue sweater, with a white collar, and carry'n' twenty pencils, no erasers, I asks him, I did, how do you get to the somthin-or-other building. He says," again the beer went to his parched lips.

"Well?"

"Oh, ya, so he says, it's the large Georgian semigothic structure with the romanesque portico, French bay windows, and Doric pillars!'"

"So what did you say?"

"I asked him how to get there and he says to 'walk approximately twenty paces eastward and then turn in a southwesterly direction. It will be approximately seven years ahead of you. One simply cannot miss it.''

"So what did you do then?"

"I walks around for about an hour 'n' a half lookin' for this place askin all the Amherst students an' gettin' the same response left 'n' right. Finally this guy wearin' a UMass sweatshirt walks up to the bus stop so I asks him."

"...And?"

"So he says ta me, ahh, it's da big one width da weird pointy stuff an udda shit all around it. Dat's it over there. He points to it and I'm back where I started about an hour ago."

"Fa Jezzez sake, willya shuddup 'n' let me sing!" cried the performer. We all turn aghast and silent. He was leaning across to our table and brandishing his instrument at us, obviously inebriated beyond hope. "Ya stoodents ere all alike! Na coonsider-ation fa' any 'un buut yerselves!" he proceeded to reach down to the floor and displayed a bottle of Jameson Irish whiskey. Next we saw the bottom of the container as the contents disappeared down his throat. The last thing that I saw was the barreled chest of a Bluewall bouncer earning his pay with extreme enthusiasm.

So there we were, a short five minutes later, standing in the hallway outside of the Bluewall deciding what to do. J.J. Pencraft was scanning the sofas and finally turned his focus to the Campus Assistance Center, also known as the information desk, where three neatly clad young men, each with every hair in place, and each with their paisley ties loosened to give that informal, friendly look. And each earning God-knows-how-much to sit there.

Pencraft glanced down to his watch and then back at the three who returned his gaze with a well timed smile. He spun about on his heels and cried: "Do we need this much information? It's quarter-to-one in the morning! These guys are gettin' paid..."

"Thank you for paying your student activity fees. The door is that way," they replied in unison like the Rhinemaidens.

God save Zamir Nestelbaum! (and green beer)

The death and resurrection of George McG.

Poor old George McGovern; he was almost President but he was defeated and surfaces only occasionally rising to assure his former followers (the Bobby Kennedy and the Gene McCarthy people) that he still lives.

Poor old George McGovern. He was once almost the most powerful person in the country and would have delivered the State of the Union to Congress and the people last month; instead he gave his State of the Union to Rolling Stone 3-13-75, sharing the issue with Alice Cooper and Blood on the Tracks.

"The American spirit is uncertain," opened McGovern, and he went on to blame the forces of "militarism, monopoly and the maldistribution of wealth." However he forgot something-politics, the dirty game which forced his own demise two and a half years ago. Politics as the distribution of power was a game George McGovern never knew how to play. The Rolling Stone article showed that he is still the pleading, midwestern individualist who is frustrated and unsure about what to do about oppression and injustice. One gets the feeling from his tone that he was trying to say "see, I really didn't sell out kids, I'm still with you in the struggle." But in a newspaper with Led Zepplin on the cover it is obvious that the kids are gone.

McGovern still believes that he will ultimately win by going by the rituals which have failed before him. "The consumers money is disappearing somewhere", he wrote, "...this year the Senate Subcommittee on Nutrition and Human Needs will search out the truth..." But what will happen then George? What will stop the lobbyists with their pretty escorts and their fat wallets from "convincing" the people on Capital, (er I mean Capitol) Hill that the farmers and the people really aren't hurting that bad - "it's just a recession; it will be over by election time."

The failure of democracy is the failure of the legislative branch to be an active, vocal and effective voice in government. The McGoverns, the Kennedys and the Drinans are few and far buried in peoples' minds by images of alcoholics, political opportunists, kick-back artists and good golfers. The people are standing in unemployment lines; George, disillusioned, and craving leadership.

Articles in Rolling Stone quoting facts of inequality and the failure of the military-economic elite to serve the people are as effective as stealing water from the Atlantic by the bucket. The Senate and the Congress must assert themselves before there can be any motion or change in Government.

Poor McGovern; he is afraid of the collapse of the "citadels of economic privilege", but the they went down with the industrial revolution.

Poor old George, he wants to "ride and reinforce the waves of change," but the tide has gone out. Ford defends Cambodia and stays three under par.

Flipping through that same Rolling Stone you read some new Dylan lyrics just a few pages away.

Idiot wind-Blowing like a circle around my skull-From the Grand Coulee Dam to the Capitol."

Are counselors needed?

To the Editor:

Concerning Paul J. Sweeney's letter of Feb. 25, I must agree with his goals but not his choice of action. The universal fee is only one suggestion, and as Mr. Sweeney says, other courses of action must be explored. But picking the employment of counselors for dorms as an unnecessary expenditure is not a good choice.

First of all, let me state that I am a counselor from James House in S.W. But I am not planning on returning in the fall, so this letter is not just to protect my own interests.

Mr. Sweeney quotes the costs which could be saved...$12,000 a tower, $60,000 for five towers, etc. But looking on the other side of the coin, how can a price be placed on the good they accomplish?

I always hear the remark that counselors are unnecessary. Yet it seems that it comes mostly from upperclassmen. How many Freshmen are saying they don't need their counselors? Maybe some come into the University fully prepared to handle the hassles of this place. But many more don't. How can you put a price tag on helping someone, who wants out now, talking them into giving it another go. And someone who is totally fucked up with personal problems. He may stay in school and gain nothing. Add to that all the general administrative duties [inventory, locked out of rooms, general info for all] which heads of residences would have to take over. If you think heads of residences don't already have enough to do, go ask them.

Counselling is not an easy life, as many seem to believe. $600 is not a hell of a lot, either. Many schools grant counselors free room and board, as well as a weekly stipend. So instead of looking at the $600 savings by getting rid of these positions, think about the costs involved.

Karoutsos—living in the past

To the Editor:

Kyriakos Karoutsos seems to be living in the past — back in the age of affluence. I think we've gone beyond the "great awakening" of the sixties. There isn't any time left for sermons.

Times are getting hard, my friend. "Carefree and unconcerned?" Take a little closer look — that's pure fear, and an animal instinct for survival. Ask a few seniors if they are looking for that house in the suburbs. More likely they're looking for that place in the unemployment lines.

You see, what we have here is an attempt at survival. We're talking about humans, not "Homo-Mechanicus", and a funny thing about humans — they don't much like to die. Can a historian make energy out of the sun? Will anthropologists grow food in the desert? Scientists have to do these things now, because dead people don't care about freedom, or equality, or Democracy; and starving people tend to show great disrespect for such ideals.

Our society is like a suspension bridge, with the government and the economy two supporting cables. We all know the cables are weak, we saw that a decade ago. But you can't just cut the cables without losing the bridge. Perhaps you should take a course in industrial engineering.

Meanwhile, I'm not saying there are no questions, only that you didn't show me any answers. While you're asking the questions, don't stand in the way of the scientists who'll answer them.

Samuel A. Stuart

'Lucia' depicts Cuba's development

This Saturday night the Cuban film "Lucia" will be shown. The purpose of the showing is to benefit the Venceremos Brigade. The Brigade is a multi-national, anti-imperialist organization whose aim is to break the information and economic blockade on Cuba through educational means and by sending North Americans each year to work and travel.

LUCIA, which has been seen very little in the United States, is an internationally acclaimed film. It spans the national development of Cuba by focusing on three generations of Cuban women whose lives reflect the society around them.

Candidate addresses Project 10 seminar

One of two candidates for the Amherst Housing Authority in the town's April 8th general election will discuss his campaign at this week's meeting of Project Ten's Political Campaigns Seminar tonight at 7 p.m. in Pierpont Hall.

George Schauer, 26, of 53 Colonial Village, will offer his views on rent control, UMass student housing policy, and other local campaign issues. Schauer, a program representative for the Federally-funded Experimental Housing Allowance Program (EHAP) in Springfield, was a candidate for Amherst selectman in 1973. In 1974 he was elected as a town meeting member in Precinct 5.

Schauer's opponent for the Housing Authority, Robert Graham, is tentatively scheduled to speak before the Seminar on March 6th. [illegible]

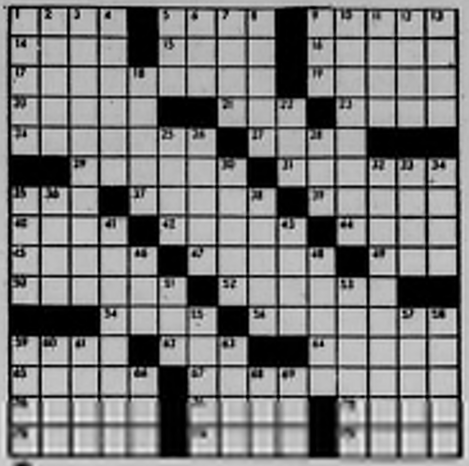
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved



Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

THURSDAY, February 27 — Born today, you are one of those persons whose thirst for knowledge is quite insatiable. More than many who have such a hunger for learning, you have a knack for applying what you know theoretically to what you must accomplish practically. Such an ability is not to be taken lightly, for it will ultimately make the difference between a contented life as a knowledge-like "sponge" and an exciting — though perhaps more difficult — life as an active participant in what is going on around you. In short, it is an ability that enables you to give as well as to take.

A highly perceptive person, you are unaware of very little in your life or in the lives of those around you. Others find it very difficult to keep secrets from you, for you ferret them out without even trying, simply by assessing the mood, observing the circumstances, and putting your finger directly and accurately on the resultant situation. Prostitutes prostitutes, did so successfully, but female undercover agents, intended to arrest customers were called off the job because of protests from white, middleclass men.

Leo Kanowitz, author of Women in the Law, contends that the arrests of male customers are made in most cases only as an inducement to the male to cooperate in convicting the woman, and not with an expectation of a criminal prosecution being carried through.

Although prostitution could not exist without the customers it is the women who suffer under the selective and discriminatory enforcement of laws.

Discrimination against prostitutes on the basis of their sex is not the only instance of selective enforcement under which they suffer. Within the prostitution profession there has traditionally been a hierarchical structure, or class system, with street walkers at the bottom, and "callgirls" at the top. The hierarchy is based not only on the amount of money a woman can command for her services, but on her appearance, her background and the clientele she solicits.

In many states those women who are of the lower class of prostitutes, streetwalkers, are treated unequally under the law because their means of economic survival is on the street. Many police departments have a policy of sweeping the streets, picking up all the prostitutes for a charge such as disorderly conduct for the purpose of clearing the women off the streets temporarily. Such arrests can be based on as little evidence as clothing, past reputation, the area in which a woman is walking (if it is reputed to be a high prostitution area), and the fact that she is walking slowly or standing on a corner.

Moreover, arrest on the street is often based on race. According to Marilyn Haft:

"The women most penalized by the law are black and poor racism is as prevalent in the business of prostitution as everywhere else in our society. Many bar owners, hotel keepers and landlords do not allow black prostitutes to use their premises so black women are forced onto the streets and into blatant solicitation where the risk of arrest is highest. It is seven times more likely that prostitution arrests will involve black women than women of other races.

Those women who can afford to be call girls or to work in massage parlors are generally not subject to arrest, although they are often breaking the same laws. Because they are not in the open they are not as offensive, and therefore not subjected to the same abuse as streetwalkers. Inspector Peterson of the New York Police Department said, "Even if we wanted to hit prostitution more vigorously, we're hampered by judicial rulings. The cubicles that the girls work in massage parlors have been ruled a protected area under the Constitution."

Arbitrary enforcement of the law, justified by such reasons as ridding the streets of "undesirables", or protecting innocent bystanders from solicitation, is clearly discriminatory against those women who, by economic necessity, are walking the streets. Moreover, it is such arbitrary enforcement that women who are not in any way involved in prostitution are subjected to possible arrest.

Here's a run for no money

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass women's track club is holding tryouts in four running events this afternoon at 3:30 in Curry Hicks Cage.

Since this is the first season for the women's club, all the positions on the team are wide open.

"There is no limit to the number of women who can qualify for the team," said Coach Tom Derderian. "We have qualifying times in the events because we want people who have been training but experience in competitive running is not necessary."

The qualifying times for the four running events are: 35 seconds for the 220 yard; 80 seconds for the 440 yard; 3 minutes and 45 seconds for the 880 yard; and 7 minutes and 20 seconds for the mile.

"Those times should be easy for women who have been doing any running," said Derderian. "Mary Caldwell (UMass sophomore) ran a 7:20 in the first race she ever ran at Amherst College last week."

The women's track club receives no financial assistance from the athletic department. They are on their own until interest and participation in the team is deemed worthy of funding by the University.

Derderian has meets scheduled this spring with Springfield College, Vermont, and AAU sanctioned clubs. The meets will be held as part of the UMass track team's home races.

"The men's coach, Ken O'Brien, has been very helpful," said Derderian. "In fact, he's the only one in the whole administration that has given us a break."

For the last four years, the women's track program has been a one woman operation. That woman was Charlotte Lettis. Lettis, who received no backing from the university, became a nationally ranked distance runner on her own. She is now coaching the women's track team at Amherst High, and assisting Derderian with the club.

"I'm sure that there are ten or fifteen women on the campus who could attain the honors that Charlotte received in track," said Dederian. "Just because a woman is in college and has never tried track, she still might have the potential to be a championship runner, if she would just compete."

The club topped Springfield two weeks ago with a final event victory in the high jump and Lettis won the mile at the Amherst Relays in 5:10 as competition during the indoor season has been somewhat limited.

Olympics no "crap game"

CHICAGO [UPI] — Roger Rousseau, president of the organizing committee of the 1976 olympics, said Wednesday that despite reports to the contrary, the entire schedule of the summer games will be held in Montreal at their scheduled time and sites.

Rousseau said he was "flabbergasted" when he read a report in a Montreal French-language newspaper (Montreal Gazette) which said the International Olympic Committee was devising contingency plans to hold certain athletic events at scattered sites in the United States and Europe in the manner of a "floating crap game."

"I heard that report when I returned from the International Committee's meeting in Lausanne. It was very surprising because a Gazette reporter was there. I can assure you nothing of that sort was ever mentioned at the meeting. I was flabbergasted," he said.

Gymnasts sweep up; roll over Warriors

By BILL DOYLE

It was the same but different.

Just as they did in their last meet against Salem State a week ago, the UMass women gymnasts swept all four events at Boston State Tuesday night in a 98.30-78.60 cremation of the Warriors.

Also, for the second meet in a row Ann Olson took the all-around honors, while Marian Kulick again proved that she is on the way back from her injuries, and Gail Hannan showed signs of breaking into the starting line-up in vaulting.

The differences were numerous but mostly on the good side. Regina Hartman, who missed the Salem State meet with contact lens problems, came up with a strong floor routine, Coach Virginia Evans said. Hartman scored a 7.25.

Pam Steckroat and Cheryl Smith, who sat out the Salem meet, were praised by Evans for their event-winning performances.

"Pam scored an 8.6 in a strong floor routine," Evans said, "and Cheryl looked good with her new routine on the beam."

Smith scored an 8.75, her highest total of the season, Evans said.

Also different from the last meet was that the Minutewomen had a strong team total of seven points higher than against Salem. Evans had high praise for Olson, who was competing for only the second time in every event for UMass.

"She really put it all together in her floor exercise," Evans said. "Also, she used a new mount on her uneven bar routine which really looked good."

Olson scored an 8.15 on the floor and an 8.6 on the uneven bars.

Still with the differences, Margie Magraw missed the Boston State meet because of an illness; Keeley O'Rourke improved greatly in the all-arounds, as she totaled 30.45, topped by an 8.0 in the floor exercise; and Coach Evans attended the meet.

Getting back to Marian Kulick and Gail Hannan, Coach Evans said that it looks like they both have good chances to break into the starting line-up, based on their recent performances. Kulick, Evans said, scored a 7.7 on the beam despite a fall and looked strong. She also had a floor reoutine in which she expressed "pure enjoyment", Evans added. The coach explained that Kulick just thoroughly enjoyed herself during the routine.

Hannan scored an 8.6 to win the vaulting. That score along with the 8.35 that she averaged against Salem, puts Hannan into the vaulting picture for Friday night's key meet against Southern Connecticut, Evans said.

Linda Nelligan placed second in both her events, vaulting and uneven bars. She averaged an 8.45 in vaulting and 8.40 on the bars.

Next meet is at Southern Connecticut, Friday night.

Swimmen take dive at Tufts

By BILL EDELSTEIN

"Into each life some rain must fall," but on Tuesday night for the UMass swimmen who were edged 63-50 by Tufts, it felt like a ton of bilge water and was even harder than that to swallow.

UMass (Russ Yarworth, Dave Boucher, Joe Hebert, Spencer Sullivan) grabbed the 400 medley relay and Ben Crooker (yawn) took the 1000 and 200 yard freestyles as our watery representatives built up a modest lead.

Tufts took the 50 yard free and then copped an unexpected 200 yard individual medley before Earl McAllister put the Minutemen back in the "win" column with a victory in the required diving competition.

Hebert then broke a university record for the 200 yard butterfly six-tenths of a second with a time of 2:15.6...and lost. The Jumbos also came away with the 100 yard freestyle (and you thought elephants couldn't swim!).

Crooker garnered the 500 freestyle and made that event closer than it should have been. "Ben swam a smart race," coach Bey Melamed related. "He set a slow pace to slow down the field and let Harry (Blyden) try to place second." Blyden couldn't quite catch up, and finished third.

Dave Boucher lost the 200 yard breaststroke for the first time this season and Tufts also placed first in the optional diving.

The score, after all this action, stood 56-50, Jumbos, with one event remaining; the winner of that event to receive seven points the loser, goose egg. Simple addition informed the spectator that this was going to be a bottom-of-the-ninth-bases-loaded-with-two-outs-and-a-three-and-two-count-on-the-batter-finish. The Minutemen set another university record (3:26.0) in this final event, but again were trampled by the Jumbos as the meet, along with the swimmen's hopes for a winning season went down the drain.

LONG WALKS OFF SHORT DIVING BOARDS — The meet began at 6:30 instead of the scheduled 3:00 due to lack of officials...Only the dual meet with UVM and UNH remains for the swimmen until the New Englands — Melamed figures his team will split that meet and end the season with a record of 6-7..."Tufts only sent us the results of the meets that they did poorly in this season, and their coach even asked me to take it easy on him," lamented Melamed. "It was a con job and I guess it worked."

The Minutemen placed nobody in the finals of the New Englands last year, but coach Bey Melamed gave Dave Boucher a good chance to be a finalist in the 200-yard breaststroke...advancing to the finals...Amazing; one entire article and Ben Crooker's name only popped up four times — oops — make that five.

Skaters tie 3-3! Match Merrimack

By DAVE EIBEL

"It's one thing saying it, it's another thing doing it."
— UMass hockey coach Jack Canniff

UMass did it last night, putting it all together a little too late against Division Two powerhouse Merrimack, proving that the persuasive power of pride can spur on a team to great heights as the Minutemen tied the Warriors 3-3 at Orr Rink, in UMass' season finale.

Although UMass (10-14-1 overall) won't make the Division Two playoffs this year, and first seeded Merrimack (21-1-2) will probably win the title, that didn't stop the Minutemen from coming within an eyelash of a major upset.

Merrimack's Rick Curran, a Toronto, Ontario native knotted the score at three at 6:38 of the second period on a 30 foot slapshot past screened UMass goalie Dana Redmond's stick hand. That was only the jumpoff point for both teams, as they played another 34 minutes of regulation time, plus a ten-minute sudden death overtime period, without bulging the twine.

Coincidentally, last year's UMass-Merrimack game at Orr Rink also went into overtime with Tim Howes scoring the winner in a 2-1 UMass victory.

Scotty Stuart gave the Minutemen a 1-0 lead at 2:32 of the first stanza taking a pass from Kevin Conners at center, waltzing around both Merrimack defenders and beating Pieri with a flip shot to the stick side.

The Warriors' Jim Crouse tied it six minutes later converting a pass off a 2-on-1 break beating Redmond with a screamer from 20 feet. The goal came just after UMass had missed an open net when Pieri lost sight of a loose puck in a scramble.

Merrimack went on top only 43 seconds into the second frame when an uncovered Mike Reynolds slapped in a pass from the slot past a startled Redmond.

But UMass refused to fold and made it 2-2 at 4:31 when the ever-improving White Brothers combined. Bobby White rushed into the Merrimack zone and from the faceoff circle let go with a half-pass, half-shot toward the slot. The half-half play turned into a 100 per cent goal when the puck hit Bill White's skate and shot past Pieri's stick hand into the net.

A little less than two minutes later the Minutemen forged their ferocious forechecking into a 3-2 advantage. After Scotty Stuart had just failed to score skating the length of the ice, he stopped a Merrimack pass at the blueline and fired it towards the left corner. Freshman Bill Flynn alertly knocked the puck off the stick of a daydreaming Merrimack defender to an uncovered Jim Lyons who beat Pieri with a 15-foot give-it-all-you-got slapshot, at 6:17.

It only took Merrimack twenty-one seconds to knot the count, setting the stage for 34 minutes of deadlocked hockey.

Pieri robbed both Bill White and Stuart later in the frame when both UMass skaters made scintillating rushes and came in all alone on Merrimack's all-star netminder. At the other end, Dana Redmond, wearing number 12 because his regular sweater was lost, was his usual clutch, unbeatable self in the Minuteman net.

Chris Lamby came within an eyelash of putting UMass ahead and getting his head smashed to smithereens just as the period ended. After Pieri had committed grand larceny on Bill White the puck bounced loose to Lamby who himself was robbed on a backhander. Just as Chris let go ~~of~~ the shot Reynolds charged at him and almost took off the center's head with a well-aimed cross-check. Lamby spent two and Reynolds four minutes in the sinbin for the fracas.

The teams played a cautious third period but UMass almost pulled it out in the last 27 seconds when Bill Mintiens and Tim Howes both grazed the goalpost with slappers from the point, but the annual Merrimack-UMass overtime was inevitable.

Redmond was simply outstanding in the fourth frame robbing behomoth defenseman Rick Kerivan twice in succession on labelled drives. Merrimack outshot the Minutemen 7-4 in the extra frame, but three of those shots came within a 15 second span six minutes into the extra period. Pieri stopped a Stuart bid for a goal when he deflected Scotty's backhand bid from eight feet out over the net after Mike Merchant tested him from the point.

Any chance UMass had to win the game ended when Stuart received an elbowing call with 1:58 left. Calling a penalty in overtime is almost as rare as finding the Whitmore empty at 11:00 on a Tuesday morning.

Ice Chips: Seniors Kevin Conners, Bill Mintiens, Mike Ellis, Steve Nims and John Muse bid farewell to their UMass skating careers...the shots were 37-36 UMass...six hockey cheerleaders gave their act a new twist skating out for a routine between the second and third periods.

Tracksters chase title

NE set-up

By SCOTT HAYES

The New England Championships for indoor track get underway tomorrow afternoon at Northeastern and then shift to Tufts for Friday night competition and Saturday's concluding events. For the first time in the history of the New Englands several events will be completed on the first day of action. The 50-yard dash, 60-yard hurdles, long and triple jumps, 35-pound weight throw and the pole vault will be held Friday.

The new set-up makes the early competition critical because team scores will already be posted at the start of Saturday's events. Boston College is considered the team favorite, with Northeastern, UConn and UMass among the top challengers. These four teams will be after an early jump in order to capture momentum in the two-day meet.

The breakdown of events and the outstanding New England individuals are as follows:

50-YARD DASH — A triad of dashmen will battle for New England honors. Eastern champion Harry Riley of Lowell Tech who has been clocked in 6.2 seconds for the 60-yard dash, Phil Hazzard of Boston College, the Greater Boston champion, and Yankee Conference winner Joe Mertens are the favorites. All three have run the dash in 5.4 seconds or better. This event is important because BC and UMass, two of the team favorites, are expected to qualify a runner for the dash finals.

HURDLES — probably the most wide open event at the New Englands because there is no individual favorite. Northeastern's Chip D'Allessandro, URI's Bill Charron, the Yankee Conference champion and Mike Reed of Williams flaunt the fastest New England time of 7.3. Springfield's Abe Davis and Jeff McRae have also been timed in 7.3 seconds.

440, 600- YARD DASHES — A group of strong runners will compete in either the 440 or the 600 with UConn's talented Daryl King leading the field. Mark Letch of Northeastern and UM trackman Mark Healy, an upset winner over King in the YanCons, join Bowdoin's Leo Dunn and Rick Riley of Worcester State the NE indoor 440 champ, as the top performers. In the 440, John Richards and Curt Stegerwald of UMass will compete as Steve Crimmins is expected to join teammate Healy in the 600.

880, 1,000 — YARD RUNS — Of the top five middle distance runners, four are from Boston College. Outstanding Keith Francis may run in the 1,000 (he has been timed in 2:08.4), but most likely will see action in the mile. Jim Goggin holds the second fastest New England time of 2:10 and Eagle teammates Leo Vercollone and Steve Lowell boast the two best 880 times of 1:55 and 1:56 respectively. Mike Hickey of Northeastern is capable of breaking up the BC quartet while Chris Farmer and Devin Croft of UMass may also figure in the scoring.

MILE — Easily the most exciting event of the New Englands, with an abundance of top runners in the same race. Jim Taylor, Boston University's top miler has an impressive 4:06.9 to his credit, but BC's Francis is only three-tenths of a second behind. For UMass, co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin will be competing, as well as Providence's standout runner Mike O'Shea. Thomas set conference and UMass record at the YanCons, running the mile in 4:08.2. excellent competition is expected to produce a New England meet record and possibly the fastest indoor mile ever run in this region.

TWO-MILE — The big story in the longest running event is that Tom Wilson of UMass will not run due to an injury. John McGrail and Frank Carroll will have to contribute standout efforts if they are to compensate for Wilson's absence. The two Minutemen runners will be up against John Treacy, the favorite from Providence and Mike Buckley of NU.

FIELD EVENTS — UMass has four of the top eight New England long jumpers in Bob and Ken Adamson, Tony Pendleton and Mike Geraghty. UConn's Herb Davis will be the foursome's main challenger. In the triple jump, Springfield's Abe Davis, older brother of the Husky long jumper, is the favorite, having jumped 50-4 during the season. UConn's Davis is second best, based on previous performances, but the Adamsons and Geraghty will have their sights set on the next three places. The weight throw is a two-man battle between a pair of the country's top performers, Dev Djerassi and Andy Bessetti. NU's Djerassi has recorded the best throw in the nation of 66-1. These two heavyweights are in a class by themselves. URI's Bill Jerrow and Mark MacCracken, both 15-6 pole vaulters should have little trouble dominating their event.

SHOT PUT & HIGH JUMP — These two field events are separate because they will be held Saturday. Len Rao should receive little opposition in the shot put. Rao has heaved the shot 56-4 and first place may go uncontested. Joe Martens should enjoy supremacy in the high jump, unless he has a bad day of Maine's Steve Leathe or UConn's Pat Augeri can outjump UM's seven-foot high jumper. Teammate Rusty Kendall may chip in by placing.

RELAYS — The final two events are relays, and UMass hopes to do as well as they did a year ago. "The two-mile team has the best time except for BC and the mile relay team is ranked sixth, but has the potential to run with any NE team," stated Muska.

Courtwomen plan rebound

By GREG LEVINS

The UMass Minutewomen will attempt to get back on the winning track tonight when they journey to Fitchburg State College for a 7:30 encounter. Tuesday night UMass suffered only its second setback of the year (both on the road) at the hands of Bridgewater State.

In Tuesday's tilt a combination of poor shooting and all around sloppy play sent UMass home on the short end of a 72-50 count. The Minutewomen's shooting was off the entire game and finished with a frigid 29 per cent from the floor.

Lu Ann Fletcher and Nancy O'Neil each chipped in 11 points in the losing cause. Bridgewater placed three players in double figures.

The J.V.'s, down by as many as 14 points in their game, stormed back in the final 1:27 of play to pull out a 60-59 decision. Carol Mastacouris and Ginny Pebbles each had 28 points for UMass.

Tonight however, UMass can't afford to make the same mistakes against Fitchburg. Although not considered one of UMass' stronger opponents, Fitchburg has compiled a record impressive enough to qualify for the regional tourney.

Senior Co-captain Pat Gilspin did not see any action Tuesday night because of an ankle injury suffered in play against Worcester State. She will be out of action indefintely, but should be ready for the Smith game on March 3.

Ralph Steadman's Horrors of Life

Doing It Real

Doing It Real

Somewhere there are lost many "fine arts"; fatally ruined by the mass media cultural landslide. One of these is the art of illustration — illumination. Photographs, both straight and creatively doctored, conduct the reader to a quicker, cleaner, sharper, easier view of what the story says than do the obviously removed and unreal sketches. This isn't good, this isn't bad, it just is. Sketches are used against the vast detail of a photograph primarily as a change of pace. Sports Illustrated will cover, every four months or so, an event such as the World Series or Firecracker 500 with sketches that are different, but also speak more to the arching spirituality connected with such events, a mysterious quality that their literal minded photographers miss. And this is the special realm of the illustrative sketch or painting that is seldom seen. A great drawing will stand right alongside a story with equal weight, and each amplifies the other towards a greater hitting of the note.

Magazines like The New Yorker seem to run sketches partly because of this reason, but mainly because they fit in with the quaint atmosphere of the magazine. The widest circulated and best-paying of the illustrative fields is the slick Playboy-type fill that is designed more to quickly attract the eye than to provide any sort of insight into the story. These usually pander to cheap thrill techniques — sex, violence or Star-syndromism, leaving a curiously empty feeling. This has, unsurprisingly, become the province of some of the biggest hacks working in the country today.

It's hard competing with quick life, which is the specially stressed realm of the photo. A good illustrator must overcome this, delving deeper, into the areas the camera cannot go. Ralph Steadman and Guy Peelaert are two people who have faced this problem, and have overcome it with different degrees of success; Steadman has made a volume of drawings that floods and attacks the viewer with perceptions that go way beyond the camera's domain into a sort of New Journalism non-fiction fiction, and Peelaert, whose more conventional art forms deal with their Rock & Roll subjects through distance and fantasy, invites the reader in for his own interpretations and dreams.

Steadman is a thirty-eight year-old Englishman who has visited the United States exactly four times — the 1969 Kentucky Derby, the 1970 America's Cup Race in Newport, the 1972 Democratic Convention and the summer 1973 Watergate hearings. That's quite a perspective to get at America's inner misworkings and betrayed ideals, and his various sidetrips connected with the main events — Dallas, New York, Santa Fe, Disneyland, Las Vegas — intensified his grip on the horror and insanity he found. The Conventions and the Watergate hearings were drawn for Rolling Stone to go with Dr. Hunter S. Thompson's poison narratives, and together they formed the most insightful and powerful view of any of the thousands of reporters covering the debacle. Thompson was the only writer to correctly see and record Nixon's incredible evil aura, and he and Steadman provided the only coverage of the foul events that was as strong as their subject matter. The stiffs at the Times and Post and New Yorker scribbled millions of nice-sounding platitudes, but only Thompson and Steadman ventured into real death games in their copy.

Steadman, who also designed the classic Gonzoid illustrations for Hunter's sprawling insanity called Fear And Loathing In Las Vegas (the drawings of which are included here), uses several interesting teachniques. The most compelling and effective of these is his use of clean, straight, perfect lines with the most horrible and uncontrolled of blots, splotches and smudges. These are especially effective in his looks at cities, with the human habitants living wretched, unbelieving existences in the canyons of cold, untouchable straight lines. He makes beautiful use of grey, dotted backdrops, which, used with sparse, sooty shading, increase the white blight. Steadman's brilliance, however, goes way beyond technique. His eye penetrates the farce of America's lies; a Las Vegas cocktail lounge is inhabited by snapping beaked birds, hideous crocodile-like creatures and other long-tailed reptillian beasts; the Kentucky Derby is run not by horses, who seem all too real, but rather by the wretched, gross, ancient owners in all their naked finery, foot long cigars and horse cocks included in the mud.

The more horrible the situation, the farther into greatness Steadman is pushed — Kissinger is seen, brilliantly, as signing the Viet Nam peace agreement with a splattered bomb, and also as a giant mad spider in his giant web of intrigue and power; Wallace is a wheeling cannonball of hatred; Nixon inspires Steadman to the highest most twisted steps of dementia Nixon peers over a faceless line of guards to wave a giant-toothed smile to the good folk; he

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

George Maldonado Former University Year for Action Volunteer.

I think that the T.V. should have and present more programs about the low income communities, specially about those with a language barrier.

Freedom of the Press is a good idea, but I think there should be more news about happenings in the community, and projects.

I like to see different press representatives visiting the communities and talking to the people.

The Collegian is like any other newspaper in the area, they talk politics and government, sometimes Amherst, too... I think they made good coverage but they should talk more about surrounding communities... focus on the low income communities in the surrounding areas, especially in these times of inflation, focus on people in welfare, unemployed, etc. They should show what type of alternatives and resources could be found in the area.

Jorge Maldonado — Ex-Voluntario del Programa de Accion. (UYA)

Yo creo que la television deberia tener y presentar mas programas sobre las comunidades de bajos ingresos, especialmente sobre comunidades con barreras del lenguage.

Libertad de Prensa es una idea chevere... pero creo que deberian haber mas noticias de lo que pasa en la comunidad y los proyectos.

Me gustaria ver diferentes representaciones de la prensa visitando la comunidad y hablando con la gente.

El Collegian, (Colijian), es como los demas periodicos del area, hablan de la politica ye el gobierno, a veces de Amherst ... pero yo creo que deberian cubrir mejor y hablar de las comunidades pobres del area, especialmente en estos tiempos de inflaccion, y enfocar en la gente del welfare y desempleados Deberian ensenar sobre las alternativas y recursos existentes en el area.

DAVE EIBEL — Former Sports Editor

In general the Collegian is paid by the students and should be — of — and for the students. The paper has two main purposes, to inform the students, faculty and staff, about what is happening on campus, and secondly, to have a little bit of international news. We, manage to cover the areas which we are supposed to cover as well as we can, based on the amount of money we have available and the number of people we have working for the paper.

In editorials I would like to see the paper taking strong stands in issues related to the campus, and more importantly, world issues: Viet Nam, the Middle East, etc.

Freedom of the Press is the sine qua non of a democratic society. In other words, a democracy can not exist without freedom of the press, because in such a society it only is the free, unregulated flow of ideas which allows a free people to make free choices.

To the Editor:

As a fellow journalist and staff reporter on the Collegian, I can only say I am appalled by the ethics of yellow journalism exhibited by the Editors of Below the Salt and Luis Medina. In printing the article on "Freedom of the Press" by Medina, the editors sanctioned the very abuse of this freedom since the article was merely a smokescreen for a grudge fight.

It is one of the vilest, most insidious tricks that only a scandelmonging rag would use. Luis, under the guise of a shabbily written article which purports to exhort freedom of the press, you have deliberately manipulated the good faith of the editors. You have callously perverted the very freedom of the press you extole to publicly defame a fellow student, Miguel Rivera.

It is the most shamelessly blatant hypocrisy that you would subvert this same freedom of the press for your own nefarious purposes by accusing without ANY substantiation, Miguel Rivera, of certain "interferences with the free press." (The italics are yours.)

Under the poorly masked pretence of lauding freedom of the press and its executors, you deliberately contrived the paragraph entitled "Freedom of the Press Dislike Section" to vent your spleen against a man who disagrees with you on issues of the Hispanic Community here.

As a staff reporter on the Collegian, I accuse the editors of Below the Salt of gross negligence in their responsibilities to freedom of the press.

As a fellow journalist I accuse you, Luis, of committing libel.

Other Voices . . .

by Dennis McNally

Twenty years ago, six young poets got together to do the impossible. They wanted to save American poetry from the hands of the academic critics who were then busily engaged in burying it under a small mountain of obscenely dull journals. The young poets wanted to have a poetry reading that would not be the usual predictable farce of a 'distinguished' looking men wearing a tweed jacket with leather elbow patches reading to the chubby aesthetes of the middle class. They wanted people to sweat at a poetry reading, to cheer and hiss and cry and be afraid and be as flipped out, say, as an excellent set with Charlie Parker could make them. The poets succeeded.

On the evening of October 7, 1955, about one hundred and fifty people jammed into the Six Gallery in San Francisco and heard, among others, Michael McClure and Allen Ginsberg. The audience—and the poets, for that matter—were bonkers, and poetry in the United States has never been the same since, most particularly because of one poem read that night. It began, "I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness, starving hysterical naked, dragging themselves through the Negro streets at dawn looking for an angry fix, angelheaded hipsters burning for the ancient heavenly connection to the starry dynamo in the machinery of night..."

Its name was Howl, and its author, Allen Ginsberg, will be reading at the Student Union Ballroom this Saturday night, March 1, at 8 p.m. Later the following week, another Six Gallery reader, Michael McClure, will be reading at Amherst College. Along with poet Gregory Corso, Peter Orlovsky, Diane DiPrima, Robert Creely, John Wieners, Joe Dunn, and commentators John Clellon Holmes, Ann Charters, and Charles Jarvis, they are sponsored by Other Voices, a symposium which is running the goddamndest [illegible] painting, film, poetry, dance, and theater [illegible] the Five College area has probably ever seen.

I said Allen Ginsberg was going to read this Saturday night, but "read" is a word that doesn't exactly cover what Allen Ginsberg does when he gives you his poetry. He's been through a lot of trips in the last twenty years — wandered the U.S., Europe, India, Southeast Asia and South America, thought he'd met death in an experiment with the hallucinogen Yage on an Amazon river backwater, felt himself growing into a new and mellower state of consciousness on a train to Kyoto, Japan, fought to save Leroi Jones, Lenny Bruce, the Chicago 8, and the ordinary pot smoker in the street, and most of all given us his perceptions, warm, generous and visionary — his poetry. His poems are a record of his life, and that [illegible] us more than we might ever know.

If his involvement in drugs, gay liberation, and the anti-war movement isn't enough to convince you that he's affected your life, perhaps a final example will do. In January, 1967, the freaks of Haight Ashbury came together for the Gathering of the Tribes, the Great Human Be-In in San Francisco. That is what will be on the Student Union stage next Saturday night — a poet, visionary [illegible]

[illegible] Without a Cause and Brando's The Wild Ones will also be shown at various places in the Five Colleges over the two week run. For specific information, see the posters or check tomorrow's Collegian, which will be running the schedule again.

Other events in the first week of the Symposium includes a reading by Diane Diprima at Smith College on Monday night, March 3, and a performance by Ann Halprin and the Dancer's Workshop Company at Smith on Wednesday, March 5.

But it all comes down to San Francisco, and as anybody who's ever been there will tell you, it's [illegible]

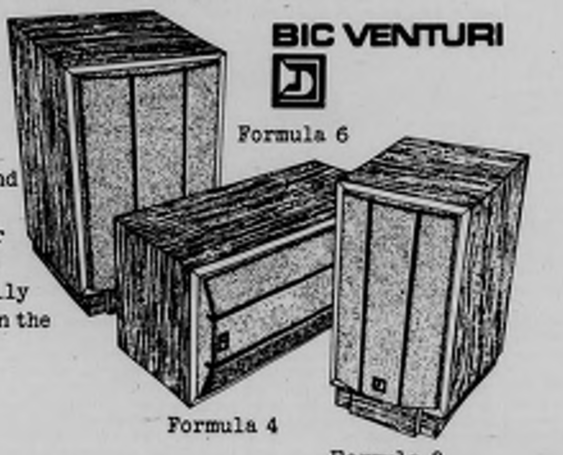
Don't ask us to demonstrate the BIC VENTURI's power handling capacity when the store is crowded.

PLEASE!

BIC VENTURI speakers are more efficient. That means they can deliver more sound, watt for watt, than other speakers. But their rugged design lets them handle more power, too.

The BIC VENTURI Formula 6 is a dramatic 5 times more efficient than most of today's acoustic suspension speakers. Yet it handles 2½ times the power the others do. That means BIC VENTURI can deliver nearly 13 times more sound power--enough to blast most customers out of our store. So, if you want to know how loud "loud' really is, come in some time when the store's empty.

But, if all you want to know is how good is BIC VENTURI's sound, come in anytime. Because even at ordinary listening levels, BIC VENTURI's won't drive other listeners away. Instead, they'll bring them closer. Come in and hear just what we mean.



Model 980

The long anticipated B I C 980 has now arrived, and with it the concept of the belt-driven automatic turntable is finally a reality. The B I C is designed to do well things no previous turntable could do at all. Its belt drive and low speed (300 RPM) motor assure virtually inaudible rumble, and the unconventional record changing system allows for more flexibility in operating modes with greater mechanical simplicity. An electronically controlled variable speed control with built in strobe allows precise speed adjustments with no mechanical linkages to wear and cause flutter. Many other sophisticated design features are included but the ultimate proof of value is in the "human engineering" — this is a turntable designed to be used by people, not admired by technicians A Stanton 500E cartridge is included, providing flat, low distortion response.

They Call Him Laughing Brooks

The quality of our laughter

Young Frankenstein
Directed by Mel Brooks reviewed by Steven Fine

YOUNG FRANKENSTEIN

Mel Brooks-Comical genius or sexual pervert?

Young Frankenstein is in black-and-white...no offense. But why should there be? For it is the latest concoction from the wacky and strikingly inoffensive mind of Mel Brooks. In The Producers, a stage troupe performs a number called "Springtime for Hitler"; in Blazing Saddles, a group of cowboys plays musical farts; and now in Young Frankenstein, the monster rapes his creator's fiancee. So what is so strikingly inoffensive? Namely, that potentially offensive scenes are solidly engulfed in the brand of existential good nature we call "camp." After all, everybody farts...and certainly, if I were Frankenstein, you can bet your bottom dollar that I wouldn't settle for mere strangulation. So faithfully does Brooks cling to the banner of good nature that our responsive roars reduce the sober NOW picketers who protested the portrayal of rape as a pleasurable experience to the status of atheists.

But I am not Frankenstein. "A man watches a movie," wrote the late film critic Robert Warshow, "and the critic must admit that he is that man." Therefore, if only for the sake of this criticism, we must examine the quality of our laughter, which is the test of comedy.

Why do we laugh when Frankenstein mounts the frightened, lily-pure fiancee of his creator? Certainly there is the irony that this Southern sweetheart who will not permit her fiance to violate her, must see her pretensions to chastity, sensitivity, and femininity debunked and exposed before the mechanical, insensitive onslaught of our hero. But it is less the element of incongruity than of grotesqueness — the display of mechanical sex (and the subsequent reference to a particular, grotesquely lengthy mechanical sex) — that provides the laughs. The element of grotesqueness need not be, much less overwhelm and render meaningless the element of incongruity. For it has been invoked by a moral choice to regard the specific action (the display of a sex machine) as grotesque. After all, grotesqueness is but a description of moral outrage.

How have we arrived at this moral choice? Frankenstein yields a monsterous reflection of our need for sex in a world that places more strictures on sex. A world that abstractly places moral strictures on sex is a world of our making; therefore, it is to be defended as allowing for human government of human nature, as the best of possible worlds. The violation in any rape is partially of the morality of human concern in that the rapist chooses to live in an impossible world of utter, non-human free will. But there is the added condemnation, the added charges of impossibility, absurdity, fantasy, and grotesqueness in the case of the mechanical Frankenstein, for his not having the obstacle of being human to overcome. We are jealous of the sexy monster, and so we stand on our hind legs and bark righteous indignation.

...Or do we? Actually, we laugh at the rape scene. We would be angered, but the grotesqueness of the sexual impulse in a mechanical man is embodied in a vision. Being a mere vision, we quickly come to realize, it cannot violate the possible; being grotesque (that is, morally repulsive), we must rely on the more on its being a vision. We rejoice in this compensatory factor; but we must not regard it as such, lest we admit to moral outrage. Therefore, we laugh loudly, though not without reservation. The reservation stems from our inability to laugh at precisely what is projected on the screen.

In this sense, Brooks demeans the spirit of laughter. We can now conclude that NOW serves more directly (and direction is what it is all about) as an instrument of social change than does Young Frankenstein as an instrument of laughter. The laughs are real enough, but the laughter is mixed with, and diluted by, an appreciation of its relative insignificance...that is, its silliness. Had Brooks considered the implications of his actions, rather than merely spewing forth incongruities and passing them off to critics as zaniness and-or surrealism a la the Marx brothers, he may have succeeded in investing laughter with the significance it deserves as a basic human need. But he is merely silly and inoffensive, those very factors which are mistaken by diehards for the special quality of the laughter...that is, its significance.

Queen: Oblivious to Fweep-Fweeps

by David Miller

SHEER HEART ATTACK QUEEN
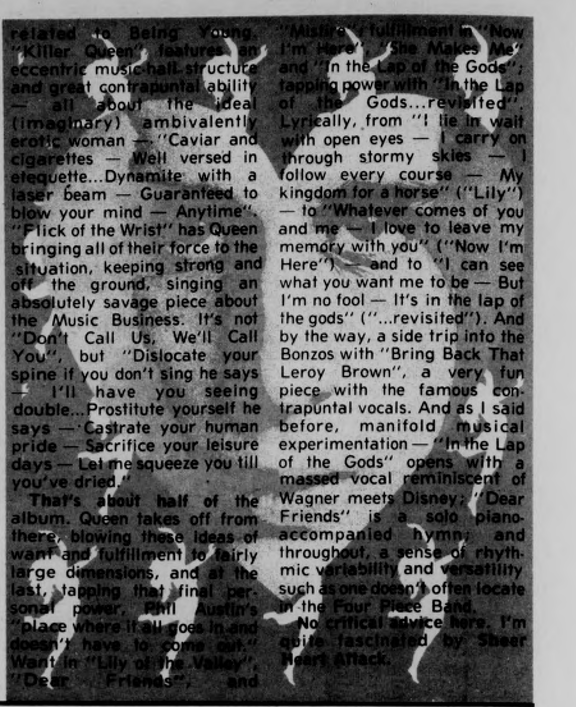
Elektra 7E-1026
Total Playing Time: 38:44

Remember the four-piece band? "no synthesizers", as it says on the back cover. Queen is a four-piece band of a type that I personally haven't experienced since the Who — not content to boogie, not backed by a thousand sidepersons, not self-conscious (save for the ridiculous cover art). They are four guys who play guitars, keyboards, percussions, and sing a lot; they experiment with great success, move surely in a hundred directions, and seem fortunately oblivious to orchestras and fweep-fweeps. Sheer Heart Attack is a fine album, electric and unified — a none too common combination.

Adolescence plays a part in a lot of the groups lyric concern: "Brighton Rock", "Tenement Funster" and "Stone Cold Crazy" are full of the kind of longing desperation which lit up Quadrophenia. Queen here is the "young, poor, and crazy" kid who never left rock and roll, who celebrates 'cause his band's gonna "make the speed of light outta this place". And light it up because he is crazy and "gotta get away from this cold stone floor". The band here is pulsing (heavy metal doesn't mean sopors), complex and sometimes painful, or else moving to delicacy — as in "Brighton Rock's" lovely long instrumental.

Queen lights it up: "Young, poor and crazy."



"Killer Queen" and "Flick of the Wrist" are also songs related to Being Young. "Killer Queen" features an eccentric music-hall structure and great contrapuntal ability — all about the ideal (imaginary) ambivalently erotic woman — "Caviar and cigarettes — Well versed in etequette...Dynamite with a laser beam — Guaranteed to blow your mind — Anytime". "Flick of the Wrist" has Queen bringing all of their force to the situation, keeping strong and off the ground, singing an absolutely savage piece about the Music Business. It's not "Don't Call Us, We'll Call You", but "Dislocate your spine if you don't sing he says — I'll have you seeing double...Prostitute yourself he says — Castrate your human pride — Sacrifice your leisure days — Let me squeeze you till you've dried."

That's about half of the album. Queen takes off from there, blowing these ideas of want and fulfillment to fairly large dimensions, and at the last, tapping that final personal power, Phil Austin's "place where it all goes in and doesn't have to come out." Want in "Lily of the Valley", "Dear Friends", and "Misfire"; fulfillment in "Now I'm Here", "She Makes Me" and "In the Lap of the Gods"; tapping power with "In the Lap of the Gods...revisited". Lyrically, from "I lie in wait with open eyes — I carry on through stormy skies — I follow every course — My kingdom for a horse" ("Lily") — to "Whatever comes of you and me — I love to leave my memory with you" ("Now I'm Here") — and to "I can see what you want me to be — But I'm no fool — It's in the lap of the gods" ("...revisited"). And by the way, a side trip into the Bonzos with "Bring Back That Leroy Brown", a very fun piece with the famous contrapuntal vocals. And as I said before, manifold musical experimentation — "In the Lap of the Gods" opens with a massed vocal reminiscent of Wagner meets Disney; "Dear Friends" is a solo piano-accompanied hymn; and throughout, a sense of rhythmic variability and versatility such as one doesn't often locate in the Four Piece Band.

No critical advice here. I'm quite fascinated by Sheer Heart Attack.

IN CONCERT:
The Marshall Tucker Band
Elvin Bishop
James Montgomery Band
Springfield Civic Center
Feb. 19

The Finkel-Koplik group presented a Capricorn artist concert to 8500 extremely receptive fans last Wednesday night. In keeping with maximum money trends, there were no seats on the dirt floor, so the die-hards jammed the front of the stage, sardine style.

James Montgomery opened the concert with typical style, deviating very little from the music they played the last two times here. They played to the local sympathies of the crowd, saying things like how great it was to be in Massachusetts again, but they really came off as an true opening band. The original lead guitarist, Peter Malik, has left the band, and Jim McCarty, of past Detroit Wheels, Buddy Miles Express, and Cactus fame, was given a lot of solo time by the band. He was easily the musical standout of the band, but I really have a hard time seeing him fit in with the Boogie-and-Blues that is the basis of the Montgomery Band. Let it be said he is a showman, a flash guitarist, and could be what the band needs to move them from nowhere on the charts nationwide to somewhere. But I doubt it.

Elvin Bishop: Tasty & poppin'.

The Elvin Bishop Band followed with a set of good time Southern blues. Bishop has moved around a bit since his days as second guitarist with Butterfield's original blues band. Back then it was unusual, a white band playing Chicago blues. Today the movement is toward the Southern rock and blues bands and Elvin seems to have made the transition very easily. The band played most of the songs from their first album, Let It Flow, choosing only one time, "Wide River", from their new album, Juke Joint Jump, which will be out in April. The songs from Let It Flow were basically unchanged from the album versions with a lot more instrumentalising, featuring all the members of Elvin's band. "Wide River" gets into a gospel feel and though it's built around just a two chord structure, it becomes a hypnotic, almost religious chant.

Elvin certainly was the most relaxed performer of the night, choosing to sit down at one time to play some slow blues. At this point he also brought on Toy Caldwell from Tucker for some exceptionally tasty blues guitar work. The Bishop Band's set closed with two more members of the Marshall Tucker Band joining for what seems to be everyone's old favorite, "Bring it on Home."

The Marshall Tucker Band got to the stage about 3½ hours after the start of the show and played for a little more than a hour and a half. The band played an energetic set, moving effortlessly from ripping guitar passages to graceful flute solos. Their choice of material again seemed none — too adventurous, choosing most tunes from their first two albums. So again, that which I had not heard a lot of sounded best. In this case it was "This Old Cowboy" which is their new single, and "In My Own Way", a love song.

As usual, the concert had everyone saying how they were going to play all night, while in actuality each group ran through their standard length sets. Also a concert cliche now is your Traditional-Light-the-Candle-Match-Salute at the end, which got me wondering when was the last time I went to a concert and this wasn't done.

THE FIRST MINUTE OF A NEW DAY
Gil Scott Heron, Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band
(Arista A-4030)

If the new thing that we need in this world could be a group that communicates with subtle ideas to start a revolution, this group is making a damn strong effort to get it going. This disc also seems to be climatic in this manner, as each successive cut adds on to the preach for peace and unity among all men. What's in it is introduced by a verse in the opener: "Seasons may change and feelings may change, but music remains and it heals you." From there on, the songs deal with more serious ways in which we can heal ourselves, but in no sense is the instrumental background serious.

Very smooth, very even rhythm is combined with the non-powering voice of Gil Scott Heron. "The Liberation Song" is lyrically the most effective piece. It tells of three colors, red, black and green, all of which have negative descriptions on the "flag of freedom" excepting the latter. To throw them all in together would be an indication of acheiving the social impossible dream, yet it and all of the following songs seem to tap us and bring us out of our seeming unawareness. One piece which is spoken, entitled "Pardon Our Analysis", gives us all the fault-causing political smalltalk. The underlying message is "we beg your pardon America, because it (Nixon's let-off) is not your pardon to give". It is informally read, but probably intensifies the purpose of putting such a work together. Despite this, I feel that if left out, the listener wouldn't be lost. It's just that same old blah-blah you've heard at the dinner table.

There's nothing uptight at all. The First Minute of a New Day is something like the type of entertainment we hear around the valley here. The music is relaxing and the words conveying, so it wouldn't be bad to play for your crowd if they're into such stuff. Chalk one up for a soul group that is making a quest for abolishing pessimism in our generation.

THE COUNTRY BOY
K.C. DOUGLAS
time 41:20

Yes fans, Arhoolie has done it again. They dug up Mississippi bluesman K.C. Douglas in the Oakland DPW. He and his group play every weekend, with K.C. plannin on playing full-time come 4 years and "retirement." Arhoolie caught him on a weekend last year and got him to lay down this disc.

Tho K.C.'s lived on the West Coast for 30 years, he's still a "country boy." He picked up a lot of his blues in the Mississippi Delta playin with the legendary Tommy Johnson. And tho he's been long removed, he's still got those Delta Blues, mama. As his card says, "it's the blues for every occasion."

Side I is just K.C. ably assisted by Richard Riggins on harp. "Fanny Lou" opens the side and sets the pace, not only musically, with K.C. on accoustic and Riggins keepin the beat with short chips and wails on the harp, but also subject-wise, i.e., women trouble ("she been seein that hoodoo man gain").

The second side plugs in and picks up the tempo considerably. The addition of Ron Thompson on slide guitar and Jim Marshall on drums provides a fuller sound. "Mercury Boogie" (Gotta git me a Mercury Fowd) and "Catfish Blues" are real cookers. For a slower, yet rich blues K.C. gives us "High Water Risin."

K.C. Douglas hasn't recorded much (last time was '60) as Chicago companies didn't cross the Sierras. But the folks at the Big A (they're already there) have got the goods. So treat your ears to the West Coast "Country Boy."

Open, To Love
PAUL BLEY
(ECM 1023)
Total Playing Time: 42:32

Paul Bley is husband of Carla Bley, both modern musicians and responsible for the too-little-known classic Escalator Over the Hill (available by mail, contact Kostek or MacKenzie for more information) — a mammoth multi-record set of experimental jazz (assuming that the word "jazz" has any meaning at this point — it seems like sound to me). Open, to Love was recorded in 1972 in Oslo, and is a collection of solo piano pieces written by the Bleys and by Annette Peacock — about whom I know absolutely nothing. It is a lovely record, continually changing and moving, but quiet and filled with peace.

Much of the music on this record is truly atonal — without a key or constant tonal center; instead, the sound shifts from area to area, tonality to tonality, accepting whatever comes in its way. There is an acceptance of piano sound as sound, and an enjoyment of that fact. Importantly, there is no attempt to "justify" the lack of a tonal center through the use of some fixed system of compositions: the changes, resonances, and intervals come of themselves. There is also rhythmic and stylistic modulation — everything changes — phrases become clusters, strict rhythms maintain themselves and then disintegrate, intensity gives way to space and silence (and of course vice versa for these too). "Closer", "Started", and "Seven" are particularly notable for their use of resonance — melodic fragments, single notes, and clusters are sustained, creating complex harmonies by overtones. "Nothing Ever Was, Anyway" features this as well, particularly through the note-by-note build-up of chords. The compositions also include some delicate work on the strings of the instrument — only one string used at a time in most cases.

Another strong current in Open, to Love is the extension of conventional jazz harmonies — the basic material of "Ida Lupino", "Started", and "Harlem". This is achieved through the asymmetrical right-hand rhythms and atonal melodic lines, which in "Ida Lupino" contrast with the left hand's fairly constant rhythmic pulse, and in "Started" extend to both hands, the pulse being absent. The chords, harmonies, and cadences are here, familiar, but out or context, re-arranged and moving freely. "Harlem" is the piece on the record which comes the closest to containing a riff — it's based on a song structure with repeating harmonic patterns. The right hand remains exploratory nonetheless.

There's a certain amount of environmental sound present on the album, largely inadvertant but charming. Bley sings along with himself at many points — not always an easy thing to do. "Nothing Ever Was, Anyway" contains the sound of pages turning — an occurrence which ought to be more frequent on piano albums, but somehow isn't. This acceptance of accident is what makes this album so refreshing — it is open to love because it is open to sound.

Roxy Music's Contemptible Brilliance

Country Life
ROXY MUSIC
Atco

By E. Patrick McQuaid

Roxy's latest release may not be the best English import of the year but it must surely rank high among the most interesting.

Country Life might suggest that the album is some sort of country style music and upon an initial listen you might contemplate the British conception of country as opposed to our established country-western. You can't really call it rock, and certainly not jazz. It doesn't correspond with our ideas of country music either. It is an entity in itself; it stands alone and actually cannot be compared with too many other albums, especially American productions.

The most interesting aspect of the record is probably the lyrics. Although it has its share of idealistic romance such as: "But I know the words you'd like to hear-Are simply 'I love you'" it has retained a reporte with the language. In the cut "Triptych" the listener is confronted with a somewhat "wasteland" in song:

"Here the soil is barren
Here — nothing grows
But crosses
They — know not what they do
You — your forgiveness
Falls as dew"

Needless to say it is the Christian saga again. The band draws on antoher hero of the absurd, Casanova for a cut by that name.

"You — the hero
So many times
You've loved
And didn't linger...
...Monumental
A precious jewel
Or just a fool"

The record draws on an endless supply of mythological, phallic, and semi-religious imagery to produce not only some fine music, but some outstanding poetry.

"And before you go to sleep at night
Preying shadows — do they ask you why?
And in the morning through the afternoon
Do you wonder where you're going to?"

In Concert:
Roxy Music
Orchestra Luna
Orpheum Theatre, Boston
Feb. 20

by Michael L.I. Bloom

Brian Ferry, lead singer of Roxy music: an old rocker's transitional values slapped into forced pleasure and nihilistic sensuality.

If you presume that Roxy play old movies set to music, then Boston's own Orchestra Luna play old music set to movies. Before founding Luna, songwriter Richard Kinscherf and poet-in-residence Peter Barrett attempted a Broadway musical, elements of which remain in their collaborations. Kinscherf has an actor's rubber face (prone to embarrassing grimaces while he plays his self-taught piano) and sings like Rudy Vallee. Barrett choreographs the female singers, Lisa Kinscherf (sister) and Liz Gallagher, and anyone else who is not doing anything else at the moment (including sometimes the roadie) in little dance routines or fantasies. With virginal voices to the fore, the music sounds much like Gilbert and Sullivan operas, a precursor both of Broadway and Hollywood. But Kinscherf's writing can take the form of popular music from any era but the present.

What distinguishes Luna from kitsch is their honesty. Their odd situations and literary allusions are often used to make a point about human action and self-knowledge. In their hands, Steinbeck's Of Mice and Men became a defense of homophily and a query into the roots of terror. The inability of people to communicate seems to be a favorite subject, touched upon in many of their songs but most prominently in their lengthy period peice, "Doris Dreams." Of course, whatever malaise their weighty subject matter induced in the audience was eliminated by their traditional closing number: a Vaudvillean treatment of "(You Gotta Have) Heart," complete with Barrett's hilarious baseball satire.

For Roxy to successfully follow this, the mood had to be completely transformed form intellectual appreciation to instantly emotional reactions. This was accomplished by playing These Foolish Things, the first Bryan Ferry solo album, over the PA during the intermission. Hearing oldies like "The Tracks of my Tears" and "It's My Party" in versions so hopelessly untrue to the original is almost like hearing them again for the first time, and the listener tends to regress to early adolescence.

The musicians of Roxy took the stage to the most thunderous ovation fifty people can produce, while the non-worshippers wondered what to make of it. Phil Manzanera, the dedicated hippie guitarist, wore electric plaid and the world's most horrendous sounding Rickenbacker twelve-string. Minister without portfolio Eddie Jobson (Eno's stalwart replacement) wore formal tails made apparently of Naugahyde, and carried a violin consisting only of neck, strings and steel outline of the body. Paul Thompson was behind the drums, only his foot long California blond hair visible. Andy Mackay wore a Robin Hood jumpsuit with his expanded DA haircut and had to jump around keeping the reeds wet on four saxes and an oboe (he's the world's funkiest oboeist). Only journeyman bassist John Wetton looked halfway normal — since leaving the ashes of King Crimson he's taking various odd gigs to pay the bills, but he's gotten so good it's scary.

As the band went into the opening strains of "Prairie Rose," Ferry oozed out from the wings in tuxedo and patent-leather hair. He was chewing gum, and generally looking his best to look like he never finished high school. As he began not so much to sing as to spit out lyrics with toal paraplegic contempt, he took on more of a reptilian aspect — Quasimodo cast as a Mafia hit man. This grew annoying as he projected this image through the evening almost without exception: your reporter had gone disguised as Rael Imperial Aerosol Kid, a persona Peter Gabriel had borrowed from old Ferry, and I remembered thinking that Gabriel and I were gonna stomp this wimp's ass.

But this isn't Ferry's true persona either, but a necessary consequence of the music he writes. Roxy is not heavy metal; rather, it is twisted, smoking heaps of shrapnel. The songs follow no accepted rock pattern, unless they intend to subvert the reasonable. They start and stop in the most unlikely places. The instrumentation is manic, with Manzanera's jagged guitars vying with Ferry's affected vocalizing for the title of Most Obnoxious Thing On Stage. All this is calculated to make Roxy grate on your nerves, to inflame your sensibilities, and render you more receptive to Ferry's subtle message, much as sunburned skin registers every feather touch.

Pause for comment: While not what one would call a cinematic or theatrical personality, Ferry has a great respect for movies and learned not only his compositional style but his emotional manipulation techniques from them. This is why his songs tend to be unsupportable romances, and it also explains "Three and Nine" on the new album, a dedication to old movies. His best moment in the whole show, besides his desperate gaiety in "Bitter Sweet," occurred at the end of "A Song for Europe," when he whistled a few offhand bars, slipped his hands into the pockets of his tux, turned and shambled off just like Humphrey Bogart. Play it again, Bryan.

The payoff is in the band's advertising slogan: "It Isn't Rock, It's Roxy." Ben Gerson described Ferry as mature, which is just about correct if you figure the most adult thing you can do is to stop whining and face up to the fact that...whatever. In Ferry's case, the vestige of greaser in his act marks him as an old rocker who has found all his values to be transitory, vanishing over the years as new generations embrace new trends. Largely he is resigned to it, but when the loss is too great to bear (or when his thrilling romances lack celluloid perfection) he leaps into the ritzy, glitzy, roxy entertainments of forced pleasure and nihilistic sensuality. Roxy Music is simultaneously the most contemptible artistic statement of the rock era — and some of its most brilliant music.

To Be True
HAROLD MELVIN
& THE BLUE NOTES
FEATURING THEODORE PENDERGRASS
(Philadelphia International KZ 33148)
time 38:46

To Be True has four real sharpies — the moving "Where Are All My Friends?", the fulsome "To Be True", "Nobody Could Take Your Place" and "Bad Luck". These are successful because of the Notes' great ensemble vocals they are, ah, noted for, as well as Theodore Pendergrass' heavy leads. The TSOP band cooks righteously behind, and all moves like it was born to. There is however, a bit too much shading in the 'nice' blending of strings and massed voices. Things really bog down in pettiness and overdone syrup on the remaining four cuts, reaching me diocrity at best, a level the Notes can easily do without.

Acquiring The Taste
GENTLE GIANT
(Vertigo VEL-1005)
Playing Time: 39:14

"It is our goal to expand the frontiers of contemporary music at the risk of being very unpopular." (From the liner notes of Acquiring the Taste, Gentle Giant's second album, originally released in 1971). Very true and very prophetic — this album is extremely sophisticated, even by 1975 standards, and of course it went nowhere — Gentle Giant remained almost completely unknown up until late last year when popular music finally caught up with one of their lesser products, The Power and The Glory, hence the re-re-release of this, their last album for their old label.

Acquiring the Taste is somewhat flawed by over-production and a bit too much self-indulgence, but is perhaps the most thoroughly enjoyable of their releases to date. Their zany instrumental interplay is smooth and tight and contrasts well with the Baroque-ish vocal layerings and the somewhat cluttery arrangements, particularly on the opening cut, "Pentagruel's Nativity". If you liked The Power and The Glory you'll probably like this one better. (B+)

Equinox Express Elevator
HOWARD ROBERTS
(Impulse ASD — 9299)

This is a pretty weird album for a variety of reasons. First, it's made by a well-known jazz guitarist (but you'd never suspect as much). It consists entirely of original material that can't be categorized, since elements of jazz and classical music have been blended, along with Latin styles, the so-called "jazz-rock" similar to that of Chick Corea and the zany (but brilliant) arrangements one would expect from Frank Zappa.

It has absolutely no commercial potential (unless you can envision titles like "Harold J. Ostly, The County Tax Assessor" and "Real Freak Of Nature Historical Monument" on the Top Ten). But it's fun to listen to, and as they say, "you're cheating yourself if it isn't loud enough". One must concentrate to comprehend. It's probably unlike anything you've heard before. And it's all dedicated to Albert Einstein.

Geetarist extroardinare Howard Roberts: "delightful... pictures for your ears."

Good guitar effects through synthesizer as well as some delightful surprises in arrangement are featured both in "Slam" and "Growing National Concern". In the latter cut, piano, organ and moog synthesizer drift into a woman's (double-tracked) vocal line, superimposed on some really fine guitarring by Roberts. Beautiful.

There are mood and time changes on nearly every composition on this album. There's something for everybody, and it succeeds. Words cannot describe such a creative collage, but if it sounds intriguing, I'd suggest you pick up a copy, put on headphones and let Howard Roberts make pictures for your ears.

THE BAKER-GURVITZ
ARMY
(Janus JXS 7015)
TIME 42:08

Yes yes yes, that Baker, and yes again, the famous Adrian Gurvitz, 1st lt., ex-Three Man' Army. Ginger leaves fly-high Air Force to straddle various thangs and now slogs it out in trenches with Army. What transpires is much silliness (you'd have thought that old Gin would have had his fill of dumb gee-tarists by now. Nope. Hasn't Has not.), brief bits of fire lit only by Ginger, who has lost a lot apparantly, and two songs of note. The rest of the record is "sensitive and straight" — forget it, it's shlurpy city! "Feel me—Love me—Oh, so love me—Can you take me—Never break me no—Try expect me—Never rape me." Not-so bright humans expressing mundane feelings is usually.

It comes out to two cuts. "Mad Jack" punches its way along on sheer gall. Imagine Ginger reading in his best Pressed Rat voice the following: "Thirteen vehicles died—The very first day—And a poor old Donkey—Flew Away—And an eagle—And umpteen goats—Met their match—Meeting man-made metal monsters—It just didn't do—They couldn't beat Jack—To Arpanou." Great! Well worth a spin after watching American Sportsman. "Since Beginning" is the fairly snappy musical number, with a broad vision and sharp turns befitting old Ginger, letting him pound away blissfully.

A 15 minute of good music C-.

Non-incumbent opposes rent control

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Diana Romer, the only woman candidate and non-incumbent running for board of selectmen, said she was not in favor of rent control and that little could be done to alleviate the problems resulting from rescinding the mandatory dorm policy.

Romer said though she did favor policies in holding rents down, rent control is not the solution. "Rent control works under very specific circumstances, such as during World War II. When people know it will be maintained for a short crisis period, they are willing to make sacrifices," she said.

Romer said rent control had been tried "in every part of the country and has never worked" because people find loop holes like charging for key money or if they want the apartment bad enough, tenants are willing to "pay under the table".

Her solution to the rent problem is subsidized public housing for the elderly, low income families and government allocations to those who need it.

"The university," Romar said, "should make dormitory living more attractive at lower prices," this would entice students to remain on campus.

"It is unfair for Amherst residents to carry the tax burden," Romer said. According to her, the University should contribute towards the lock up and the fire department.

Another major cost to the town, which the university is partially responsible, is the rising school budget caused by more children of the married university students attending Amherst's schools, Romer said. Because married students are renting, there is no direct compensation to the town.

"It doesn't seem right the town should have to pay for that service," Romer added. According to the campaigning selectwoman, there is a federal government procedure that would pay for this service and "the town should begin to look into it".

Romer said she would like to see more student involvement in Amherst town government. "I have lived here for twenty years, I have watched the student population grow, the voting age lowered and more students becoming interested in government, but students lack the experience and knowledge of how town government works," Romer said.

She said she has assisted the League of Women Voters in compiling a booklet "Our town of Amherst" which will be published by the end of March explaining town government, informing citizens how they can participate and influence town government, and telling them which appointed and elected town officials to go see for additional information.

When people present a petition to the town clerk, probably the town clerk will distribute a couple of pages from this booklet informing them of the procedure and giving them tips for greater affectiveness, she said.

"It's important to have students on town committees," Romer said. The town is always looking for citizens to be on committees, she added, in the past "the selectmen have done a "good job of appointing students specifically to committees".

Romer said, "running against two incumbents will be difficult and makes for vigorous campaigning". She said she is running because she believes there is a "need for a candidate who has experience and training in financial and governmental issues."

Committee formed last night for Town Meeting candidates

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Staff Reporter

A "Committee to Get the Ball Rolling" was established last night for possible candidates for Amherst's Town Meeting elections, April 4.

Approximately 20 persons, not all students, met in Hampden Commons to discuss forming a platform around "common issues."

The five member committee plans on drawing up a tentative list of campaign issues that will be presented at the meeting next Tuesday.

According to Mark Leuhan, chairman of the meeting, rent control was the most central issue the candidates may support. Other suggestions were a no-growth policy for Amherst and child care proposals. However, no action was taken on any issue.

Leuhan said that 30 persons may be running for Town Meeting office, but added "he wasn't sure."

Many at the meeting said they did not consider themselves as a "group", but rather as persons who are interested in running for Town Meeting. Nomination papers must be filed by March 11 with the town clerk at the town hall.

Revised academic rules may be 'retroactive'

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Chairman of the Dean's Undergraduate Deans Committee Marty Miller said some things in the revised academic regulations "may be retroactive."

But he added that he hoped the regulations would be "effective with the class of '78."

"I don't know for a fact," said Miller, "but I would assume that the catalogue which a class enters on is a contract which is binding."

[illegible]

A few of the revisions have become controversial issues such as all "pass" grades automatically being changed to a grade if a grade would improve the cum, and all F's being figured into the cumulative average.

Miller said there was a "negative faculty reaction" to assigning a grade in a pass-fail course if it raised the cum. Many felt this was "manipulation".

Miller said that the new regulations are not final. "We have talked, not dismissed, these questions. This will take a lot of input, since these are not one-sided issues, he added.

[illegible]

Jon Beals, chairman of the academic affairs of the Student Senate said, "The council has been open and willing to hear the views of academic matters." He suggested a polling of the student body to increase awareness of the issues.

Officials deny cost loans reason

Money problems delay nuke plant

By CHAS O'CONNOR
Staff Reporter

Treasurer of Northeast Utilities (NU) Leonard O'Connor said yesterday that there is no basis for the allegation that the delay in constructing the 1.2 billion nuclear power plants was prompted by the company's attempts to secure low cost loans.

In a decision made Tuesday, the board of trustees at NU voted to delay the construction of the power plants because of severe financial difficulties. However, NU President Lelan F. Sillin, Jr. announced yesterday that the licensing procedures and the purchase orders involved in the construction of the facilities would not be postponed, creating a cloud of confusion about the issue.

After the announcement, anti-nuclear opponents speculated that the delay was made so that NU could obtain low interest state and federal loans that would be available under President Gerald Ford's proposed energy plan.

O'Connor noted that the first decision was prompted by economic reasons and there was no hidden meaning involved in it. The continuation of the construction procedures is a matter of legal tieups and prudent foresight, he said.

The licensing procedures are not simple ones, and actually involve four separate permits. The first one would allow the construction of the plants to begin. Following that, a second one must be obtained in order to finish the construction. Once the building of the plants are finished, a third license must be obtained in order to begin operating them with a low power output. A final permit must be obtained to run the facilities on full power.

The granting of these various permits takes place over several years, O'Connor said. The full power permit for the Millstone plant in Waterford, Connecticut was just granted recently. That plant was finished in 1967.

Because the hearing for the initial license for the Montague plant has finally come before the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NCR) in Washington, it would not be prudent at this time to stop the application process, said O'Connor. If granted, the permit would be valid for a few years, allowing NU flexibility in dealing with the issue. A license from the NRC would not necessarily mean that NU would reverse its decision to hold back on the project, said O'Connor.

Studio 75: more for fans who like it

By SANDY [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Studio 75's first major production of the semester, "As You Like It," has proven so popular that publicity manager Ben DiSalvo is turning people away in droves, not an easy task for him.

"How do you tell somebody 'There's no more tickets, all the shows are sold out, but thank you for your interest?' " he asked.

"They don't want to hear that; they want to hear 'Yes I can squeeze you in somewhere.' But that's impossible," he added.

According to DiSalvo, 15 shows were originally scheduled, plus a preview night for friends, relatives and department faculty, but three matinees have been added since, and sold out within hours. The original 15 shows were sold out by Feb. 18.

DiSalvo doesn't quite know what to make of it.

"I don't know where they're all coming from, or why they all want to see this particular play.

"What I hope the reason is, that those who saw it thought it was fantastic and went and told their friends," he said.

What he hopes doesn't happen is that people come to the Fine Arts Building expecting to see the production presented on the main stage, when in reality it's presented in the Studio Theatre.

"I hope nobody comes just to see the Main Stage and not pay attention to the performance. But right on the tickets it says 'Studio 75,' so there should be no misunderstanding.

"But I really know that's not why people are coming. I wish I did," he said.

The Studio Theatre is the root of all his problems, DiSalvo said, because it holds only 90 people. He said if the performances were in the Main Stage, more people would get to see it, or else the cast could cut down on the number of performances. The Main Stage is not yet completed.

He said that with the addition of three more matinees, the cast is forced into doing five shows in the last three days of the run, which is pretty grueling.

"The cast is really excited to know that everybody loves it so much. They've put in a tremendous amount of work and it's paid off," he said.

DiSalvo said that the play was put together fast, with only three weeks rehearsal time, starting Feb. 10. Each person involved, whether cast or crew, and there are [illegible] altogether, spent 8 to 12 hours a day doing his part, in addition to attending meetings three times a day.

Those involved in the production are mainly theatre majors, and some from elsewhere in the Five College area, according to DiSalvo.

Prof refuses to sign state minimum hours form

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Biochemistry professor Edward W. Westhead yesterday threw away the form he is required by law to fill out accounting for his time spent as a faculty member, and charged the University administration with "kowtowing to unreasonable interference by the State legislature."

The value of a faculty member can't be coded by the number of hours he spends at his job," said Westhead in a Collegian interview. "It is effectiveness which counts," he added.

In a letter to the Collegian Wednesday, Westhead called filling out the form a waste of time.

Westhead sees the much debated contact hours amendment as "only a little part of a big problem." The legislators in Boston don't understand the role of the universities as a center of learning in society, said Westhead.

Last year, when the minimum contact hours law was passed, Westhead wrote to Senator James Kelley, Jr., chairman of the Senate Ways and Means committee to express his discomfort with the law. Kelley replied that he agreed with Westhead about "the possible lack of complete understanding of a professor's work week."

Westhead feels that a university scientist is responsible for developing new knowledge because of the technological bind in which society has found itself. "A faculty member has a professional obligation to review publication and grant applications, and to interact to review publications and grant applications, and to interact with and advise government agencies with respect to profession-related policy decisions," said Westhead.

"These hours don't show up on a contact hours form," he said.

Westhead is currently chairman of the bio-medical division of the American Chemical Society's committee for developing public policy. The committee's function is to work with the U.S. Office of Management and Budget on improving the priority-setting process in federal research programs. Westhead's concern is the funding of biomedical research.

Westhead also charged President Wood's office with failing to communicate to the legislature and the public the necessity of high-quality, low-cost public education.

"A high percentage of UMass students have blue-collar backgrounds. If they are to compete with students from expensive private colleges on the basis of their talent they need access to high-quality faculty members and to the kind of thinking which leads to high-class graduate education," said Westhead.

"The quality of a UMass education can't get better if the administration allows funds to be cut, said Westhead.

Westhead said that he doesn't anticipate any repercussions because of his failure to complete the form. "In most organizations, employees are evaluated by their supervisors. In the fall, I filed a four-page form with my department head. The legislature is doing the evaluation of contact hours independently," said Westhead.

Provost Robert Gluckstern, Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs declined comment on Westhead's action when contacted last night by the Collegian.

Campus-wide budget slashes to threaten Everywomen's Center

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Staff Reporter

Breaking with tradition has never been easy. Yet it was innovative, non-traditional thought that only two years ago launched the Everywoman's Center. Now, in the face of campus-wide budget cuts, that same trends could cause the Center to sink.

"We're not part of any traditional project," said Joan Sweeney, a member of the Center's budget and fund-raising committee. "Given the crunch, we're looked on as superfluous as this. We could be one of the first to go," she added.

Originally funded by the division of Continuing Education, the Everywoman's Center now relies on four sources for its funding: the special programs department of the Provost division, student affairs, administrative services, and the "seed money" lent by Continuing Ed for special events, which the Center later repays.

Each year, Sweeney explained, the Center has felt the crunch because of its reliance on "soft money." This year, with money tighter than ever, programs like the Everywoman's Center find funds much harder to get.

"Right now, we're battling with the mentality of those in the administration who view us as an extra," said Sweeney.

Everywoman's Center emerged out of a strong feminist movement in the 1960s. Its major goal then was to aid women in getting the type of education ordinarily denied them, and to provide women with access to opportunities formerly inaccessible to them.

Now, two years later, the Center's office in 506 Goodell offers guidance in everything from job discrimination to health and sex counselling. A staff of twenty, none of whom work full time, divide into eight specialized groups (academics, career planning, etc.) which try to provide a supportive atmosphere for the woman seeking aid. An outside evaluation by the division of continuing education revealed that 15,000 women had been serviced by the Center in a period of one year.

"What's satisfying is seeing a women come in and knowing that we have the resources to help her," said Sweeney. Have the goals of the Center been realized? "We're getting there," said Sweeney, "inch by inch."

Ford expands study of foreign discrimination

Religions, racial allegations probed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Ford yesterday included the armed services in his investigation of foreign discrimination against Americans.

The President ordered the State, Justice and Commerce Departments Wednesday to check against foreign businesses and governments practicing religious or racial discrimination against Americans. Yesterday, he told Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger to determine if there is foreign discrimination against American military personnel abroad.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen quoted Ford as saying such discrimination is "totally repugnant to American principles." He told reporters "that is the President's policy on all matters."

Neither Nessen nor the President publicly have said what triggered the investigation. But first came press reports of Arab oil governments refusing to do business with U.S. banks and other companies involved in Israeli commerce and finance.

And later the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers said the Saudi Arabian government bans "zionists" from inclusion in Corps teams sent on assignment to that Arab nation. Nessen said foreign countries of course have the right to exclude any American they wish. But the White House, in line with Ford's anti-discrimination policy, sought to find out the facts in any case of religious or racial discrimination against Americans abroad.

In other White House developments:

— Nessen announced Emperor Hirohito of Japan will make his first visit to Washington Oct. 2-3 in a two-week U.S. visit, the first official state visit to America by a Japanese emperor. Hirohito met President Richard M. Nixon briefly fours years ago in Anchorage, Alaska.

— Nessen told newsmen Ford had not yet had time to study the Pastore-Wright energy package. But he said he thought Ford could examine it even before it gets Senate and House floor votes. Ford has been calling for a Democratic energy-economic package in order to work out a compromise with his own to get speedily a national program fighting unemployment and the fuel shortage.

— Ford said farewell to the new U.S. ambassador to Britain, Elliot Richardson, in an Oval Office 30-minute meeting attended by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. Without public explanation Kissinger took the chair next to Ford usually given the main guest at such meetings.

Democrats formulate single energy program

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Responding to criticism from President Ford, House and Senate task forces agreed yesterday on an alternative Democratic energy program.

But they rejected Ford's call for a quick, sharp cut in oil imports.

The Democratic program would increase gasoline taxes by five cents a gallon to finance research, exploration and conservation measures which in the long run would reduce America's dependence on imported oil.

Privately, House Democrats conceded the compromise plan was vulnerable to further attack from the administration on grounds it would do little to achieve a reduction in imports soon.

But both the administration and the Democrats talked compromise.

Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb, in congressional testimony and later in a speech, said both sides should sit down quietly to negotiate before Congress votes on whether to override Ford's expected veto of a bill to suspend his oil import tariff increases.

Now that a Democrat alternative plan exists, "We're hopeful the President will invite us to the White House to see if we can't get together," Sen. John O. Pastore, D-R.I., told reporters.

The Democratic plan rejects most of the key elements in Ford's energy program, which was designed to curb consumption by raising the price of fuel $30 billion a year.

Indians may release gas if police attack

SHIPROCK, N.M. [UPI] — A band of Indians holding a Navajo reservation electronics plant yesterday threatened to release radioactive krypton gas as a "final act of resistance" if police tried to take them by storm.

A plant spokesman said the gas was "essentially harmless."

About 20 Indians carrying rifles occupied the Fairchild Camera Co. plant Monday. They said they would remain there until their demands for better health and living practices were met. They were later reinforced and about 40 Indians were believed in the plant yesterday.

Police have not moved against them, but [illegible] a Navajo tribal official said tribal police should take the occupiers out.

"If we have to, when the pigs come in, we will barricade ourselves in there and break the seals," said American Indian Movement spokesman Larry Anderson. "We know what it can do. We are using that as our last resort, our final act of resistance."

But Fairchild Vice President Frederick Hoar discounted its seriousness.

"It is essentially harmless," Hoar said. "It would only be dangerous to those who opened the containers and then only to those that breathed the gas. But it would not be fatal."

House begins debate on rebates; final vote scheduled for today

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House began debate yesterday on a $21.3 billion tax-cut bill, including rebates of up to $200 for every taxpayer. Passage is probably certain today.

Although there was some scattered opposition to cutting taxes at this point, notably from House GOP Leader John Rhodes, the overwhelming majority of House members appeared anxious to cast a vote that would put money into their constituents' pockets.

The only major battle was over an issue unrelated to personal tax cuts — the oil depletion allowance.

Liberals led by Rep. William Green, D-Pa., and Sam Gibbons, D-Fla., convinced the caucus of all House Democrats to force a floor fight over the controversial oil industry tax break. Many Democrats and Republicans, including some who favor ending depletion, fear that attaching the repeal to the bill will delay passage of the tax cut in the Senate.

In addition to the depletion repeal amendment, several other amendments were pending which would allow continued depletion for certain segments of the petroleum industry: producers of less than 3,000 barrels per day, Alaskan North Slope oil, and natural gas producers.

The bill itself would grant $8.1 billion in rebates of 1974 taxes, $8.1 billion in 1975 tax reductions and $5.1 billion in business tax reductions and investment incentives.

President Ford requested tax rebates to stimulate the economy. However, the House Ways and Means committee decided to give smaller rebates than Ford proposed and to spread some of the tax cuts in 1975 reductions.

The House bill would grant rebates of 10 per cent of 1974 taxes up to a maximum of $200. The minimum rebate would be either $100 or the tax actually paid if the tax bill was less than $100.

Suit filed against dumdum bullets

Plaintiff paralyzed by bullet in Quincy

BOSTON [UPI] — A man paralyzed for life after being shot with a dumdum bullet filed a $10 million suit in U.S. District Court yesterday charging the shooting violated his consitutional rights.

Gay Evans, 23, of Weymouth filed the suit against the City of Quincy, its mayor, police chief and the officer who shot him nearly a year ago.

Evans was shot on May 10, 1974 by officer Ronald Heggblod after the man allegedly failed to pay a 25 cent transit fare and tried to flee. Evans has been bound over to a Suffolk grand jury on charges of assaulting a police officer in connection with the incident.

The suit against dumdums, the first of its kind in the nation, was filed in conjunction with the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts which has been campaigning against the use of dum dum bullets for nearly a year.

The brief filed in U.S. District Court charges that Heggblod shot Evans with a super Vel 110 grain semi-jacketed soft nose bullet with a rated muzzle velocity of 1,370 feet per second, "commonly referred to as a dumdum."

John Roberts, CLUM executive director, said the suit contends Evans would not have been paralyzed if the police officer had used standard police ammunition.

The suit charges that the bullet "mushroomed" on impact with Evans body and "scattered fragments through the lungs causing substantial bleeding and continual vomiting of blood.

"The bullet caused blood vessels between the spinal nerves and the aorta to rupture thereby starving and killing the spinal nerves," the brief continues.

The suit further charges that the spinal nerves died off during a five-hour period following the shooting after which "the 23-year-old plaintiff was paralyzed for life."

Joseph F. Killion of Quincy, Evans' attorney, noted in the brief that dum dum bullets have been banned for use in war under terms of the 1907 Hague Convention.

He charged that use of such bullets by police constitutes "excessive force since its purpose is to produce severe, extensive and painful wounds and probable death. Its deadly force is beyond that necessary to accomplish lawful police purposes."

Killion also charged that use of bullets constitutes cruel and unusual punishment "and subjected victims to summary punishment, physical abuse, loss of life and limb without due process of law."

James Earl Ray loses bid for new trial

MEMPHIS, Tenn. [UPI] — James Earl Ray, convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., lost a bid for a new trial yesterday when a federal judge ruled Ray's initial guilty plea in the case was voluntary and "on the advice of competent counsel of his own choosing."

Ray calimed his famed defense attorney, Percy Foreman of Houston, Tex., had compromised his rights and pressured him into admitting the 1968 murder in order to preserve the commercial value of books written about the murder of the civil rights leader.

But U.S. District Judge Robert McRae Jr. rejected Ray's arguments and accepted instead the state's contention that Ray made a "reasoned and reasonable decision to accept a 99-year sentence rather than risk the death penalty" by going to trial.

"Although the circumstances surrounding the guilty plea include conduct on the part of Ray's retained attorneys that should have been performed differently," McRae said in a 38-page decision, "the total circumstances do not reflect a violation of the constitutional rights applicable to one who voluntarily pleaded guilty on the advice of competent counsel of his own choosing."

Ray is serving his sentence at the main Tennessee prison in Nashville and was not present for McRae's ruling. However, one of his three defense lawyers, Robert Livingston of Memphis, was in the court.

"We have no complaint at all about the fairness of this court," Livingston said as he prepared to telephone his fellow attorneys — Bernard Fensterwald and James Lesar of Washington — with the news.

"He ruled against us, but we have two courts upstairs the 6th U.S Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati and the U.S. Supreme Court that could rule against him [illegible]," Livingston said.

"If James Earl Ray's constitutional rights were not violated," Livingston said, "I don't know of any man in American who has ever had his rights violated.

US launches airlift of food to Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH [UPI] — U.S. commercial airliners dodging rocket fire launched a massive airlift of food to besieged Phnom Penh yesterday in a last-ditch attempt to keep Cambodia from falling to pro-Communist rebels.

Two Chinese-made 107 mm rockets exploded Thursday in the grounds of the Camcar palace occupied by Cambodian President Lon Nol, but caused only slight damage. Another shell landed across the street from Camcar, wounding two soldiers, Cambodian officials said.

The U.S. food flights escalated to Berlin airlift proportions even as the American ambassador to Cambodia warned the country could fall to pro-Communist rebels by April unless more U.S. aid funds are made available.

Eleven DC8 jet flights by planes of two American commercial companies Thursday flew, more than 300 tons or rice to Phnom Penh from Saigon, landing and taking off at Pochentong airport as rockets burst nearby.

Rebel gunners fired seven rockets into the airport, killing seven persons and wounding 27 others, but there were no U.S. planes or pilots hit, military sources said.

"There were two rockets on the field," said K.W. Healy of Oakland, Calif., pilot of the first flight. "But it was a good flight. Weather was good, and there were really no problems at all."

Phnom Penh can only be supplied by the air since Feb. 8, when insurgent troops blockaded the Mekong River.

Military sources said hand-to-hand fighting was reported Thursday around the last government controlled town on the Mekong river, Neak Luong, 36 miles southeast of Phnom Penh.

The rice runs by Trans International and World Airways DC8 jets from Saigon are expected to eventually provide Phnom Penh's two million residents with 680 tons of American rice per day at a cost of $10,000 per flight.

Rockefeller says he won't run in 1980

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller, giving up a dream he has harbored since childhood, yesterday virtually ruled himself out of future presidential politics.

Rockefeller once said he always wanted to be President because "I've got so much what else could a man in my position hope for." But he told reporters yesterday, "I have no prospects, no thoughts, no plans. I'm not a competitive factor with these bright, rising stars."

Rockefeller's surprise comments came in an hour-long philosophical chat with newsmen aboard Air Force 2 as he returned from Detroit.

Pressed by reporters who asked if he were really ruling himself out of any future run for the presidency, Rockefeller replied:

"I don't think anyone gives a good goddamn about 1980. I resent that all people think about is my politics. I'm fed up with politics. This is no time for politics. We've got to put politics behind us."

Hub panel attacked

BOSTON [AP] — The Boston Finance Commission recommended abolition of the Boston School Committee yesterday and Committee Chairman John J. McDonough said he wasn't surprised.

"They've the commission used this investigation to attempt to discredit the School Committee basically because commission chairman Ralph Fine's ideology in terms of busing differs from the committee's and the people of Boston, who rejected this same proposal last year," he said.

The commission in a report released yesterday, said the School Committee was a politically dominated system of patronage and no-bid contracts that was lowering educational quality and should be abolished.

Jobless reach 10%

BOSTON [AP] — Unemployment in Massachusetts reached 10 per cent in January with some 275,700 people in the state work force without jobs, the Division of Employment Security said yesterday.

"The Massachusetts unemployment rate is now at its highest level since the 1949-1950 period, when tens of thousands of textile jobs were lost in mill closings," the division said.

"However, the current situation does not begin to approach the mass unemployment of the 1930s."

RI rebellion ends

CRANSTON, R.I. [UPI] — Forty inmates peacefully returned to their cells in the Rhode Island Adult Correctional Institutions today after a two and one-half hour takeover of the aging maximum security building's south wing.

Lillian McDaniels, Corrections Department spokeswoman, said the inmates had demanded release from the segregation unit of a prisoner involved in a fight Wednesday night.

State and city police and off-duty guards were called to the prison, equipped with riot gear and armed with shotguns, when the 10 a.m. takeover began. There were no injuries and no force was used, she said.

FBI files disclosed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Attorney General Edward H. Levi disclosed yesterday that J. Edgar Hoover compiled derogatory information on presidents and other public figures and kept the secret files in his FBI office.

Levi said the late FBI director kept 48 such secret folders, including material on presidents, executive branch officials, 19 former members of Congress and two current members.

He revealed no identities in his congressional testimony on FBI intelligence-gathering, but said: "By and large, the material in these folders contained derogatory information concerning individuals."

Bienvenidos, Companeros

Sr. Benjamín Rodríguez

Quiero aprovechar la oportunidad que muy cordialmente me han ofrecido los dinámicos y dedicados estudiantes que dirigen el Eco Latino, para dar la bienvenida a todos. A los estudiantes que comienzan sus estudios, así como también a los veteranos que se integran de nuevo para continuar sus faenas de estudio.

Primero que nada, quiero felicitar a los estudiantes que participaron en el programa de matemática y métodos de estudio, por sus esfuerzos y dedicación que demostraron. Reconozco que para la mayoría fue una experiencia nueva, dedicar 7 horas diarias de estudio sin obtener crédito. No puedo menos que pensar que sus esfuerzos unidos a los que sin duda harán durante el semestre que han comenzado, serán recompenzados al final de la lucha.

En nombre del personal del BCP y en el mio propio, quiero pedir excusas por los inconvenientes que tuvieron que pasar los primeros días de clases; debido a lo incomodo del hospedaje y otros pormenores. Las dificultades fueron debidas a la "crisis económica" y de energía por la cual pasa la Universidad. La misma semana que comenzaba el programa fueron despedidos por tres semanas, 93 empleados de los servicios de alimento y vivienda. Esto nos hizo difícil la negociación del hospedaje y las comidas.

Su cooperación y alto grado de responsabilidad nos ayudo mucho, a que todo saliera tal como se había planeado. Estoy muy serguro que sus esfuerzos y sacrificios les adelantó varios escalones hacia los objetivos que desean alcanzar.

También aprovecho este espacio para prevenirles de varios factores, que según nuestra experiencia con otros estudiantes y las nuestras propias en la Universidad, creemos puedan afectar su trabajo academico.

Diversiones:

Te encontrarás que existen toda clase de diversiones donde facilmente puede usarse todo el tiempo disponible sin darse cuenta. Hemos tenido casos en que varios estudiantes se han olvidado de sus deberes como estudiantes y han usado más tiempo en divertirse que en sus estudios. Esto, como te puedes imaginar, les ha traido una serie de dificultades, muchos de ellos, optando por abandonar la Universidad. El problema, querido compañero, no termina en salirse de la Universidad, sino que se convierte en uno más serio. Muchas veces él, ella, según sea el caso, no encuentra trabajo, se encuentra confundido ante el ambiente que le rodea, se siente inútil y hasta frustrado.

El ambiente universitario no ofrece menos problemas o frustraciones que cualquier otro ambiente. A veces te darán deseos de tirar los libros, dejar todo de mano y seguir andando, pero no lo hagas. Ten presente que dondequiera que vayas tendrás un reto y cuanto más fuerte sea el reto harás como; "el río con la lluvia crece, o el mar contra la roca bate."

Te encontrarás con una gran cantidad de libros para leer, con sinnumero de problemas de matemática, álgebra, trigonometría, formulas de quimica, etc. No te desesperes ante esta situación, cálmate, prepara un plan de estudio. Si tienes problemas decidiendo como dividir el tiempo para estudiar debes solicitar la ayuda del Consejero Personal. Revisa y evalua tu plan a menudo para ver si se adapata a tus necesidades.

Algunos compañeros, con toda buena fe de ayudarte, te hablarán de sus experiencias positivas o negativas en la Universidad, te hablarán de sus logros, de sus fracasos. Unos te hablarán de los maestros, de como pasar una clase fácil, para quién se debe estudiar más, para quién debes estudiar menos, cuales son los cursos faciles y cuales son los dificiles. Ante todas estas recomendaciones te puedes encontrar confundido o hasta puedes perder el tiempo tratando de decidir el consejo [illegible] a seguir.

Antes de hacer tu decisión sobre los consejos que debes seguir, recuerda que aquello que se aplica a una persona, no necesariamente se aplica a otra. Tus experiencias como estudiante serán muy diferentes a cualquier otra persona. Recuerda que el profesor, [illegible] no es solo un facilitador. [illegible] para facilitar tu aprendizaje, para ayudar a formular las metas por los cuales se adquieren nuevos conocimientos, nuevas ideas. Si recibes una calificacion de A, B,C o D, de tu maestro, eres tú el único que debe juzgar si esa calificación es justa o no. No te engañes a tí mismo ni permitas que nadie te engañe. El hecho que tu recibes una A, no quiere decir que hayas adquirido las destrezas o conocimientos necesarios sobre tal o cual materia. Además, los conocimientos adquiridos en diversas materias tienen valor solo si son aplicables en el mundo que nos rodea. Ten presente que el profesor que te da una nota de A o B sin que la hayas ganado solo te esta anadiendo a la lista de los engañados. No hay duda que el promedio es factor determinante para tu estadía en la Universidad, pero cuando te confrontes al mercado de trabajo y a la comunidad, lo importante serán tus destrezas, lo que tú sabes hacer.

Con relación al habito de estudio, esto dependerá de tus necesidades; para aquellos que ya han desarrollado un hábito de estudio, no se les hará muy difícil, para los que no tienen la misma experiencia, probablemente tendrán que estudiar muchas horas. He aqui algunas ideas y recomendaciones sobre como estudiar.

Para muchos estudiantes, el poderse concentrar constituye un problema serio y por eso es sumamente importante desarrollar la habilidad de concentrarse.

Como concentrarte para estudiar:

1. Reune todos los instrumentos y materiales que necesitas para el trabajo.

2. Trata de estudiar en una habitacion o lugar independiente de todo ruido.

3. Cuando comiences a divagar, ten presente que debes mantener tu mente en lo que estas haciendo.

4. Busca la utilidad práctica del material que estás estudiando para no perder tu interés.

5. Hazte preguntas sobre el material que estás estudiando.

6. Si es necesario manten tu pensamiento sobre el asunto que estas estudiando en alta voz y en tus propias palabras.

7. Trata de acostumbrar a tus compañeros a respetar tus horas de estudio.

8. Trata de recordar constantemente las razones por las cuales estas estudiando la asignatura. Asi estarás más conciente de la importancia del material.

9. Para muchos estudiantes, el uso del lápiz y del papel es de gran ayuda para concentrarse en lo que están estudiando.

Formas para ejercitar la memoria:

1. Antes de comenzar a aprender algo de memoria, leélo cuidadosamente para que lo puedas comprender.

2. Usa símbolos o abreviaturas que te ayuden a relacionar el material para memorizarlo.

3. Trata de descubrir un método que se adapte mejor a tí para aprender las cosas de memoria.

4. Siempre repasa lo que ya hayas aprendido.

5. Es muy importante poner en práctica inmediamente la información aprendida. Utilízala en la vida práctica.

Por último, más no por eso menos importante, enviamos saludos muy cordiales a todos los estudiantes veteranos del BCP.

Hemos visto que este semestre ha sido uno de los logros para la mayoria de los estudiantes debido a sus grandes esfuerzos.

De nuevo queremos recordarles a todos que el BCP esta a la orden de ustedes en todo momento. Si hay algun estudiante que desconoce los servicios que ofrecemos debe llamar al teléfono 545-[illegible] o visitarnos personalmente. Estamos localizados en [illegible] piso del Edificio Goodell.

Muchas gracias a los estudiantes veteranos por su grande y desinteresada cooperación que siempre nos han ofrecido al BCP y a los estudiantes nuevos.

Dear Brother Martin,

I am on your side! My name is Vincent [illegible]. I have some friends from Africa, New York, Worcester, Mexico, and Puerto Rico. We are trying to help you get out of jail. We go to the Che-Lumumba School for Truth. It's of brothers and sisters who want to learn about Great Leaders, Math, Language Arts and Third World Studies. A friend of mine told me about how they brutalized you.

Some of our teachers talked to us about you. I was sad because they beat you up. The police are supposed to protect the people, not beat them up. When I grow up I am going to be a writer. I am going to write about the Third World. I know a lot of revolutionary leaders like Che, Lumumba, Fidel, Mao, Malcolm X, Albizu Campos, Fredrick Douglas, George and Jonathan Jackson and you. One of our teachers, Maddie Marquez, went with Celia Alvarez and [illegible] to Plattsburg to be in court to show that they care about you and the truth that you tell. Maddie is twenty seven years old. She is going to have a baby. The baby is going to grow up to be a big revolutionary. I was born in New York City on Davidson Avenue. I am nine years old. When I grow older, I am going to be a big revolutionary too. Would you come to visit the Che-Lumumba school when they let you out?

Sincerely,
Vincent

Terrorist act condemned
by PSP Secretary General

Today, Juan Mari Bras, Secretary General of the Puerto Rican Socialist Party (PSP) condemned the terrorist act that took place and which resulted in the death of three persons and the injury of forty persons. According to the information received by Claridad, the organ of the PSP, from the French news agency, an alleged Puerto Rican nationalist group declared itself responsible for the action.

"We seriously doubt that revolutionary Puerto Rican group, whichever it may be, could have been responsible for such an act. Indiscriminate and irresponsible terrorism, obviously intended to kill innocent people, is in contradiction with the practice of Revolutionary [illegible].

Even more so when the attack is committed without previous warning against an innocent civilian population, which population has nothing to do with the colonial exploitation of Puerto Rico. The victims of this action are probably North American workers who are our allies in the struggle against imperialism, colonialism and capitalism.

Independent of who might have committed the action, it objectively prejudices the struggle for the independence of Puerto Rico by identifying Puerto Rican nationalism with an act of terror.

Apolitical Intellectuals

Dedicated with the total weight of time to the reactionary teachers of the Political Science Department; enemies of the working class and the Third World Liberation Struggle.

From: Armando Morales

I

One day
the apolitical intellectuals of my country will be interrogateo by the simplest of our people.

They will be asked what they did when their nation died out slowly,
like a sweet fire,
small and alone.

No one will ask them about their dress, their long siestas
after lunch,
no one will want to know about their sterile struggles with "the idea of the void"
no one will care about the way they ontologically acquired their funds.

They won't be questioned on Greek mythology, or about the self-disgust they felt when someone within them began to die
the coward's death.
They'll be asked nothing about their absurd justifications
born in the shadow of the total lie.

II

On that day
the simple men will come,
those who had no place in the books and poems of the apolitical intellectuals but daily delivered their bread and milk,
their tortillas and eggs,
those who mended their clothes,
those who drove their cars, who cared for their dogs and gardens,
and worked for them,
and they'll ask:
"What did you do when the poor suffered, when tenderness and life burned out in them?

III

Apolitical intellectuals
of my sweet country, you will not be able to answer.

A vulture of silence will eat your guts.
Your own misery
will gnaw at your souls.
And you will be mute
in your own shame.

Puerto Rico ¿quién eres?

¿Te oprimen?
¿Tienes miedo de lanzarte a ellos?

Terrorist Act

which, of necessity, must result in the anger of the North American people, which confuses our people and the whole world in relation to the current situation in the struggle for independence.

At this time we are mobilizing the general population of our people to the terrorist attempts, inspired by the repressive Yanqui apparatus against our party, which resulted in the death of two worker comrades, and the injury of 12 others in Mayaguez two weeks ago. Reactionary Cuban organizations have taken credit for that cowardly attack and the action today seems to give the impression that it is in reprisal for the Mayaguez bombings. This is totally false. Revolutionaries do not answer the murder of innocent people with the murder of other innocent people. This is an attempt to fool people into thinking that the left and the right function on the same level, as delinquents and criminals, when the truth is that it is the fascist bands and their supporters in the repressive apparatus of the system which use terror, murder and the victimization of innocent people against the liberation movement of our people."

The Puerto Rican population of Massachusetts repudiates these acts of terrorism against innocent people. The position of the local branch of the PSP in Springfield is amply stated by our Secretary General in the statement above.

"La Nueva Cancion — Cemí"

El Grupo Cemi

Representando el auténtico sentido de la poesía como canción se lanza el Grupo Cemí a cantar su protesta, que es la protesta de todo un pueblo, porque también concibe Cemí la poesía en su más genuino sentido, es decir, plena e irreconciliablemente ligada a la vida del hombre. Y en el caso del hombre y de la mujer puertorriqueños, esa vida significa asimismo irremediablemente una lucha por la independencia y la libertad socio-política y económica de la isla.

A los organizadores originales de Cemí, Gloria y Wando Bianco se integran con el tiempo Victor López, Angel Figueroa, José Rosado y Freddy Hernández, siendo estos tres últimos estudiantes de la Universidad de Connecticut, y miembros de la sede de la F.U.S.P.

Aunque joven como grupo, ya han disputado los integrantes de Cemí, de gran éxito en diversas funciones, pues, aunque nos honran aquí en la Universidad de Massachusetts esta noche del 24 de Febrero con su primer estreno público como grupo, ya como cantantes de la dignidad del pueblo puertorriqueño han llevado su mensaje a las calles de los barrios boricuas en distintos "[illegible]" que alientan al pueblo, con canción y con candela, en contra de las injusticias del sistema que lo oprime diariamente.

Cemí cumple una función. También la cumple la comunidad que se reunió a escucharles. Pero, la lucha continua. La batalla es de día a día, sin desfallecer un segundo.

El presente es de lucha, el futuro es nuestro.

La comunidad dijo, dice y dirá: "Presente."

Ayer, Manana . . . y 'Ahora'

"A la raiz va el hombre verdadero. Radical no es mas que eso: el que va a las raices. No se llame radical quien no vea las cosas en su fondo.

Marti

Al principio de su libro Puerto Rico: Historia de Opresion y Resistencia, Silén, citando a Malcolm X, nos dice: "Cuando investigamos el pasado, tratamos con la historia, lo cual implica que comenzamos a bregar con el origen de las cosas. Si nosotros conocemos el origen, entonces entendemos la razón de las cosas. Pero si no conocemos el origen, nunca entenderemos el porque de las cosas ...quedando suspendidos sin raiz alguna." Esta cita toma un significado real cuando la relacionamos con el desarrollo de la comunidad hispana dentro de la universidad. Semestre tras semestre llegan nuevos compañeros que se preguntan a si mismos. Cual es el origen del Programa Bilingue Colegial (BCP)? Cual es el origen del programa Bilingue-Bicultural dentro de la Escuela de Educación? Como surgió el programa de reclutamiento de hispanos en esta universidad? Cuales deben ser mis objetivos dentro de la universidad? Creemos que estas preguntas son criticas en nuestro desarrollo como comunidad y como pueblo. Trataremos, pues, de presentar un análisis histórico para que así en posesión de un sólido conocimiento basadas en fuertes raices podamos mirar al futuro con confianza y una visión más clara.

Podemos encontrar la contestación a la mayoria de estas preguntas en el reporte final presentado a la administración universitaria en noviembre del 1973. Este reporte fue preparado por el "Ad Hoc Committee to Review the Status of the Spanish Speaking Students at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst Campus." Veamos pues cuales fueron algunas de las recomendaciones:

Creación de una Oficina Hispana de Planificación y Desarrollo. Mas tarde esta recomendación dio como resultado la creación del Programa Bilingue Colegial (BCP).

Creación de un programa de reclutamiento intensivo dentro de la comunidad hispana. El objetivo principal de este programa es asegurar admisión y ayuda financiera a mas de 500 estudiantes para el 1976. [illegible]

Creación de un programa de reclutamiento bajo las reglas de "Affirmative Action" [illegible]

Aunque no se ve el efecto inicial de algunas de las recomendaciones [illegible]

Durante la primavera de 1973 [illegible] "AHORA" [illegible]

Creación del Comité ya mencionado [illegible]

Este Comité estaría formado por 14 miembros [illegible]

Realmente la historia no es tan clara y sencilla. [illegible]

Aunque este fue el primer confrontamiento con la administración, no fue nuestra primera lucha de reforma. En Septiembre de 1972 se estableció un grupo de planificación para crear un programa Bilingue-Bicultural en la Escuela de Educación. [illegible]

John Bock—more than a manager

By CLIFF BLOM
and TOM O'CONNELL

A long, tiring season...practice at 4:00, seven days a week...injuries...cutting weight...these are the common denominators which bind the members of UMass wrestling team.

Why do certain individuals endure these hardships? Personal recognition plays a big part in motivating many athletes. It is a rare person who would devote so much time and energy to a sport without receiving the recognition due him. But such a person exists "behind the scenes" of the defending 1974 New England Wrestling Champions.

[illegible]

John Bock

[illegible]

While majoring in accounting, this grad school-bound senior has found the time to devote three hours daily to putting on sweats and working out with his teammates at practice; he has given up countless nights and entire weekends to travel with the team to meets and tournaments, where he is always UMass' representative at the scoring table; he has spent hours writing previews and summaries of every wrestling match that has taken place since his arrival at UMass.

John's dedication has made him known by wrestling coaches and wrestlers throughout the East. [illegible]

[illegible] Tournament and the National Tournament at Princeton in two weeks will mark the end of John's active career as UMass wrestling manager. He will graduate in May to pursue his Masters of Business Administration degree at Brigham Young University in Utah. His absence will be strongly felt by Coach Homer Barr and his fellow wrestlers, and they thank him and wish him the best of luck. Good luck, J.B.

Cliff Blom and Tom O'Connell are members of the UMass Varsity Wrestling Team.

Gymnasts in key matches

Men host Temple

By BILL DOYLE

With sole possession of second place in the E.I.G.L. and an undefeated home streak on the line, the UMass men's gymnastics team meets Temple, tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 p.m. at Boyden.

"We'll win if we do our best," Coach Tom Dunn said, "but if we do much less we'll lose."

A win Saturday would give UMass undisputed control of second place with one meet remaining. A loss would put the Minutemen in a tie with Temple and Springfield for the second spot behind Southern Connecticut.

[illegible]

[illegible] tomorrow. Possibilities for the final spot are Mark Cuyjet, Mike Silverstein, Scott Howell, Rich Carlson, Blane Nasveschuk, and Tom Ahn. Dunn said he thinks it will be between Cuyjet and Silverstein.

"Nasveschuk is a better all-around man than Summerhays," Dunn explained, "but Summerhays is good in the events in which Temple is weak, that is side horse and rings. So Summerhays will most likely be all-around."

'Senior night' tonight

Final Cage game of season

Minutemen clash with Terriers

This is what it all boils down to.

The Minutemen entertain BU in Senior Night festivities tonight at Curry Hicks Cage before travelling to Iona for a Saturday night encounter.

But the most important happenings of the weekend will transpire in a meeting room where Will Renkin, Ron Perry, Leland Byrd, Jim McDermott, and Larry Weise will decide which four teams from New England will compete in the ECAC post-season tournament.

UMass is one of five teams being considered for the four sports. The Minutemen have been the hottest team in the area over the last month, winning eight of ten games to vault into contention. A Yankee Conference title, one step closer with a victory over BU, would do a lot to boost the UMass chances.

Tonight's game will mark the final Cage appearances of four Minutemen: John Murphy, Bill Endicott, Jim Burke, and Greg Duarte. These four have helped keep alive the winning tradition begun by Julius Erving and Al Skinner, but they could also achieve milestones that no other UMass basketball team has ever reached.

This group of graduating seniors could become the first ever to win the YanCon crown in each of its three varsity seasons.

More importantly, this could be the first time the Minutemen appear in a post-season tourney in three consecutive years.

BU could put a crimp in UMass' tournament plans with an upset tonight, but precedent rules out such an occurrence. This last time UMass lost a Senior Night game was way back in 1967, when the Redmen were trampled by AIC.

BU and UMass met two weeks ago, with the Minutemen rolling to a 94-78 victory.

The Terriers boast an all-New England caliber guard in Kerry Walker and one of the area's smoothest freshmen in 6'7 center Curtis VanLandingham.

The Saturday night game should prove to be one of those show-up-for-a-victory types. Iona has floundered to a 4-18 record thus far this season, but recently took Fairfield into overtime before bowing.

UMass coach Jack Leaman has continued to play musical lineup despite his teams' recent success. Bill Endicott started ahead of Alex Eldridge in Monday' night's victory over New Hampshire, and Greg Duarte's 22-points off the bench may make the coach again switch his starting five.

While the Minutemen's weekend performances will be closely watched by the tourney selection committee, there are also several other games that will require close scrutiny.

Army should provide little opposition for the Holy Cross juggernaut, and BC should roll over UNH, but the other two contenders face major hurdles.

Connecticut travels to Rhode Island to take on the lowly Rams. Strange things can happen at Keaney Gym however, and don't forget a recent URI win over Providence.

Women swimmers at UPenn for Easterns

By LAURIE WHITING

By the time you read this, they'll be gone.

The qualifying members of the UMass women's swim team, that is. The group took to the road yesterday, as today marks the first day of the two-day Women's Intercollegiate Eastern championships at the University of Pennsylvania. Trials and finals will be held today and tomorrow for 18 events, including 4 relays and 2 dividing events.

The UMass swimmers who have met the meet standards by beating designated cut-off times are: Reenie Groden, Cindy Whiting, Penny Noyes, Melon Dash, Carol Griffiths, Diane Perry, and Laurie Whiting. Judging by last year's meet results, UMass swimmers have a shot at some top positions.

Having high hopes for poinsage is the New England record-breaking relay team of Melon Dash, Reenie Groden, Cindy Whiting, and Penny Noyes. Their time beats that of last year's winners, but with this year's better and faster competition, who knows.....?

Water-whiz Noyes, after stealing two individual events in the New England championships, will again prove to be tough competition for the rest of the field. The specific events she'll be swimming are undecided so far, as she's qualified for many, but is only allowed 4 individual events, by meet rules.

Dash, a fourth and fifth place finisher in last year's meet (and third in this year's N.E.'s), will be another swimmer to look for in finals competition, specifically the fly, 200 I.M., and 100 free.

Two sophomores, C. Whiting and Groden will represent UMass in the freestyle sprints. Whiting placed into the finals in 1974 and did well in this year's N.E.'s. Groden is another top N.E. finisher, but is seeing Eastern Collegiate competition for the first time.

Carol Griffiths, Diane Perry, and Laurie Whiting round out the list of UMass qualifiers. Their specialties are the 400 free, the breaststrokes, and the 100 I.M., respectively. Griffiths competed in Eastern competition last year, but it will be a new experience for Perry and freshman Whiting.

"Princeton, Clarion State, and Penn State will be among the team powerhouses battling for meet honors," said UMass Coach Pat Griffin. "I may be setting a high goal for UMass swimmers," said Griffin, "but I feel we can place in the top ten."

Trackmen, wrestlers compete in New Englands

By JOHN BOCK

Two Ivy League schools will preoccupy the minds of the UMass wrestling team this weekend. Brown University in Rhode Island is the site of the third Annual New England University Wrestling Association (NEUWA) Tournament and this is where UMass travels to defend its New England title. The winners of the tourney in each weight class will be thinking about Princeton University In New Jersey where the NCAA University championships in wrestling will be held two weeks hence.

An unimpressive dual match season, injuries, a poor showing in the Yankee Conference tournament - these factors were present in both of the last two years and in both of those years UMass won the New England Championship.

Boston University is, nonetheless, a very strong contender to win the whole thing. They have six place winners back from last year's team including defending champions Guy Bercier at 142 pounds, Tom Kryzak at 150 pounds, and Mark Jones at 177 pounds. Runners-up Sev Popolizio at 134, Mat Thomas at 126, and third placer Jeff Lambert at 118 is where BU's strength has been this year. They manhandled every team they wrestled except Springfield College and URI and had the best showing ever in the Yankee Conference Tournament where they crowned seven champions and had three second placers.

The University of Rhode Island has a very strong contingent of wrestlers, who, with a little help from their friends, could upset BU for the team title.

Dartmouth College will once again play the role of the spoiler as they have four highly talented wrestlers capable of knocking off anyone from BU, URI, and UMass. They did not fare well in dual meets this season because they lacked the balance but their top four wrestlers came through very well for them in almost every case.

The weight classes break down something like this:

118-BU's Jeff Lambert is the favorite here because of his smoothness and skill but UMass' Peter Sachon would have to be rated a fairly close second.

126-URI's smooth as silk Scott Pucino will be going for his third New England title as he boasts an undefeated dual match season in New England. His competition will come from BU's Mat Thomas, who has yet to even come close to beating Pucino. UMass will field junior Steve Ruggeri at this weight.

134-BU's Sev Popolizio could win it after placing second to Russ Chateauneuf last year. With Chateauneuf gone from the UMass team with academic problems the big competition will come from URI's Frank Pucino. This class has a very strong sleeper in Minuteman Tim Fallon. Another Lowell High School product like Lambert and Chateauneuf, Fallon has been very distinguished since dropping his weight to 134.

The New England Championships, considered the highlight of the indoor track schedule, will take place this weekend at Northeastern and Tufts. Northeastern, UConn, Boston College and UMass, the four teams involved in the team battle a year ago, are expected to vie for the New England title once again.

Last season at Storrs, the NU squad edged UConn 51-50 with BC placing third as the Minutemen garnered fourth. Northeastern has the most balanced team, flaunting the strongest throwing squad and a scoring attack scattered throughout the rest of the events. The BC Eagles have been a perenially strong middle distance team, and this year is no exception. BC has a pair of fine sprinters to complement its middle distance runners, but beyond that, the Eagles lack depth. "BC should score 85 per cent of its points in the sprints and hurdles," commented track coach Ken O'Brien.

UMass and UConn enjoy a more balanced attack than BC, but have some weaknesses that the defending champions do not. O'Brien feels that all four teams have the potential to score 40 points, but the winning score will probably be in the upper forties or fifties.

For the Minutemen, the long jump, triple jump and mile are big events, in which the trackmen can collect a handful of points. "The rest of the events depend on each individual picking up a place," O'Brien explained.

The jumpers scored well last year with Bob Adamson taking second in the long jump and teammates Pete Ryan and Ken Adamson right behind.

60 openings for N.E. students

Vet School applicants must act quickly

BOSTON (AP) — New Englanders have about one month to act if they want to reserve spaces for 60 students next fall at the only two nearby veterinary colleges.

The deans of the two colleges, at the University of Pennsylvania and Cornell University, said Friday that each can admit as many as 30 New England students next fall, if the states quickly "contract" for the places.

"I have 30 places on hold, but I can't hold them forever," said Robert R. Marshak, dean of the veterinary college at Pennsylvania.

"If New England can't make up its mind by the first of April, we'd have to let them go," he said.

Without contract arrangement, New Englanders will go into the poll of all out-of-state residents, and their chances of admission would be limited sharply, he said.

Marshak said the University of Pennsylvania has 12 applications for every place in its veterinary college.

He and Edward C. Melby of Cornell's veterinary college warned that the New England states must act promptly, either jointly or separately, or the reserved places will be lost.

They were in Boston on Friday to meet with representatives of the New England Board of Higher Education, the New England land grant universities and the New England Governors Conference.

Peter B. Edelman, a University of Massachusetts vice president, told a news conference that the university is submitting legislation which would allow the state to contract for up to 30 veterinary places next fall and would appropriate $450,000 for them.

Last year the legislature appropriated $200,000 to study the possibility of building a regional veterinary school in Grafton. That money was not spent.

Edelman said UMass is not opposed to the possibility of building a veterinary school in New England, but that it is estimated to cost $60 million to build and equip, $5.5 million a year to run, and Massachusetts probably would have to pay half the cost.

The president of the area's land grant universities have recommended establishing contracts with out-of-state veterinary schools.

The higher education board has advocated building a regional school.

Officials in dispute over Ed School files

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

The University may have ignored the state's open records law last week when it verbally refused in three instances to allow the Collegian access to School Education records.

University officials claimed the records had been "frozen" by the FBI as a justification for closing them. But the FBI denies ever ordering the records closed.

Some University officials apparently interpreted a joint FBI-UMass statement to mean the records were closed. But a UMass attorney said yesterday that was not the intent of the statement.

In addition to School of Education records, which are the subject of FBI and HEW probes of funds misuse, the Collegian also sought, and was verbally denied access to records in the Dept. of Continuing Education. Those records have not been acknowledged as under investigation.

The statement, released at the height of interest in School of Education difficulties Feb. 7, was on UMass press bureau stationery. The press release said:

"The Federal Bureau of Investigation, which is presently coordinating the investigation into alleged misuse of federal funds within the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, has requested that all records maintained by the University which pertain to the allegations not be made available to the public until the conclusion of the investigation."

Ricci will stand by Daniels in retrial

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

UMass Professor Benjamin Ricci, president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association said yesterday, "I will continue to advocate for Russell Daniels."

The statement came as a result of a suggestion by the prosecution at Friday's hearing that newspaper articles featuring Daniels would put the Commonwealth in a poor position for prejudicing a jury.

"I will say again what I told the Springfield paper," Ricci said. "Where do you think Russell Daniels would be now if the Friends had not raised the issue and financed his appeal?"

Russell Daniels is a [illegible]-year-old Belchertown resident who is to be retried on a second-degree 1972 murder conviction. According to Ricci, the case is precedent setting because it will force the courts to distinguish between the mentally ill and the mentally retarded.

"Violence is not a part of the life of the mentally retarded," Ricci said, emphasizing that because Daniels is retarded, he would not be capable of such an act.

Friday's hearing was held before Judge Kent B. Smith at Hampden County Superior Court to consider several defense motions. A trial date will be set in two weeks at a second hearing.

According to Ricci, the judge allowed most of the motions, but has not yet decided whether a confession which Daniels gave to police in 1972 is admissible as evidence.

Anything can happen and often does
- Gregory Corso

Beat poets Allen Ginsberg, Gregory Corso and Peter Orlovsky, sharing the same stage for the first time since 1957, read poems and provided some bizarre entertainment for a capacity crowd in the Student Union Ballroom Saturday night.

"We've lived together, been friends, even shared the same bed. We just haven't read on the same stage" said Ginsberg. He then read some of his shorter poems beginning with some on his first marijuana experiences written in [illegible]. His voice gave out a few times during his first set due to his bronchitis and a bout with the flu. Prior to his arrival Ginsberg had been staying at the Mt. Holyoke infirmary.

While Ginsberg read poems tracing his own literary history, fellow poet and lover, Peter Orlovsky sat behind him entranced and often reacting openly to lines which seemed to have been written about him. Following a poem for [illegible] Burroughs and one for [illegible], Gregory Corso stepped to the podium and the entertainment began.

Corso sauntered back and forth using his hands to exaggerate his effeminate voice while he recited short, absurd parodies on sex and marriage during which the audience divided between those who sat in [illegible], and those who laughed loudly.

Orlovsky then walked to the microphone and sang a song written by a prisoner about [illegible] while Ginsberg tried in vain to accompany it on a [illegible]. Richard Talbot, Director of the University Library explaining that it could never have become a "Towering Inferno."

Talbot explains library's budget, responsibilities

By DEBORAH GALLAGHER
Staff Reporter

The major problem of the library here besides security and budget cuts is "keeping up with the knowledge explosion" said Richard J. Talbot, director of the library.

Talbot sees the library as "a node in the information network" and said that since the library is part of a state institution, it should be open to all.

Talbot said that problems with the budget cut "will not occur until next year." The budget of three million annually, according to Talbot, is spread over three different areas concerned with the operation of the library. About one million is spent on the acquisition of new books and materials, he said. The library, which employs from 182 to 260 workers in "peak times" is responsible for 20 per cent of the work study load, he added, and a great deal of the budget is spent in salaries, "other materials", such as membership in the inter-library system in the Valley and with the big institutions in Boston.

The library is currently operating two circulation systems simultaneously, Associate Director for Public Service Gordon Fretwell, who was present during the interview in Talbot's office, said. Besides the old manual system, one out of four, about 23.9 per cent, or all transactions are process through the IBM Tele-processing system, he said. The system is in the first phase of implementation with about 300 thousand of the 800 thousand books already "carded" and processable through the computer, Fretwell said.

The system which is part of the greater University-wide employee-student directory computer system, makes accessible to the terminal operators at the check-out desk the patron's local and home address, their phone numbers, sex, major, and class level, according to Fretwell.

Hypothetically it is possible, he said, to plug in, for example, the parking office program, but the system inhibits that because the terminal operators don't know the codes. It's impossible to find out a student's grades or any personal information because the code is confidential, he said.

Talbot said that a large problem of the library is security. Despite the "four young ladies on security at the exits," he said, "we've received a significant number of complaints from students who have needed stolen or books borrowed without leave."

Talbot said it is difficult to determine "year to year" the number of books stolen or lost because only two-thirds of the inventory has been completed since the move from Goodell. It should be finished, he said, in December of this year. Talbot said a "guesstimate" of the loss rate could be as high as 5 per cent over the last few years.

Universal fee, dorm residency

Area Heads express views

By GLENNA WYMAN
Staff Reporter

The area directors of the five dorm areas expressed mixed reactions when contacted recently about the effects of a universal fee and non-mandatory room and board would have on their respective areas.

Area directors Kenneth Burnham in Sylvan and Thomas Trotman of the Central Area said the voluntary option in dorm living is what they feel the students want. Burnham, Trotman and area director of Orchard Hill, Michael Wolff expressed reservations about various problems the policy would create.

Burnham and Trotman said "the times are hard" and felt a universal fee is inevitable, along with probable cuts in funds.

possible ramifications" of non-mandatory dorm living. He said, "People don't react until its too late. When they ask why can't we have this or that cultural event or why aren't there more counselors, it'll be too late."

Wolff said, "The future of instructional programs has got to be a function of student and staff support. What we don't know is how much student support there is."

He added: "an integration of instructional programs and human services is what it's all about and with staff stripped down to a minimum, they will be too busy and unable to give support to instructional programs."

[illegible]

Master and area director of Southwest Richard Green said he "hasn't seen anything official and really can't say what kind of effect voluntary dorm living and meal tickets will have." He mentioned Southwest task forces that have been working since August on long range planning, "thinking hard about the alternatives."

Stephen Dimock of the Northeast Area said, "Our students in Northeast would generally welcome a voluntary board plan," adding that he felt at least a voluntary board plan is pretty definite.

Young Fiedler sets his style

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Peter Fiedler, son of famed Boston Pops symphony conductor Arthur Fiedler, decided not to follow his father's footsteps in a career of music, but to shoot for a career in communications studies.

"The fact is I really dig music" said the young Fiedler, who formed a rock group last January. "It's my second favorite thing in life", he said in a Collegian interview.

However, he said music will also be always be my hobby, but my primary ambition is to produce a few shows and get a job in television broadcasting.

Now in his fourth semester here, Fiedler said he will always be interested in music. "I'd like to make music a full-time thing, but right now you got to be something really big to make it. The competion is unbelievable. It's too risky." Before coming to UMass, Fiedler attended Berkeley College of music in Boston.

The 22-year-old Fiedler has been interested in music since he was five-years-old. "My father made all of us (Peter has two older sisters living in New York) take piano lessons when we were five. At first, I didn't like it, but in the long run it has really paid off." Peter plays piano and organ for his newly formed group."

Arthur Fiedler has said that his only son could make a career in music if his group was "as good as the Beatles".

When asked whether his father is planning to retire, Peter proudly said, "no. He's still going strong and he'll continue as long as he can."

Although Peter is presently interested in rock and roll music, he enjoys all kinds of music.

Sometimes, he said he is listening to his car radio and thinks, "Gee, that's bad," and then the announcer comes out with "that was the Boston Pops Orchestra under the direction of Arthur Fiedler."

Peter Fiedler - studies communications, 'digs music.'

Corker sees inexperienced student Governors Board

There is probably no other school in the country with a system of management as complex as the Campus Center, said John Corker, executive director of the campus center.

Corker, a 43 year-old native of Savoy, Illinois, said the budget is prepared by the Campus Center staff, then it must be approved by the student-run Board of Governors before it goes to the Chancellor for final approval.

Corker said he approves of the Board of Governors, but "students do not have the experties to run the $5-$6 million operation by themselves. How is it possible for students who are in the board for three or four months to know the Campus Center well enough?"

Ways and Means drafts plan, says Ullman

Energy plan called 'solid, tough'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Al Ullman, D-Ore., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said yesterday his panel has drafted a "solid, tough" energy package that could be the basis of a compromise between conflicting programs proposed by President Ford and congressional Democrats.

The Ullman plan was the third major energy program in a month. Ullman criticized the Democratic package, which was unveiled Friday, as being "watered down to the point where the Ways and Means committee doesn't believe that it will adequately do the job."

A 34-page Democratic report drawn up by "task forces" comprised of members of Ullman's committee also flatly rejected Ford's program, which is based on controversial oil import fees, as running "the real risk of deepening both the inflation and recession pressures existing today."

Ullman said the main points of his panel's plan included:

— A tax increase on "excess" use of gasoline over a basic limit, beginning with a nickel a gallon and increasing to 40 cents a gallon by 1969. The money generated would be placed into a trust fund for energy research and development.

— Establishment of a Federal Petroleum Purchasing Agency that would buy imported oil from the nation which supplied the lowest sealed bid.

— Gradual imposition of oil import quotas with a goal of cutting back imports by one million barrels per day over a two to three year period and further decreases thereafter until a total of 15 per cent reduction is accomplished in the 1980's.

— A tax on automobiles with poor fuel economy and a possible tax credit for those with good gas mileage.

— A windfall profits tax based on the assumption of gradual deregulation of oil and natural gas prices.

— Incentives for research and development of alternative energy sources and for conversion of electric power plants from oil to coil.

Ullman's plan, which is labeled "Alternatives for Consideration in an Energy Program," will get a full airing beginning Monday when the Ways and Means Committee opens hearings on all three.

Ullman, who was interviewed on CBS' "Face the Nation" in conjunction with release of the committee's energy proposals, said he believes his panel "has the responsibility for leading the way in the Congress for the development of a sound energy policy."

Congressmen confront Vietnamese Communists

Compiled from Wires

SAIGON — An official U.S. congressional delegation met here yesterday with Communist representatives in a heated confrontation that one legislator said convinced him to vote in favor of continuing military aid to Indochina.

In Phnom Penh, Communist gunners fired 16 rockets into the city and the airport that is its lifeline, killing at least 13 civilians and wounding 18 others, military officers reported.

The Cambodian government announced it has ordered all rice brought into the capital by the four-day-old American airlift withheld from civilians and used only to feed the military.

Some of the lawmakers told North Vietnamese representatives they were liars and murderers.

Rep. Bill Chappell, Jr., D-Fla., accused North Vietnam of murder in attacks on American searching for graves of missing U.S. soldiers in South Vietnam, and Sen. Dewey Bartlett, R-Okla., called North Vietnamese statements "hogwash."

Other members of the U.S. delegation, including Reps. Bella S. Abzug, D-N.Y., and Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., were more conciliatory, urging improved relations between North Vietnam and the United States.

Bartlett also said he believed the group will recommend that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger begin negotiations with the Soviet Union, China and North Vietnam to end the fighting.

The eight members of the congressional delegation, including two women, spent two hours during their last day in Saigon in separate meetings with North Vietnamese and Viet Cong officers at Tan Son Nhut's Camp Davis.

Gallo says its yielding to UFW would invite Teamsters trouble

MODESTO, Calif. (UPI) — The Gallo Winery responded yesterday to the latest attack on its labor policy with a newspaper ad claiming that to yield to the United Farm Workers Union would merely invite trouble from the Teamsters Union.

About 10,000 sympathizers of the UFW staged a massive weekend rally in support of a boycott against Gallo, the nation's largest winery.

They marched through this city of 80,000 Saturday, then assembled at a park to hear UFW leader Cesar Chavez outline grievances against both Gallo and the giant Teamsters Union. Chavez demanded secret union representation elections for field workers hired by the winery.

The UFW lost its right to represent Gallo's 500 field workers 20 months ago when the winery recognized the Teamsters as the bargaining agent for its field workers. The UFW saw the move as a union-busting tactic and began a nationwide boycott.

The winery replied yesterday with full page newspaper ads. Bold black letters said it was: "An open letter to Cesar Chavez from Ernest and Julio Gallo."

"You know that, if Gallo yielded to your request, Gallo would violate its contract with the Teamsters and become subject to Teamster strikes, lawsuits and other harassment including boycotts," the ad said in part.

The Gallo ads, which a spokesman estimated cost just under $30,000 for a single Sunday run in California newspapers, said, "You know that Gallo is now and always has been perfectly agreeable to an election if you and the Teamsters would agree to such an election, and if the results were legally binding and enforceable on all parties." It ended with a plea for legislation bring farmworkers under the protection of the National Labor Relations Act.

Meanwhile, two government agencies have launched an investigation into the widely broadcast TV commercials for "Madria Madria" Sangria to determine whether they are deceptive, it was learned yesterday.

AIM optimistic that takeover could end

SHIPROCK, N.M. (UPI) — American Indian Movement members said yesterday they were encouraged that negotiations with the Navajo Tribe could end a week-long armed occupation of a reservation electronics plant.

The Navajo Tribal Council met yesterday with a negotiator for about 50 AIM members occupying the Fairchild Semi-conductor plant near Shiprock. About 20 Indians occupied the plant Feb. 24 and said they would stay until 140 Navajo employees laid off were rehired.

However, Fairchild said it closed the plant indefinitely Sunday and laid off the remaining 400 employees, nearly all of whom are Navajos.

"We anticipate a good outcome from the meetings," AIM Southwest regional field coordinator Larry Foster said. "We feel these meetings will be beneficial. We have progressed with the Tribal Council and tribal government."

Foster said AIM principally wanted a complete investigation of the operation of the plant, which is owned by the tribe and leased to Fairchild. Company representatives, who said the occupation is a tribal matter, have not attended the negotiations.

Bills to revive death penalty pending

Dukakis to veto any State proposal

BOSTON (AP) — The question of reinstating the death penalty in Massachusetts may be decided by a one or two vote margin again this year.

But this year, backers of capital punishment plan a barrage of slightly different proposals, hoping to push one of them through.

And opponents are hoping for a definitive U.S. Supreme Court ruling, expected by early summer, on whether the death penalty constitutes cruel and unusual punishment.

Like last year, leaders of the legislative Judiciary Committee say they will present the House and Senate with a measure calling for the death penalty for nine specific categories of first degree murder.

Once again, they say that measure is almost certain to be approved and sent to the governor — this time Gov. Michael S. Dukakis — and to be vetoed.

Again, the fate of the death penalty will hang on a slim margin of votes in an attempt to override the veto, the legislators say. A two-thirds vote in the House and Senate is needed to override a veto.

Votes on the death penalty in Massachusetts have traditionally been close.

In 1968 the Senate came one small parliamentary step short of enacting a repeal of the statute, with former Gov. Endicott Peabody waiting to sign it.

Since the Supreme Court overturned state death penalty statutes in 1972, proponents of capital punishment have been pressing for its reinstatement here.

This year, Rep. Laurence R. Buxbaum, D-Sharon who opposes the bill, expects the house vote on a veto override to be closer than ever, with a possibility of stopping the measure there.

If the house overrides the veto, the Senate vote is expected to be very close to the one-vote margin that sustained a veto last year, according to Sen. John J. Conte, D-Worcester, Senate chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Some legislators even see the possibility of a tie vote, in which case Senate President Kevin B. Harrington says he would be likely to cast a tie-breaker vote against capital punishment.

If the nine-category measure is eventually killed, Rep. Michael F. Flaherty, D-Boston, House chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said he is prepared to follow it with nine individual measures for each of the separate categories.

The categories include a murder of a policeman, prison guard or firefighter; murder in the course of a rape, sexual assault or hijacking; murder during a breaking and entering or armed robbery; murder for pay, and murder with extreme cruelty.

"We have 17 capital punishment bills before us" in the committee, Flaherty said. "What we intend to do is basically send out the same bill as last year. If it's vetoed, we have the opportunity to send out single bills."

"How can the governor not sign a bill calling for the death penalty for the killing of a policeman, firefighter or correctional officer? I think the pressure that will be put on him will be quite severe," he said.

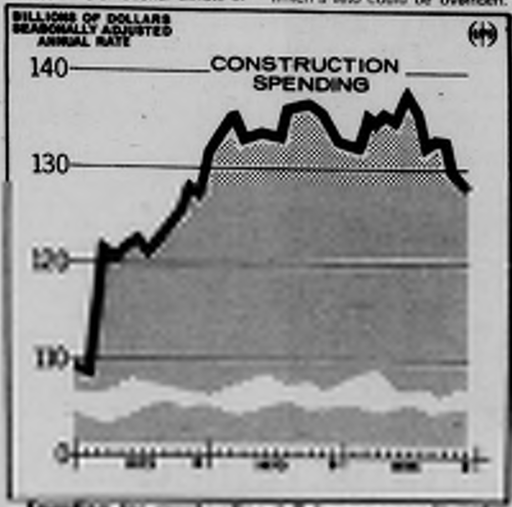
[illegible], press secretary to Dukakis, said the governor would veto any capital punishment proposal.

"The governor would veto a nine category bill or an 11 category bill or a three category bill," she said. "The governor would veto any death penalty bill that reached his desk, regardless of the number of classifications."

Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, a strong supporter of the death penalty as a deterrent, said he would oppose limited category measures as discriminatory.

He said the emotional climate of the state at the time of a vote would be the determining factor in a close vote on a gubernatorial veto.

"What would tip it is if there were some serious crime," he said. "If a policeman is shot or there is a serious sex crime, that could create at least a temporary climate in which a veto could be overriden."



Spending for construction fell to a seasonally adjusted rate of $129.1 billion in December, from $130.1 in November of 1974, the Commerce Department has reported. The amount of spending for construction is one of the indices for the economy.

Committeeman fears bankruptcy of Boston

BOSTON (AP) — The City of Boston could go bankrupt unless more federal money is made available immediately to help pay for school integration, says School Committee Chairman John J. McDonough.

McDonough predicted Saturday that the city could be forced to raise taxes by $80 to $90 per $1,000 of property valuation.

The School Committee will petition federal court on Wednesday for a declaratory judgment on whether the state or the federal government is responsible for paying the cost of desegregation, he said.

McDonough also said it has cost more than $45 million to integrate the entire city school system next fall.

He said more than $16 million has been spent on integration this school year and, "That probably doesn't include the state and MDC (Metropolitan District Commission) police cost for overtime."

"That $45 million coupled with the 14.5 per cent pay raise Mayor Kevin H. White has offered the school teachers plus a guaranteed cost-of-living increase could bankrupt the city," he said.

He said he does not think anyone realized how much desegregation would cost.

"I don't think Federal Judge W. Arthur Garrity who ordered the schools be desegregated starting last fall realizes it today.

"Judge Garrity originally said we should spend whatever is necessary to achieve desegregation without worry about the cost because it would be straightened out later. To the School Committee's way of thinking, now is later."

Morton advises Ford to share oil revenues

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford has been sent a suggestion that federal policy be changed to share revenues from offshore oil with the coastal states.

The proposal was made by Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton following a study by his department of ways to compensate states for the impact of oil production off their coasts.

His recommendation comes as the federal government and East Coast states are locked in a battle before the Supreme Court over ownership of the coastal land mineral rights.

According to estimates from geologists the Middle Atlantic coastal area contains some 20 billion barrels of oil.

In the past, government income from offshore oil has gone only to the federal treasury, with no special provision for the states. The government receives money paid by firms who want rights to produce oil plus royalties on the oil produced.

Congressional action would be required to change the distribution of the funds, as Morton has recommended.

An Interior Department spokesman confirmed that Morton has made the proposal to Ford, but no details of exactly how the money would be distributed were available.

Turnpike ups speed control

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Turnpike Authority said yesterday it has doubled its manpower for enforcing the 55 miles per hour speed limit on the turnpike.

Authority chairman John T. Driscoll said he has authorized purchase of a new radar unit and seven additional state troopers have been assigned to enforce the speed limit on the turnpike.

Since the intensified enforcement program began Feb. 19, 1,287 summonses have been issued, 701 warnings and 12 arrests have been made.

Driscoll said new radar signs at turnpike entrances will warn motorists of the enforcement.

Court to decide on welfare cutoff

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. Court of Appeals is to decide today whether or not it will hear a motion by the state attorney general's office to stop a court-ordered cutoff of $[illegible] million in federal welfare money for Massachusetts.

The order by U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman, is that the legislature appropriate $1.2 million for hiring 200 social workers to handle existing welfare cases.

The state is seeking to stop that order.

Rice goes to army

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — The Cambodian government has ordered all rice carried into Phnom Penh by the American airlift withheld from starving civilians and given only to the military, a senior official said yesterday.

The decision Thursday by President Lon Nol meant there was no relief in sight for starving residents of the besieged capital who have been unable to obtain provisions since the food markets closed.

Social workers confirmed that with the exception of some camps run by American volunteers, even penniless refugees in Phnom Penh were being denied the airlifted American rice. They said deaths resulting from starvation were increasing daily.

Rail subsidies urged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Passenger trains must receive increasing government subsidies for the foreseeable future and it is time to be honest about it with the American taxpayer, the new president of Amtrak said yesterday.

Paul Reistrup, former vice president of the Illinois Central Gulf Railroad, said he would attempt to hold costs as low as possible, but there probably will be growth in the Amtrak deficit, especially as the agency expands service in the East and upper Midwest.

But government aid will be necessary, he said, if Americans are to get what they are demanding: more and better passenger trains. "It appears that the country demands this alternative form of transportation," he said.

Gonorrhea increases

NEW YORK (AP) — The reported number of gonorrhea cases was at an all-time high during 1973-74, up 8 per cent over the preceding year, the American Social Health Association said yesterday.

But the health agency said the 8 per cent rate of increase was lower than those of the two previously reported periods, suggesting that some success was being achieved in efforts to control this venereal disease.

The agency also reported that for the first time in six years, the reported number of cases of primary and secondary syphilis declined.

Lorenz elected

Compiled from Wires

BERLIN — West Berlin voters, apparently angered by the kidnaping of the Christian Democratic party leader, yesterday gave his party an electoral plurality and mandate to form a government, making him in effect mayor-elect.

A television network computer projection based on returns available one hour after the polls closed showed the Christian Democrats, led by the kidnaped Peter Lorenz, had won about 46 per cent of the vote.

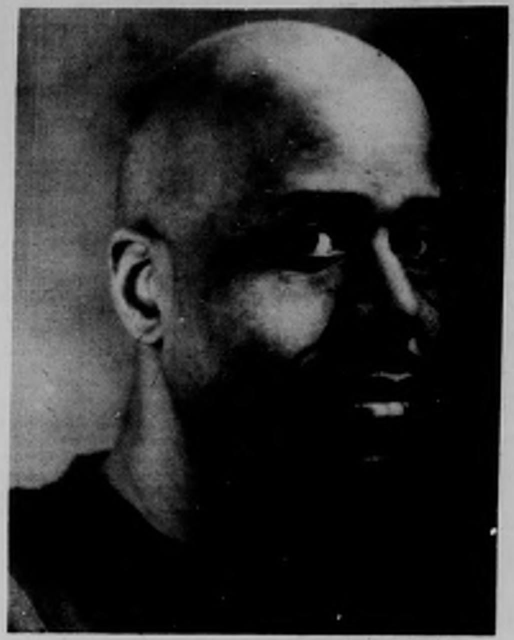
Meanwhile, police bowed to terrorist demands and released four jailed anarchists yesterday in a bid to save the life of Lorenz.

Kissinger to return

By United Press International

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will try to negotiate a withdrawal of Israeli troops from both Egypt and Syria when he visits the Middle East this week, an Israeli newspaper said yesterday.

"Kissinger's coming visit will deal not only with Egypt but also will try to reach agreement on the Golan Heights," the Tel Aviv newspaper Ha'aretz said in a dispatch from Washington.



Martin Sostre given guilty verdict

This is Part One of a two-part series on the trial of Martin Sostre.

After a 17 day trial on Februar, 27 at approximately 10:30 p.m., Martin Sostre heard the all white jury's decision of 'guilty'' on three counts of second degree assault. Within seconds the following occurred: Judge Robert Feinberg began to speak, a member of the Martin Sostre Defense Committee stood and began addressing those in the courtroom on behalf of Martin Sostre. Feinberg ordered that he stop.

Feinberg yelled that he was in contempt of court and ordered his arrest. Another member of the Martin Sostre Defense Committee continued the statement. He was charged with contempt at the enraged judge ordered his arrest. Then the judge ordered that the courtroom be cleared.

Martin Sostre was led out by state marshals. Among those in the courtroom, some left, some resisted ejection and some had no time to leave as did one women, four months pregnant, who has a heart condition and who was midway through the door when the judge yelled, "Get that girl in the blue coat!" Within several minutes of the announcement of the guilty verdict, 12 people were mass arrested on charges of summary contempt which precluded any provision for a hearing, and were mass sentenced to 30 days in jail.

Later that same night co-counsel, Dennis Cunningham and attorney Elizabeth Fink attempted to confer with Martin Sostre, but they were denied a legal visit.

Friday morning, February 29, Judge Robert Feinberg set March 24 as the day to hear motions and March 25 as the day of sentencing for Martin Sostre. By that time, eight of the twelve who had been arrested the night before were already in state vehicles, being transferred to Albany County Jail. Arriving there the four men were ordered to submit to the rectal search. The pregnant woman with a heart condition is among those in the Albany County Jail.

Monday, March 3, Attorneys Dennis Cunningham and Elizabeth Fink will file writs in the Supreme Court at Plattsburgh on behalf of the Plattsburgh 12, challenging the mass arrests and mass sentencing without allowing opportunity to hear or answer charges.

Tuesday, March 4, Martin Sostre will appear before Judge Port at a hearing where the issues of the rectal search will be argued. Martin Sostre was transferred immediately after setting of the March 24 and 25 dates to the Watertown County Jail. He then will be transferred to Auburn Prison pending hearing proceedings ordered by Judge Port.

After the hearing, Martin Sostre and attorneys will submit their petition for a restraining order which would prevent Martin Sostre's transfer back to Clinton Prison where the 11th and more beatings await him from revengeful guards and retaliatory warden and prison officials. Whether or not Martin Sostre is turned over to his torturors, whether or not he is beaten and forcibly searched, he will immediately begin the necessary research and work of going over the trial transcripts to prepare motions and to prepare a tight challenge to the guilty verdict announced by a judge and prosecuting-attorney-intimidated jury on February 27.

Dance ensemble hailed

By SHERWOOD THOMPSON
Black News Service

The New Africa House Theater-Dance Ensemble, under the direction of Diana Ramos, presented an evening of exciting movements, sights, and sounds, Saturday, March 1, at Bowker Aud. Beautiful Diana Ramos, together with Phyliss Chappell, Virginia Hill, Ron Nabrit, Ezuelda Dees, Shiela Hughes, Barbara Boothe, Herman Dunn, and Beareathea Reddy; expressed through their manifestation of dance, a profound knowledge of life's perplexities.

The evening opened with a tribute to Duke Ellington. Respect was given for the artistry, and the historical period which great and talented people such as "The Duke" and Billie Holiday, etc., contributed. The beginning performance was an enjoyable evening filled with nostalgia of the past. [illegible] good display of symbolism. Success has a way of climbing up, and down the stairs.

The section, "Poem for Eric," was indeed a very eloquent deliverance of the strength and affection of the Black woman. The consideration for the "Moon", which often-times is overlooked, suggested that there need to be greater attention given to the contributions of the Black women of the world. The "Moon" the most logical extension of the "Sun"; so it is, that "woman" is the most compatible extension of "man". Together, the two have exceeding love, power and strength. Here, Diana expressed that Black women have a tremendous potentiality, which demands the individual respect from all mankind.

Star Trek club unites 'Trekkers' members gather every three weeks to exchange letters, stories, trivia

By SUSAN GENSER
Staff Reporter

"Space — the final frontier. These are the voyages of the starship 'Enterprise', it's five-year mission to explore strange new worlds, to seek out new life and new civilizations, to boldly go where no man has gone before."

This speech is, of course, the introduction to the television series "Star Trek". The program enjoyed great popularity while it was a weekly offering, and even more since its removal from prime time television.

People all over the country are [illegible] clubs. They flock by the thousands [illegible] ventions held in New York. Star Trek [illegible] the form of books, pictures, [illegible] comic books, jewelry, watches, [illegible] buttons, are hot sales items.

The current interest in Star Trek brought about the formation of a Star Trek Club at UMass last year. The club is composed of ages and backgrounds, united through a common interest in Star Trek. They come together to share their experiences and thoughts. They are loyal fans, devoted to the hope that "Star Trek" will be revived as a T.V. series. For many of the club members, Star Trek is a major part of their lives.

Shirley is one such person. She is a grandmother working on campus, who says, "outside of my family and job, Star Trek takes up all my time."

She watches the show constantly, and is a member of various "Star Trek" organizations. Shirley is the vice president of the Star Trek Welcommittee, an "international organization which answers questions from fans on anything pertaining to Star Trek.

We get up to 500 letters per month. Some are technical questions about the show, others are about the cast. We always make sure writers get personal answers."

The Star Trek club meets once every three weeks. The meetings start with business, a large part of which includes correspondence with Star Trek clubs from other schools. Prostitution dilemma: UM legalization is complex

By ELLEN GAVIN
and GAIL SULLIVAN
Progressive News Service

This is the fourth and last article in a four part series on the legal aspects of prostitution. Decriminalization, the relaxation of the present legal sanctions against prostitution, was discussed in Part Three.

There seems to be no uniform definition of the term "legalization" when it is used in relation to prostitution. Some writers on the subject use it interchangeably with "decriminalization". Many others use it to refer to decriminalization with accompanying state regulation.

The legalization of prostitution is not a new idea, according to Vern Bullough, author of The History of Prostitution. He recounts Bernard Mandeville's pamphlet of 1724, entitled, "A Modest Defence of Publick Stews". Mandeville proposed that one hundred or more Houses of prostitution be set up in London, with two thousand employed prostitutes, with one matron for every twenty women, and an infirmary with at least two physicians and four surgeons in attendance for regular physical inspections. A governing board of three commissioners would be set up to redress the complaints of both prostitutes and customers. "Each house was to have four classes of prostitutes, selected for beauty or other qualifications, and the price of each group would vary, ranging from the first or lower class who would receive a half a crown, up to the fourth class of two women who would be reserved for 'persons of dignity' who could afford to pay a guinea."

Mandeville argued: "that the adoption of his plan would prevent boys from masturbating, protect against venereal disease (VD), cut down 'too frequent' or immoderate enjoyment of intercourse, halt debauching of modest women and eliminate a whole host of other evils." The reasoning may appear absurd from the reflection of a more enlightened age, but the arguments for legalization are equally as unreasonable.

Another primary argument in support of legalized prostitution is that it would bring VD under control by regulating medical inspections. This implies that prostitutes are responsible for the spread of VD.

According to Oakland, California, statistics from the Alameda County Health Service, 25 per cent of the general population of that city have VD, with prostitutes comprising only 5 per cent of all reported cases. While admittedly this statistic is a limited one, there are other statistics. Dr. Charles Winick of The City College of New York and the American Social Health Association, notes: "We know from many different studies that the amount of venereal disease attributable to prostitution is remaining fairly constant at a little under 5 per cent, which is a negligible proportion compared to the amount of venereal disease that we now have."

Another argument arises out of the supposition that the prostitute is involved in ancillary crimes. While this is true perhaps for the hustler who is also a junkie, the generalization is unfounded. While the related crimes of larceny, robbery, and assault do occur in relation to prostitutes, statistics show it is the prostitute who is more often the victim than the customer. Jennifer James reports that 64 of 76 prostitutes interviewed had been injured by customers, but did not seek police protection because they feared criminal sanctions. Decriminalization would allay these fears and prostitutes would be protected under the law from such assaults and robberies. Those who propose state-controlled brothels would see the removal of the prostitute from unsafe environments as the key solution.

Licensing prostitutes, an idea which is not specifically tied to legalization, could be an essential element of a state-run brothel. This practice brings up a whole host of questions: what is to stop stigmatization and discrimination of those women who do hold licenses, how could one prevent employers from requiring prostitutes' licenses for cocktail waitresses, dancers or Playboy bunnies?

There is no easy solution to accommodate the sale of sexual services by women to men. The issues are complex and every step in what seems to be the right direction may often be two steps backwards.

To look at prostitution from a feminist perspective involves taking two contradictory positions. On the one hand, one allies herself with the prostitute as a woman, empathizing with her oppression and joining her in her struggle for a more human existence, which would include being able to do with her body as she pleases. On the other hand, there is the hard, cold realization on the part of every feminist that the "oldest profession" symbolizes the age old subjection of women under patriarchy, and if we even entertain thoughts of our total liberation, we realize it must be destroyed.

An additional complication is the fact that many prostitutes do not ally themselves with feminists, when they are diametrically opposed to feminist philosophy. And of those who do share a feminist perspective, a number of them resent what they perceive as a "holier than thou" attitude on the part of some feminists.

From a legal standpoint, there is no clear and effective strategy which is immediately apparent and workable. It seems that the most important move at this time is the formation of strong unions among prostitutes. Also, we must fight for the decriminalization of prostitution, but the push in that direction must be consonant with moves in other areas. First of all, we must devise any possible barriers, legal or otherwise, to prevent state control of prostitution. Secondly, we must work for the enactment of strict legal restrictions on those who would employ prostitutes for profit. Without these two important pre-conditions, decriminalization could be a foolish and harmful step, for prostitutes, and for all women.

Sidney Meyers

FBI OK'd statement

A high administrative source has confirmed that the press statement was signed by two FBI agents at a Feb. 6 meeting with campus administrators. The source was at the meeting.

However, James O. Newpher, special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston office, said the request had no legally binding effect. He only said the records should not be removed from their present locations.

Newpher also said in a Feb. 10 conversation that no UMass records had as yet been impounded, sealed or frozen. "We were not attempting to prevent the news media from looking at the records," he said.

University Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson, contacted by phone at his home yesterday, also said the records are "frozen", meaning, in his words: "they are closed to any newspaper, unfortunately."

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said "under the state's public records law, I would have to disagree with the University treasurer." Contacted by phone, Bromery said he believes the treasurer has interpreted the law wrong and may have been "overzealous in interpreting" it.

Bromery also said he was "distressed that I have not been kept abreast of information on the audit from the University treasurer."

He said if had known he was to be uninformed "I would have taken another route" in calling for an internal audit of the School of Education. Bromery said in hindsight he might have asked an "outside agent" to conduct the audit.

After being read Newpher's statements and provisions of the open document law, Johnson said he would stick to his statement, adding: "All I know is that I was given a copy of the statement signed by the people who wrote it."

And Johnson said the signators to the statement were the two FBI agents and University attorney Sidney Myers.

Never said closed

Myers said by phone yesterday he would have no comment on Newpher's statements in this story. "I never said that we were ordered — and I stress the word ordered — to close records by the FBI," Myers said.

Newpher confirmed that he had talked with UMass officials about records. He said UMass released the "request" to close records — but the FBI saw no need to do so.

"It wasn't an order or anything like that," Newpher said, adding the FBI would not make such a statement "unless UMass would bring to our attention that there had been a request (for documents)."

FBI won't appear

The Collegian's source said the two unidentified FBI agents who signed the statement said the FBI would not support the University if it refused to release the requested records. The agents reportedly said: "If anyone takes you to court on this we won't appear."

The Daily Hampshire Gazette, a Northampton newspaper, Jan. 30 requested access to records of a Career Opportunities Program grant at the School of Education, according to reporter Jonathan Neumann. The request, confirmed by University spokesmen, was made to administration attorney Myers.

News reports the day after the Feb. 7 press release quoted a University spokesman as saying the request appeared to be directed at local media who had been given school records by faculty members.

The Collegian's source said the release was intended to block the Gazette request.

To protect rights

Privately, administrators say they sought to close records to protect the civil rights of individuals who might be criminally implicated in funds misuse.

"This is an effort to avert chaos in the School of Education," the spokesman was quoted as saying in the news reports, adding: "If there is a lot of screaming for headhunting there just won't be an impartial investigation."

A Collegian reporter, requesting to view records of the Career Opportunities Program grants was told they were not available Saturday by UMass controller William H. Maus. Maus said he has in his office disbursements and bills paid by the University, including the School of Ed.

'No one can look'

"You know that the records have been frozen by the FBI," Maus said, adding: "That means no one can look at them." Maus said a notice from assistant treasurer Rex E. Holmes, Jr.'s office directed him not to release records.

Holmes, who is conducting an internal audit of misused funds, was unavailable for comment over the weekend.

A request for general School of Ed records from UMass press spokesman Peter Gluckler, brought the response: "They're frozen...as a result of the FBI business."

But when pressed, Gluckler admitted that "none of the stuff is impounded, it is still open to the public."

Some School of Ed programs have relocated via the Dept. of Continuing Education, a campus subdivision. The Collegian also requested access to records of Ed School programs there.

"I'm not going to give anything away," said John E. Shea, business manager of Continuing Education, directing the reporter to the campus press office. And Shea said original copies of the records are in the accounting office.

Public records defined

The Massachusetts open records law is Chapters 66 section 10 and 4 section 7. It defines the meaning of public records and says the custodian of such records must provide copies of them on request by a member of the public within 10 days of receipt of the request.

Although the law does not cover memoranda for policy formulation, it does include the bulk of formal budgets, programs and plans at a public University, in the view of one lawyer.

The law covers books, papers, maps, photographs, recorded tapes, financial statements, statistical tabulations or other documentary materials made or received by any agency or political subdivision of the state.

The records which the University apparently seeks to restrict from public view appear to fall under the definition of public records, but it is difficult to say if they can be legitimately withheld because of possible court action.

There have been few court tests of the state law, which was last amended in 1973.

The School of Education has been the target of FBI, HEW and state investigations into alleged misuse of up to $100,000 since a series of stories in the Gazette last November detailed fiscal problems there. Since the stories, four administrators in the school have either resigned or been fired.

Senate report charges food stamps withheld

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Although more Americans are broke and perhaps hungry, administrative inefficiency by the Agriculture Department is hindering food stamp distribution to the needy, a Senate report charged Sunday.

The 71 page report by the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs calculated that by last September at least 37 million persons eligible for food stamps were not receiving them. Only 38 per cent of those eligible were getting food stamp assistance.

The report said hunger is growing in terms of food stamp need, with the number eligible rising by 30 per cent from over 29 million in 1972 to 38.8 million last year. But food stamps reached 42 per cent of those eligible in 1973.

In addition, as many as 86,000 applicants were waiting more than 30 days to be certified for food stamps [illegible] in January.

Reform prison reform

By PAUL BRADLEY

To anyone concerned about prison reform, the death of James Dutton, as chronicled in the Boston Globe, has to be a disheartening example of how miserably the prison system has failed. Dutton was a thirty year old ex-convict who spent much of the last 16 years in prison and who died in Feb. 21 during a shootout with police. Dutton had tried to rob a Las Vegas bank and in the process took a teller hostage and demanded $100,000 ransom for her release.

Dutton was a talented writer who did a series of articles for the Globe last year concerning the life of inmates. Unfortunately, Dutton could not find any kind of writing job, and was hard pressed to find a job as a bell boy in Las Vegas.

Frank Feeney is a member of the Massachusetts State Penal Board who also was a well known bank robber, and once a member of the "ten most wanted list" of the FBI. Far from being a shining example of how well prison rehabilitation works, Feeney himself has said that he was reformed in spite of the system, not because of it. Feeney spent over 41 years in prison and was "never taught anything that would help" him to live on the outside.

These two very different examples show as it stands now, the prison system is a total failure. Inmates learn next to nothing about how they will have to live on the outside. One cannot expect that we give convicts a college education, but even the most basic and essential learning processes about life on the outside are neglected. As a result, released prisoners — aside from being considered second-class citizens by the public — seldom have confidence in themselves when they get out on the street. So they seek out people that they feel comfortable with, and are off on the criminal track again. Something like armed robbery then seems like a logical step in the life and career of a criminal.

While in confinement, inmates are never recognized as individuals, but instead are assigned a number. Prisons recognize only groups of prisoners, and survival as an individual on the outside becomes increasingly difficult.

In this state, steps toward reform of the prisons seemed to be moving in the right direction when then Governor Sargent appointed John Boone to head up the state Corrections Commission. Boone initiated programs like furloughs for prisoners, education for the inmates, and halfway houses — all aimed at readying the ex-con to live on the outside. Boone and his programs alike fell victim to politics, and Sargent had to dump him in the face of criticism from political factions, most notably from Attorney General Robert Quinn who tried to ride the issue into the Governor's office.

The facts were that over 99 per cent of furloughed prisoners returned on schedule, while the minority that stayed away became more well-known. This is a remarkable statistic when one considers that many furloughed prisoners saw freedom for the first time in decades.

While Watergate figures enjoy the country-club atmosphere of a minimum security confinement, the real problems of prisoners and prison reform are being ignored. This will breed still more problems, and the incredibly high return rate of ex-cons will remain so. Not all convicts can be rehabilitated. But the number of convicts who go back to jail after a short time is far out of proportion to the number of prisoners who can be — and more importantly — want to be helped.

The high cost of good talent

To the Editor:

As someone who was intimately involved with getting the Peter Frampton show on, I appreciate the review in last Monday's Collegian. One point of information that could mislead people into believing that Program Council Music Committee made a bunch of cash on the show was your figure of 1500 people. 1500 people may have seen the show but just off the top of my head, I believe no more than 800 paid the price of a ticket. We lost about $1200-$1600 (again off the top of my head — it could be higher!).

We are sucking financially to the point where a spring show in the stadium is in serious jeopardy. So seriously are we hurting that an additional [illegible] $5000 is necessary to present a concert with respectable talent (e.g., Little Feat, Saunders and Garcia). Thanks for the coverage and a chance to set the record straight.

State of siege

By B.J. ROCHE
and E. PATRICK [illegible]

The days of idealism are not over, they never were. The great notion of a government "of, by, and for the people" is a mere myth in the minds of our idealistic forefathers that has descended to our generation. The blatant and somewhat painful truth is that we are living, virtually, in a police state: a state of siege. This 1984 melodrama has reached us here at the campus level, the sanctuary of the "liberal" and the academic.

Has starvation vanished?

The problem of starvation seems to have disappeared. It is not difficult to get such an impression if one were to compare the attention and publicity the problem received just a few months ago with that it received recently.

Headlines about people starving, campaigns to help the hungry, and public outcries for governmental aids to help needy nations have all but disappeared. Most people are acting as if the problem never really existed. It's easier to pretend it's not there than to distress one's mind with the unpleasant thought. The problem is far from being resolved and so we must ask, why does a world that was so determined to remedy the situation almost ignore it now?

It is too easy to say that those who tried to deal with the problem just became discouraged by the unfeasibility of feeding the whole world. The problem is certainly a disheartening one. While people in starving countries die, the more affluent nations take a "well, maybe I will if you will" attitude. It is also possible that the well intentioned do-gooders did not realize just how mammoth the problem was when they first got involved with it.

One must realize the initial inspiration for the attention given to the problem can be attributed to the guilt feelings of many liberals. As we have seen in the past, the liberal conscience is always quick to rise with outcries of injustice, but has little durability for the long run. A contribution of a few dollars and the gift of a meal ticket are all that is needed to ease the consciences of most students. People must realize that the short-term programs established to help the hungry are about as futile as trying to stop a tidal wave with you hands.

A solution to the problem can only be obtained by the practice of methods that would require a good deal of reform in the social systems of many countries. Nothing will be accomplished by simply declaring that starving nations have made their own problem by failing to use birth control. Though birth control should certainly be considered a solution, it will not have any immediate effect. There are however radical methods which could hold some solutions to the problem. Since cattle consume much more food in grain than they return in meat, the adoption of more vegetarian diets would enormously benefit the world's food supply. The careful prevention of waste could also have an impact.

Why does a world that was so determined to remedy the situation almost ignore it now?

The only long term solution would be a total reform of the world's food distribution. Food must be considered not the private property of any one country or company, but the property of the entire world. The United States and other affluent countries should supply food for hungry countries without the expectation of gratitude in return. The "aren't we being nice to you" attitude of the past should disappear. Food should be given to the hungry nations with the justification that they, too, are citizens of this planet and as such they have a right to its fruits.

It is unfortunate that public awareness of the problem did little to alleviate it. To remember that there are starving people in the world when one is well fed is difficult. It's all too easy to become discouraged when one realizes the little results programs to help the hungry have produced. In order to achieve any long term solution considerable sacrifices must be made by the affluent peoples of the world.

Student Union, CC to have uniformed patrol

By BRUCE R. FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

Men in green uniforms will be patroling the campus center student union complex along with one full-time police officer.

The new patrol was voted on by the campus center board of governors for increased police protection.

The patrol consist of one policeman with full police power and four Institutional Protection Men who do not have police powers.

"The I.P.M.'s will be the eyes and ears of the uniformed officer," said Capt. Joyce. All five men will be in radio contact with each other and with the station.

Both Chafin and Joyce stressed that the main purpose of the patrol is preventitive. The Campus Center complex has recently become one of the biggest crime areas on campus, and it is hoped that the presence of uniformed officers will stop potential problems before they occur. Most of their time will be taken up with regular patrol duties such as checking locks, and being available to people who may need them. However, Joyce and Chafin said that strict enforcemet of state liquor laws will also be a part of the patrolman's work.

See related commentary page 10

This not only includes the serving of minors and drunks, but also such things as observance of closing times and taking liquor off the premises.

At the moment, the officer assigned to the beat is patrolman Mark LaBranch. There are also three others in training who may take the assignment at some time in the future. There was not exactly a mad rush by the men on the force to volunteer for the assignment, mainly because of the hours, but Saul Chafin, a veteran of many years, said he wished he were twenty years younger with an assignment in the complex. He explained that it's out of the weather, with lots of people around, three bars, movies, functions, and since it's a foot beat, there is a lot of face to face contact and community input. "I don't want people, to see LaBranch coming and think, 'Look out -- here comes the man.' " said Chafin. "After a while, I want it to be more like, 'Hey Mark, what's happening?'"

After a short break, Ginsberg called the crowd back to their seats with a small bell and read poems about the changes he had gone through, poems about age, about his friends and fellow beat writers Neal Cassady and Jack Kerouac, poems dealing with political struggle and the roots of what would become the hippie generation.

Corso then took to the stage to begin one of the most outrageous performances ever on the campus.

"What are you doing here?" asked Corso as he sipped a Black Russian. "You're all stupid. What the hell do you know?" he continued. He asked the audience what came first the Iliad or the Odyssey and went on to explain in mangled terms how they were wrong and ignorant. "You embarrass me, all you ugly people" he said. After that he said that there is only one thing he didn't understand about life and that was the "ego trip" because he had no control over his body's action. The audience taunted him further yelling out questions about life, the names of boats that [illegible] and finally someone asked him "What is reality?" "I'll call it an eye" said Corso, and he sat down.

"What is reality?"
'I'll call it an eye'
- Corso

Orlovsky then made his final appearance more confused and disoriented than he had been before. He read and sang often repeating what he had done in the first set.

The evening ended with a meditational chant by Ginsberg and Orlovsky followed by more comments and insults from Corso as the house lights went up.

As the crowd filed out of the SUB somewhat shocked there was little sense of disappointment. They came to see that which was history, that which was deviant to society, that which was outrageous. And they saw it all.

The reading started the beginning of a five college two week symposium: Other Voices: The Arts and San Francisco 1945-1965, which will consist of films, discussions, lectures and exhibitions dealing with the 50's "beat" genre.

Stolen car blazes, cops keep distance

Staff Reporter

A stolen car was found in flames by UMass police at approximately [illegible] Saturday night in the peripheral lot adjacent to Alumni Stadium.

According to police reports, the car was stolen from Methuen, brought to the parking lot on campus and apparently "torched."

The car never exploded but was completely engulfed by flames as Amherst firemen from Engine [illegible] and police stayed at a distance. The firemen then cautiously approached the burning 1969 Oldsmobile and proceeded to check every part of the smoldering automobile. A small fire was reignited in the back seat, but firemen were quick to extinguish the flames. The firemen then worked at prying open the trunk and covering every part of the auto to prevent the fire from starting again.

UMass police have no suspects. The car was totally ruined by the fire and heavy black smoke. The huge flames in the dark "P" lot as the car burned considerably before firemen and police arrived at the scene. The car was located in an isolated part of the parking lot and no other cars were damaged.

Talbot explains budget

An electronic system has been proposed, the Director said, costing between [illegible] and [illegible] in addition to 10 cents for each "book strip" be adopted by the library. The book strips would be placed randomly in books and would have to be de-magnetized at the check out desk so not to set off an alarm. The proposal is currently before the finance committee, according to Talbot.

When questioned about the possibility of a fire in "the World's Tallest Library" as it is billed in Guinness Book of World Records, Mr. Talbot said "the building was built before fire codes for this type of building were established." However, we've talked with experts, he said, and they say the building is "fundamentally safe." It is made mostly of concrete, and there's little that can burn, he said, except for the books. The books aren't combustible, a fire would have to be set, he added.

In case of a fire, the building "can be quickly evacuated," Talbot said. [illegible] floor who would facilitate evacuation in an emergency, he said.

The library has had problems with the air conditioning and heating systems, according to Talbot. "These problems have been continuing," he added. "It takes a while to adjust the system."

Economics prof offers inflation interpretation

By MEREDITH MANNING
Progressive News Service

The word "inflation" is generally met with either blatantly bored sighs from those who choose to ignore it, or a stream of accusations against the ever-oppressive system from righteous radicals.

Whichever side of the fence one happens to be on, most will admit that any discussion concerning the present economy is mind-boggling to the average student.

In an interview, Michael Best of the UMass Economics Dept. explored this dilemma and offered an up to date "inflation translation" from his socialist perspective.

Mike Best's six years at UMass have not been without problems due to departmental objection to his "radical" views. Throughout the spring of '71 and '72, Best's involvement in the anti-war movement posed serious questions regarding his competence as a professor, but student support at this time was influential enough to keep him in the department.

In his usual affable but intense manner, he attributed the critical economic situation to an "unrepresentative government" stuck on tactics which are tied to the interests of big business.

"Ford and his economic advisors don't realize how out of control this is, in terms of the usual mechanisms employed to restore stability in the past. The basic problem is that big corporations determine what is to be produced and at what price," he said.

Given the corporate dominated political environment, the government is in no position to threaten corporate prerogatives and thus spends tax money to serve corporate interests, instead of directing the funds to the people, Best added.

Best outlined the sequence of events that led to the decline in corporate profits, explaining how the big businesses of the 1960's assumed high profits in the future and went heavily into debt in order to invest money in growth. But when profits didn't meet expectations, prices rose, demands for goods declined and unemployment grew rapidly.

This resulted in the precarious position the entire system is facing now. President Ford is arguing for policies that he assumes will induce consumers to spend more on corporate commodities such as automobiles, because so much of the profit and employment structure is dependent on the financial stability of our major corporations.

Best commented on the President's proposals, saying, "rather than encouraging more corporate control, the government should be spending the money on socially useful job programs that would reduce unemployment."

Best said that the entire structure must be changed in order to attain full employment while simultaneously meeting the collective needs of the public. "We have both the resources and the labor to achieve these goals, but unfortunately, the need for mass transit, city planning, public housing, conservation projects and all other socially productive activities are presently being ignored because of the profit priority of capitalism."

Turning the conversation to students, Best said that the college graduates fortunate enough to find jobs are demanding more fulfilling work as well as greater participation in the decision-making procedures. Since management will not concede to worker control demands, upper-echelon bureaucrats translate these grievances into cues for wage increases.

This monetary need can only be answered by worker speed-ups. As workers become further alienated from their jobs, absenteeism, sabotage, drugs and alcohol create labor control problems for the management. The resolution of such problems makes workplace arrangements a "political" issue, calling into question the basic institution of capitalism -- the wage-labor system, said Best.

Mike Best believes "socialism is definitely on the agenda," and supports the success of the food and transportation cooperatives in the Amherst area. His hope is that these social services will reach a national level, so that the collective needs of the people can stand up to the alienating industry that favors the capitalists and results in inadequate food, homes and health care for the poorest segment of the American population.

Two pieces of lounge furniture, from the 17th floor of John Quincy Adams tower, were stolen this weekend, according to Ava Nissenbaum floor counselor.

One chair valued at [illegible] was taken from the lounge Friday night. A two-seat couch, worth approximately [illegible], was stolen Saturday night.

Police have not been contacted about the robberies because "in order to promote community atmosphere we attempt to solve all our problems without police involvement," Nissenbaum said.

Nissenbaum said no further action will be taken until [illegible], head of residence, returns. [illegible] was away when the robberies occurred.

The thief in the second robbery was partially identified by Angela [illegible] and Barb Rose, floor students. [illegible] said "the thief was wearing a red plaid flannel shirt and jeans and had light brown hair."

Rose said, "I saw a guy dragging our leather couch behind him." The two residents pursued the suspect until he entered an elevator where another person was waiting. The second suspect was not seen by the two residents.

Students on security Saturday night said they saw nothing suspicious before they left their post at 3 a.m.

UMass Theater Club now taking 'one-acts'

The UMass Theater Club, Roister Doisters, are now accepting proposals for an evening of One-Acts to be performed April 10-12 and for one Main stage production scheduled for the first week of May. The deadline for all proposals is 5:00 p.m. Wed. March 5. They should be put in the Roister Doisters Mailbox in the Theater Dept. which is located in the Fine Arts Center [illegible].

The One-Acts can be anything you like and would like to work on. The Roister Doisters is an excellent opportunity for creative expression, and indeed theater is one of the top mediums. All you have to do to propose your play is submit the following: A paragraph or a few explaining your concept of the play and how you would do it, a production staff, a copy of the script and an estimated budget [illegible]. The production staff should include a director, producer, designer, technical director, publicity person and a stage manager.

Now don't let theater jargon throw you. Obviously unless you're involved in theater you don't have all the people mentioned in the [illegible]. No need to fear -- the club has people to assist you in your proposal and production. The Main act requires the same basic format but more experience but if you feel you can do it [illegible] submit it.

Anyone interested who needs help can call [illegible]. Results will be announced at the next meeting which will be held in the Campus Center Friday March 7.

Coach Kidd changes pace

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

When assistant coach Russ Kidd first started his ballroom dancing course in spring '74, he had to recruit players from the hockey and lacrosse teams to supply enough male partners for the 20 women in the course.

This semester with enrollment in ballroom dancing topping 120 the recruitment has stopped. The tripling enrollment in just three semesters has been word-of-mouth spread by students that's popularized the unusual dancing course, said instructor Russ Kidd.

"Sure it's part of the nostalgia craze," said the easy-going Kidd, "but the kids enjoy it and it's a change of pace for me." Kidd is an assistant coach to the hockey and lacross teams in addition to his dancing instruction.

The course was started when Kidd mentioned the success of an intersession colloq in ballroom dancing at MIT to Ethel Purnell, head of the Physical Education department. Purnell accepted his idea and asked Kidd to set up the course himself.

Borrowing old records from the music library, Kidd organized the class on a discotheque format. With the aid of teaching assistant, Kathy Thomas the class has grown to its present size with an equal number of men and women.

Starting with a basic Foxtrot the class advances through the Rhumba and a Waltz to the more difficult steps like the Tango. Besides traditional ballroom Foxtrotting to Glenn Miller and Benny Goodman, the class has learned an energetic Polka, the Cha-Cha and revives childhood memories with the Twist.

Many of the students are learning to dance for the first time. Some are only adding to their repertoire. "I heard this is coming back," said a tall dancer, adding, "It's a good way to meet girls while learning to dance." A woman dancer said, "I've always wanted to learn ballroom dancing, for weddings and functions where I haven't been able to dance." "I like to dance," said another woman, "and this," running to catch the last notes of a Glenn Miller tune, "I love it."

Stockbridge students and 'friend' prepare for 40th annual Classic.

Livestock entries sought

The Stockbridge School of Agriculture, and UMass are holding their 40th Annual Livestock Classic on April 25th and 26th. Any four year Animal Science major, and Stockbridge student, may enter a member of one of the following livestock animals; beef or dairy, horse, pony, sheep, swine, or oxen team.

The deadline is March tenth, when there will be a meeting of all the entrants in the Stockbridge reading room, at 7:00 p.m.

Senior Ed majors workshops continue

The Undergraduate Advising Office of the School of Education is continuing its workshops for senior education majors. The workshops cover resume writing, job search, and interviewing. The schedule is as follows:

Tuesday, March 4: (All workshops are from 8:00-10:00 p.m. in Hills lobby.) Discussions on resume writing (collecting data to be used, different formats). Bob White, from the Career Planning and Placement office, will assist us.

March 11: Job Search and Role Playing of Interviews. Some large group discussion on the different aspects of job hunting, and small group role-playing of interviews.

Elevator inoperative, students complain

By SUSAN GENSER
Staff Reporter

The inoperable elevator in John Quincy Adams dormitory, out of order since December, will not be repaired for at least two or three months, according to Robert Campbell, spokesman for the office of residential life.

The elevator was gutted by fire in December ruining the interior of the cab and much of the wiring.

[illegible], a [illegible] floor resident of JQA, said the broken elevator is a "terrible burden" to residents, especially those living above the ninth floor. JQA does have two other elevators, but according to [illegible] and other residents, they break down frequently. Often, there is only one elevator working on weekends when traffic is heaviest.

In response to residents' complaints, Campbell said students should be "fortunate that they do have two elevators." Campbell said he is aware that the other elevators break down frequently, and added "the problem is how the facilities are being used. The elevators (on campus) are not being treated very well," Campbell said. "It's unfortunate that many are suffering because of the aberrant behavior of a few."

The original builders, Westinghouse Corp., have a contract to repair the elevator. It will undergo a complete overhaul costing [illegible].

Women's network will meet today

The UMass Women's Communications Network will meet today at 5 p.m. at Everywoman's Center in Goodell Building. Topics of discussion will include planning a two-page editorial spread in Thursday's Collegian devoted to women's issues, services, ideas and analysis as a part of Women's Cultural Week.

The Women's Communication Network is a recently formed collective of UMass students involved or interested in the development of women's input into all phases of campus media. Concerned women are urged to attend; all new ideas are welcome.

The election will be held tomorrow in which one of the three will be eliminated, so this will be your last chance for voters to hear the candidates' views on school budget priorities.

WMUA News will be broadcast at 7, 8 and 9 a.m., and at 2, 6 and 10 p.m. Headlines will be broadcast at 7:30 and 8:30 a.m.

Task Force needs volunteers

The Volunteer Task Force for the Arts, a program designed to place volunteers in nursing homes and community centers in Hampshire and Franklin Counties, is accepting applications for placement.

Volunteers will use their time and artistic skills to provide workshops, entertainment, and learning experiences for people who have little or no access to art activities.

A person applying for a volunteer position will be given several job descriptions to read during the initial interview. Volunteers are also invited to attend regularly scheduled meetings at which specific training is offered.

In addition to personal benefits derived from volunteering, up-to-date individual records which will be maintained, might prove to be valuable as future reference or as a means of preparing for future volunteer work, according to Task Force officials.

More information about the Volunteer Task Force may be obtained from [illegible] at the Division of Continuing Education, UMass, 545-2013.

Ford names DeMott to Advisory Council

Benjamin DeMott, a professor at Amherst College, was one of six persons named Saturday by President Ford to serve for one year on the Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs.

Teaching English at Amherst College for [illegible] years, DeMott "will be working to review and evaluate federally funded educational programs" to the extent that the programs are fair to women. The council DeMott will be working with is allied with the Office of Education.

When asked what he hopes to accomplish on the council, DeMott said he is not sure yet because "I'm not too aware of the problems I'll be facing at this moment, but as we go along our responsibilities will be made more clear."

DeMott plans to do some traveling since it is "a national program."

DeMott said he does not know the other five members of the council. His duties expire as council member one year from the day he was asked.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

MONDAY, MARCH 3 — Born today, you are a person of extremely strong will, which, coupled as it is with tremendous stamina and a persuasive personality such as could cause even the most staunchly set mind to reverse itself in your favor, is virtually enough to guarantee your success in whatever you set out to do. You will have to be on your guard against pushing too hard against the wills of others; you will have to take care that you don't misdirect others where their own careers are concerned in an effort to enlist aid on behalf of your own work.

Somewhat inclined toward extravagance, you may well put yourself through some difficult times simply because you cannot say No to a bargain. When finances are very low however so are your wants, for you take the philosophical attitude that what you really cannot pay for you really cannot have. The problem is that such an attitude does not begin to [illegible]

You enjoy your material possessions to the utmost, but you also have a streak of esoteric spiritualism about you which enables you to do without even the necessities when you must — and without feeling either sorry for yourself or heroic about it. To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

*WHERE THERE'S SMOKE. . .*at UCal-Santa Barbara, the Chancellor is considering a proposal to hold all Departments financially responsible for the damage to floors and furniture resulting from ciagarette smoking.

According to a page one piece in the Daily Nexus, "detection of offending departments will be accomplished through custodial reports to the registrar's office . . . the Campus Fire Marshal is then in charge of enforcing the policy."

WHAT A NICE THING TO DO TO STUDENTS DEPARTMENT: at Indiana U., the Food Services computes cost of room and board on anticipated absenteeism in the cafeteria lines.

According to a piece in the Indiana Daily Student, IU students average on 13.3 meals a week. And this is what they pay for, even though 20 meals are served.

The rest must go to somebody's waste.

STUD PRESS TO THE RESCUE. When UMich was negotiating with a new dean of liberal arts to join the administration, the Michigan Daily, campus newspaper, got wind of the fact that negotiations included hiring her with a tenured faculty appointment in zoology.

The story leaked before the zoology faculty had been informed of the Administration's offer to the candidate. Their reaction was understandable. They refused to vote the tenured position and the candidate refused to accept the deanship without it.

Now, it's up to the Regents to decide.

UMass swimmer Carl Zulick relaxes after his performance in Saturday's meet. The swimmers are preparing for the New Englands later this week.

Swimmers finish with split; trounce UNH, lose to UVM

By BOB HIGGINS

It was a disappointing end to a fine season.

The UMass men's swim team finished the year with a 6-7 record by splitting Saturday's tri-meet, beating New Hampshire 96-15 while losing to the University of Vermont, 68-45.

It was one of the least impressive performances the Minutemen have turned in this season. "I was not satisfied with many of the times," said Coach Bey Melamed after the meet at Boyden Pool. "Sometimes the last meet of the year isn't all you hope it will be."

Still, there were some good performances by the UMass swimmers. Russ Yarworth swam the best time for a UMass swimmer in four years with a 2:14.0 in the 200-yard backstroke. Ben Crooker, despite turning in one of his poorer times in the 1000-yard free, swam his best time of the year in the 500 free (5:10.2).

Earl McAllister, performing in his last meet for UMass, took second in both diving events. "He did a great job for us this year," said Melamed. "We're going to miss him a lot," he added. Teammate Bill Quinn managed to grab third in both events.

Other good performances mentioned by Melamed were by Jee Hebert, Dave Boucher, and his brother Ron, who came within inches of pulling out the 400 free relay, just missing out with a slow touch at the finish.

At least eight UMass swimmers will be traveling to Brown this week (Thursday through Saturday) for the New Englands. They are Ben Crooker, Harry Blyden, Russ Yarworth, Dave and Ron Boucher, Duncan Lomas, Joe Hebert, Earl McAllister, and possible Bill Quinn. While they are not in a class with the best in New England, Melamed expects some good performances from these swimmers.

TAKING THE DIVE...Saturday's meet marked the final performance for three swim men. Besides McAllister, Andy Ober and co-captain Spencer Sullivan will graduate this year...This should leave a decent nucleus for next year's squad...Melamed expects Crocker to break his 500 freestyle mark at the New Englands, and also thinks that Dave Boucher could make the finals in the 200-yard breaststroke.

Then with the subs going the rest of the way, the Minutemen turned sloppy, as they committed 23 turnovers of their own in the final twenty minutes.

The Minutemen blocked a total of seven BU shots in the contest, most of them in the early going. Town personally batted away three attempts.

BU pilced six players in double figures, including Tom Hayes, who came off the bench to fire in 14 points. Other twin digit scorers for the Terriers included Neil Burns, Curtis VanLandingham, Walt Chesley (12 each), Kerry Walker (11), and Henry Downs (10).

The victory assured UMass of no worse than a tie for the YanCon's top spot, and the Minutemen can lock up their third straight conference crown with a win at Maine tomorrow night.

TICKLING THE TWINE — Duarte has become the team's hot hand of late, scoring a total of 94 points in the last three games...

[illegible] took a dubious travelling call with great reserve against BU, and flipped the ball lightly in the air. The act turned comic, however, when the ball came down on the head of referee Jim Whelan...

A full house gave an extended standing ovation to Murphy, Bill Endicott, Burke, and Duarte, as they were introduced prior to their final Cage appearance...

Walt Chesley was also the recipient of a standing 'o' when he found a contact lens that had fallen from Murphy's eye.

JV's annihilate Thames Valley

By MIKE BERGER

"And Thames Valley Takes Time Out" bellowed the P.A. announcer amidst an 8 straight point explosion of the JV Minutemen. If Thames Valley could have called a time out every 10 seconds, the result might have been the same. For there was no way Thames Valley could have been denied this 96-55 annihilation.

Thames Valley, a junior college team of Southern Connecticut, sporting an 18-5 record, (mostly junior college victories) did not expect such a fast paced game from the Minutemen.

UMass sprinted out to a 26-18 lead with 10 minutes to go in the half. Mike Healy, Glen Taylor and Dave Strader, all possibly playing their last JV season, came out and displayed great hustle and teamwork with Healy collecting 8 rebounds, 3 assists; Taylor, 4 field goals and 4 rebounds; and Strader, 4 points and 3 assists during the stretch.

Don Byrd and Chuck Stevesky continued the execution of the early blow-out with 8 and 9 points respectively to balloon the lead to 36-22. But then the "Schok Troops" were called in.

Moses Williams, playing like a fired up Dave Cowens, controlled the boards for 7 rebounds to help set up the offense for Proctor Daniels, Bob Minihan, and Ed Shirley. Within 2½ minutes the lead increased to 49-32 and Thames Valley players were either dying of fatigue or wondering when the next bus to Norwich, Connecticut was leaving.

The second half saw the continuation of the "Friday Night Massacre". Thames Valley instituted a 1-3-1 defense designed to slow the tempo of the game. It proved ineffective as UMass was able to control the offensive boards for 10 quick points.

STUFF SHOTS — Ernie Cagle, a 5:9 look-a-like for Walt Frazier, led Thames Valley with 16 points. For UMass, Stevesky, as per usual, shot 11 for 19 to lead to attack with 22 points. Proctor Daniels, coming off the bench, followed with 13. Coming out of a shooting slump, Don Byrd assisted the team's 51 per cent shooting with 12 points. Dave Strader, probably playing his best all around game, chipped in with 10 points.

Gymwomen triumph; men outscore Temple

By BILL DOYLE

Winning isn't the only thing after all, at least not according to UMass women's gymnastics coach Virginia Evans, as she admitted that she was a little disappointed over the Minutewomen's showing against Southern Connecticut Friday night even though they won, 104.70-102.45.

"We didn't score as high as we should have at this point in the season," she said, although UMass did total its highest score of the year.

Evans said that the vaulting and floor exercise were especially off, but that she expects UMass to get on the right track next week against Westchester State.

On Friday, the Minutewomen fell behind, 26.65-26.30, after the vaulting, but used a good uneven bar total to take the lead. UMass then won the beam by 1.6 points to take a 78.80-76.40 lead. Southern won the floor exercise as Jeannine Burger and Pam Steckroat suffered full point losses because of falls.

Steckroat was scheduled to go in the all-arounds but only competed on the uneven bars and floor because of sore wrists. She was replaced in the all-arounds by Ann Olson, who finished fourth with a 31.95 total.

Linda Nelligan missed the entire meet as she had the flu.

Evans said that Southern wasn't really much competition except for its best all-around performer, Cole Dowalibly. Dowalibly won the all-arounds as she scored a 9.30 in vaulting, a 9.20 on unevens, a 9.30 on the beam, and a 9.50 on the floor, for a 37.30 total. Susan Cantwell and Burger totaled their season's high all-around scores with a 35.75 and a 34.95 respectively to take second and third place.

Cantwell was UMass' top scorer on the beam with a 9.0 (using a new routine) and the floor with a 9.15. Burger was UMass' high scorer on the unevens with a 9.10 and vaulting with an 8.95.

Southern just didn't have the depth on unevens or balance beam to stay with UMass. Besides Dowalibly, the best the Owlettes could muster was an 8.20 for sixth place on unevens and a 7.95 for fifth on the beam.

Meanwhile, Burger came up with her season's best bar score, as did Cantwell with an 8.85. Steckroat also finally put it together for an 8.55 on the unevens.

Evans praised Cheryl Smith and Marian Kulick for fine performances. Smith scored an 8.75 on the floor and Kulick continued her improvement of late with an 8.55 in vaulting.

A UMass gymnast performs on the high bar in Saturday's win over Temple, which gave the gymnasts second place in the EIGL.

By BILL DOYLE

Sometimes history has a way of repeating itself.

Two years ago the UMass men's gymnastics team had to defeat Temple to finish in a three way tie for second place in the E.I.G.L. and it did. Saturday afternoon UMass totaled its highest score of the season to nip Temple again, 207.40-206.30, this time earning sole possession of second place with the victory.

The Minutemen, whose previous high was 204.25 against Springfield, now only have to defeat lowly regarded Syracuse on Saturday to wrap up second place and finish with a 10-2 record overall.

UMass totaled its season's highest score in three events also: 34.4 on the floor (previous high was 33.95), 34.25 on side hourse (previous high was 34.05), and 36.0 in vaulting (previous high was 35.70). Also, six individual high scores were posted by Minutemen.

Besides UMass' top score of the year, two key points helped decide the outcome of the meet. Temple side horse specialist Gary Kulick did not compete.

"The coach wouldn't let me," he explained, "because I didn't get my hair cut. I have an appointment to get it cut next week but since I didn't get it cut before the meet, he wouldn't let me compete."

Kulick was sorely missed by the Owls, as they don't have the depth in his event. Coach Tom Dunn admitted that UMass may have lost if Kulick was in the line-up.

Also, another key to the meet was the poor routine of Temple's Bob Henderson on the high bar. Henderson suffered through many breaks in his routine and finally slipped off the bar before his dismount. He started to walk away but his coach made him continue. He continued but fell on his dismount anyway. His low score of 6.55 which counted, was too low for Temple to overcome on the high bar despite a 9.2 by Tom Kovic and a 9.3 by Blane Nasveschuk.

The meet went just about as Coach Dunn predicted it would. He said last Thursday that Temple would win the floor exercise but that the Owls wouldn't score as high as they had in the past because of the hard mat in Boyden. It came true as UMass lost the event but not by as much as Temple would have hoped, 35.15-34.4. On side horse Dunn had predicted a UMass victory which came true in the form of 34.25-33.05. Rings went to the Minutemen just as Dunn had said they would, and vaulting was even, again just as Dunn had predicted. Temple won the p-bars as Dunn had said he expected. On the high bar, Dunn predicted a Temple gymnast would fall to the pressure and break in his routine which would cost Temple the meet, and of course that was the case again.

The best way to describe the Minutemen performance on Saturday was solid. Few routines were missed. Peter Lusk's fall on his dismount off the rings for an 8.7 was one of them.

Paul Marks had his personal high on the floor as he averaged 8.45. Roy Johnson shrugged off a foot injury he suffered last week in practice as he and his best all-around score ever with a 52.15. He had his highest score on the floor (8.70), rings (8.75), p-bars (8.5), and high bar (9.05).

Also, Dave "Rock" Kulakoff tied his best score on side horse with an 8.5, which came at a crucial time since it was right after Temple's Willie Summerhays scored an 8.5 himself.

But neither Johnson nor Bill Brouillet, who came in second in the all-arounds behind Temple's Tom Kovic with a 52.45 total, were the top gymnast for the Minutemen. That honor went to Steve Marks, who scored the team's highest side horse and vaulting scores this season with a 9.15 and a 9.40 respectively.

On the side horse, Marks thrilled the crowd and made up for some other rather weak Minutemen scores in side horse to give UMass the lead in the meet. On his vault, a hand spring with a front summersault, he got good height to tie Lusk's 9.4 on the rings against Springfield for the highest score received by a Minuteman in any event this season.

B's explode, 6-2; Celts dumped

BOSTON [AP] - Wayne Cashman snapped a 2-2 tie with a power play goal in the third period and the Boston Bruins added three insurance tallies Sunday for a 6-2 National Hockey League victory over the Chicago Balck Hawks.

Gregg Sheppard scored two goals and Hank Nowak, Terry dave Forbes and Cashman one each as the Bruins extended their home winning streak to seven games.

HARTFORD, Conn. [UPI] - The Seattle Supersonics, sparked by Spencer Haywood and Fred Brown, outscored Boston 8-2 in the last three minutes Sunday for a 104-97 victory over the Celtics.

The game was tied six times during the final period. But Haywood put the Sonics ahead for good, 96-95, with about three minutes left in the game. The Celtics failed to score, while the Sonics tallied eight more points to pile up a nine-point lead, 104-95.

New Englands: Tracksters place fifth; wrestlers capture third

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass indoor track team did not win the seventh annual New England Championships Saturday afternoon at Tufts University, but that should come as no surprise. The Mintuemen had their problems, and failed to challenge Northeastern, Boston College and UConn in the team battle by falling behind Friday night. The trackmen never compensated for their early deficit in the two-day meet and as a result finished fifth behind Springfield, which collected 20 points on several solid performances.

The fifth place finish was not expected, but mistakes were costly in the meet, won by Northeastern. The winning score was 54 points as BC was second with 43.5 and UConn third with a total of 36. "We couldn't afford to make mistakes," commented coach Ken O'Brien, who was not displeased with his team's showing. Springfield edged UMass for fourth place as the MInutemen managed only 16 points.

UConn took an early lead after six events, all of which were completed on Friday night. The Huskies totalled 20 points, due to the efforts of freshman standout Herb Davis. Springfield had 14 points, Northeastern 13 and BC 10 going into Saturday's concluding competition. UMass scored a single point Friday, and that came in the long jump as Ken Adamson captured fifth with a jump of 22-5¾". The trackmen had hoped to score 10 points in the six events held on the first day (the two jumps, hurdles, 50-yard dash, weight throw and the pole vault). Instead, the team scored one point and entered Saturday's action 19 points behind the first place team. Referring to the disadvantage, O'Brien said, "It could have affected the team in Saturday's events. We realized we were out of the team battle."

The most productive event for the UMass squad was the mile.

Co-captains Randy Thomas and Bill Gillin placed second and third, respectively, in the event which was popular with the crowd that packed the stands. The milers ran the first half-mile in 2:05 with Bob Flora of NU setting the pace, Thomas second, Gillin third and Keith Francis of BU in fourth place. Thomas moved into first before the three-quarter mark of the race and Francis jumped to second. Francis pulled even with Thomas with 220 yards to go (one lap) and outlegged the UMass distanceman with his long, smooth stride to win the mile in 4:07.4. Thomas was clocked in 4:08.8 while Gillin finished in 4:10.9. Thomas and Gillin failed to make Francis run their kind of race and actually turned the event into an 880 race by not making the BC half-miler work hard in the first half mile. It was a stratrgic mistake but O'Brien was impressed with the way Thomas went after Francis in an attempt tp win the race. O'Brien feels that his top two runners are prepared to run a great time in upcoming meets.

Joe Martens tied for fourth in the high jump by flopping 6-6, but was obviously disappointed with his performance. After missing his third attempt at the next height, Martens remained stunned in the high jump pit. The dejected Martens, who was favored to take first place, could only sit alone in disbelief after he was forced to drop out of the competition, won by UConn's Pete Augeri at 6-8.

Mark Healy tied BC's Paul Trovato for third in the 600-yard run finals with a time of 1:13.2. The only other individual place came in the 880-yard run as Chris Farmer placed fifth. Farmer completed the race in 1:56.6.

The mile relay team provided "an unexpected performance" according to O'Brien, finishing fourth in 3:23.6 John Richards, Healy, Curt Stegerwald and Steve Crimmins combined to finish just two tenths of a second behind YanCon rival UConn.

AROUND THE TRACK — A total of 19 teams took part in the New Englands with Holy Cross, Rhode Island, Williams, Bowdoin and Boston University rounding out the top ten. Northeastern won the meets for the second straight year and for the fourth time in the seven-year NE history. The Huskies scored in every event, displaying their overall team balance. Meet records went to Len Rao of NU (56-11½ shot put), teammate Dev Djerassi (67-7¼) weight throw, BU's Jim Cunningham (6.3 in the hurdles), Phil Hazard (5.4 in the dash). Bill Reed tied a meet record with a 49.9 to win the 440 while BC's mile relay team ended the meet by tyino the NE meet record of 3:19.2.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — For the first time in the three year history of the New England University Wrestling Association, the pre-tourney favorite won the New England's. The Boston University Terriers lived up to their billing and had seven men in the finals, crowning four champions and winning with a record 143½ points.

Dennis Fenton was the only champion for the Minutemen while 118 pounder Peter Sachon placed second. It was Fenton's second heavyweight title in as many tries while UMass finished third in team scoring with 83 points. If Fenton had not won his finals match against Dartmouth's Reggie Williams, then the Big Green would have edged UMass for third and taken the trophy along with it. Dartmouth ended up with two champions and 76 team points.

The Minutemen would not have fared as well as they did had the rest of the team not wrestled well in the consolations. UMass came home with five fourth placers and a third placer. Steve Ruggeri lost a 3-1 decision to UConn's Blair Ludeman in the consolation finals after beating wrestlers from Boston College and Maine to gain the consolation berth. Tim Fallon lost a disputed 7-6 riding time decision at 134 pounds to Brown's Link Chaffee. Fallon put Chaffee on his back with five seconds on the clock and thought he had erased the riding time, but found the clock had mysteriously ticked in Chaffee's favor. He ended up with fourth place.

Minuteman Kevin Griffin placed a very strong third at 150 pounds with a 6-4 victory over Dartmouth's Kevin Burke. Griffin was behind 7-4 in the semi-finals against URI's Marty Periera, and was coming back when he found himself wrapped in a cradle and pinned. UMass did not place at 142 pounds and 158 pounds. Mike Twardy failed to win a match at 142 and Tom Smith was forced to default after an opening round loss at 158.

Frank Kenney was the third UMass wrestler to find himself grappling without a break when he dropped a 4-1 overtime decision to URI's Moe Haislip in the consolation finals. With 17 seconds in regulation time, Kenney was ahead 3-2 when he was penalized one point for stalling. Haislip took him down and with fourteen seconds remaining, was penalized for stalling. The clock stopped while both coaches disputed the penalities, and after a ten minute break, the last fourteen seconds were ticked off and the match was plunged into overtime where the refreshed Haislip pulled it out.

The 177 pound class had UMass' Bob Spaulding placing fourth for the second year in a row as he was pinned in 3:53 by UConn's George Murray. Senior Tom O'Connell lost a 3-2 consolation finals match to Brown's Chuck Maze and referee Art Powers. Maze creamed O'Connell in the semi's 19-6 but O'Connell was giving him all he could handle this time around. He caught Maze on his shoulders in a Granby roll and should have received two points, reversed him at the edge of the mat and got 0. With ten seconds remaining Maze caught him with a dump and edged O'Connell for third.

With the exception of one match the finals were anything but boring. Two overtime bouts were wrestled, a half dozen stalling calls made, and three top seeds having to come from behind made it a spectator's delight.

UMass' Peter Sachon was once again ahead of BU's Jeff Lambert, but ended up being pinned. Sachon took Lambert down in a wild lifting, throwing double leg, was reversed, re-reversed Lambert and rode him the balance of the period. Sachon was on top in the second period and was reversed, cradled and pinned in 3:44.

Dennis Fenton dreaded his match with Reggie Williams ever since he tied with Williams in the Dartmouth match two weeks ago. It turned out that he had every reason to, because he had to come from four points behind to win 7-5 in the last twenty seconds of the finals. Williams shot a hard double leg and took Fenton down and started piling up the riding time. Fenton managed two escapes while Williams picked up another takedown. Fenton was in the top position third period and rode Williams out with three seconds to spare to gain the typing point. Williams got to his feet and Fenton moved in and picked up the remaining points with a TD.

Fans a bit too tense

PENNSAUKEN, N. J. [UPI] - A Camden High School athlete was shot in the chest Saturday night following a tense championship basketball game with Atlantic City High School.

Calvin Cook, 18, an All-American defense end in football, as in serious condition Sunday in Camden Cooper Hospital. Police arrested James Smith, 19, of Atlantic City in connection with the shooting in the parking lot of Bishop Eustace High School here, where the South Jersey Conference finals were played.

Police said Cook was shot as three busloads of Atlantic High students were leaving the parking lot. Two Camden students told police the shot was fired from the bus labeled No. 87.

"At first, he thought he was hit with a stone," police said, "but then he noticed he was bleeding and stumbled into the principal's office at Bishop Eustace."

UMass snubbed by ECAC

Big Jim Town drives for two in Friday night's crushing of Boston University. Jim's big night was Saturday when he shot 9 for twelve from the floor and scored 21 points as the Minutemen demolished Iona, 89-72.

By STEVE [illegible]

The ECAC selection committee yesterday invited Holy Cross, Boston College, and Connecticut to compete in the first ECAC New England qualifying tournament.

The committee also issued a conditional invitation to Providence College, stating that the Friars will be the fourth tournament team if they defeat St. Bonaventure in their final game tonight at the Providence Civic Center.

If Providence loses to St. Bonaventure, then UMass will be invited to the ECAC tournament.

UMass coach Jack Leaman was bitterly disappointed by the decision. "I will give serious consideration to asking our kids [illegible] we turn down the ECAC bid [illegible] with them," he said in a telephone interview.

The Minutemen have been the hottest team in New England over the last month, winning twelve of fourteen games.

"There is no way you can convince me that we are any worse than second and I don't know if we're not the best team in New England right now," Leaman said.

"That little ECAC couldn't beat us on the basketball court," Leaman said, "so they went in the back room and took it away from our kids."

UMass had already clinched a tie for the Yankee Conference championship, and can win the title outright with a victory over Maine tomorrow night in Orono. That would mean that the Yan Con's second place team (UConn) would be invited to participate in the tournament while the champions would not.

"I'd like to hear what the Yankee Conference commissioner has to say about this," Leaman said. "I just think this will be the death knell of the Conference."

Leaman said he believes there is "a very good chance" that the Minutemen will receive an invitation to the NIT. "We'll take our chances with them and whatever else we get."

"I just don't know how I can explain it to my kids," the coach continued. "I just think it's unfair to them. They've worked darn hard to become a championship team. They came from way behind, never let up, never gave up, battled all the way, and now some guys who don't even know what New England basketball is all about make a decision that we're not good enough and there's just no way they can justify it."

The selection committee, who met via telephone hook-up, was headed by Wilbur [illegible] of Albright College in Pennsylvania. Other members were Ron Perry of Holy Cross, Leland Byrd of West Virginia, Jim McKenna of Iona, and Jerry [illegible] of St. Bonaventure.

UMass convincingly crushes BU, Iona

By STEVE [illegible]

UMass clinched at least a tie for the Yankee Conference championship and boosted its overall record to 17-7 with a pair of remarkably similar victories over the weekend.

The Minutemen trampled BU 92-85 in the Cage on Friday night, and walked over Iona 89-72 on Saturday.

Both scores, however, are misleading. UMass held a 30-point lead over the Terriers with only eight minutes to play, and a 57-33 bulge over the Gaels early in the second half.

In both contests, it was a combination letdown and coach Jack Leaman's desire to rest his regulars that made the outcomes look deceptively close.

The Minutemen had their hottest shooting night of the season at Iona, splitting the nets at a blistering 61 per cent.

Jim Town led UMass with 21 points on 9 for 12 from the field and Greg Duarte chipped in with 18 (7 for 11).

The Gaels kept it close for about four minutes before the Minutemen got untracked. A tight UMass man-to-man held Iona to only four points in the final nine minutes of the first half as the Minutemen rolled to a 40-19 intermission lead.

The Gaels came back to pour in 54 second-half points, 20 from the hands of sophomore Kevin Bass, but never really came close to pulling it out.

BU, however, did threaten to ruin Senior Night with a late-game charge that saw them outscore the Minutemen 22-4 over a five-minute stretch and later pull within eight, 88-80, with a minute to play.

But John Murphy hit the first of a one-and-one and Mike Pyatt tipped in the [illegible] to restore some semblance of order.

Murphy, Duarte, and Burke were outstanding in their final Cage appearance. Murphy tossed in 19 points in only 21 minutes of action, Duarte added 18, and Burke hit six of his eight shots from the floor for 12.

On the other extreme, Pyatt, a freshman, provided a steadying influence with 16 points and 11 rebounds.

The Minutemen took charge early, as a full-court press gave them an 8-0 lead before the Terriers could even get off their first shot. [illegible]

Selectmen seek time for zoning revisions

Special meeting date changed

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

Amherst Board of Selectmen decided at last night's meeting to postpone the special town meeting from March 17 to April 28.

Susan Lowance, chairperson of the Planning Board, requested the Board of Selectmen change the date of the town meeting because her committee needs more time to revise the Amherst Zoning By-Laws, mail the information to candidates in the upcoming election, and to inform citizens.

"The response to the Zoning By-Laws at the last three meetings has been tremendous, people have been so conscientious with their suggestions so that we are overwhelmed with work. It is impossible for us to have the proposals completed by March 17," said Lowance.

Board of Selectmen also decided to leave the contract open for cable T.V. to negotiate. So far, the Board has only received one application which was from the Pioneer Valley Cablevision. Pioneer Valley said in a letter, in order to accommodate the Board of Selectmen's plan, it would cost 1.2 million dollars in investments, costing [illegible] per month to subscribers.

According to Pioneer Valley, it is currently serving the majority of the Amherst Community and that if this new plan is instituted, costing [illegible], it may discourage new subscribers and lose present customers. It suggested the Board review its proposal of September 8th which offers 11 stations for [illegible] plus $1 for the converter which would give cable viewers access to 20 stations.

Lowance said the Planning Board chose the April 28 date "by removing all the other possible dates which were unfavorable because it conflicted with town elections, UMass vacation and public school vacation".

Acting Chairperson Merle Howes, announced that noon April 7 would be the new closing date for the warrant of the Special Town Meeting.

John Peterson, chairperson of Amherst Cable Advisory Committee II, said "it is shocking to us how the Pioneer Valley can make those calculations when it is against the law to change more than [illegible]. They would not supply us with figures earlier."

He said they gave figures for the whole area from Greenfield to Northampton and refused to compute the price just covering the Amherst area. According to him, Amherst residents would be carrying service costs for areas such as Wendell.

"I hope we will be getting applications from other companies," he said, "but I was talking to the FCC Commissioner who listed two problems Amherst is running into."

Peterson said, "The first instance is just disgusting, no entrepreneur should be embarrassed to bid in." The first problem centers around the fact that other cable companies will not interfere in another company's territory.

Peterson added, because Amherst is located in the top [illegible] markets, the cable television company must follow provisions of the Federal Communication Committee. The FCC states that a cable t.v. station must have 32 chambers because one station must be provided for each commercial broadcasting station.

The license of the present cable operator in Amherst, Pioneer Valley Cablevision, expires on June 3. A provisional license will be granted at that time, with a final license to be granted in July 1976. The license will be in effect for eight years.

The Cable Advisory Committee proposes to extend cable viewers access to more than the 11 stations already provided by use of a converter button, which would allow the cable audience access to governmental, public, educational stations and WPIX, a New York City station.

[illegible] Bouchard, member of the Board of Selectmen, told Peterson, "you may have scared other companies by your proposals but within a year someone may come along and think your plan may not be so bad after all."

A March 11 meeting is scheduled for the Board of Selectmen to meet with the Cable Advisory Committee to discuss Amherst Cablevision.

SHL funds approved by Senate

Last night the Student Senate Executive Committee voted to override a prior decision of the Student Senate Budget Committee and approved the rationale of the Student Homophile League and the Gay Women's Caucus for funding.

A spokesperson for the groups read a statement from the two groups which outlined the activities of the two groups and emphasized the importance of an on-going organization which speaks to the needs of the gay community, providing a comfortable and supportive atmosphere for its members.

The Budget Committee had voted previously to reject the rationale of SHL and the GWC on the basis of the fact that the committee consensus was that "SHL and GWC did not provide necessary services to the gay community."

The SHL and the GWC currently provide a telephone hot-line, a speaker's bureau, various colloquia, as well as resource material which is available to the entire UMass community. They also are involved in the presentation of films which speak to the issues of gay people, as well as the dissemination of information concerning current legislation which affects the gay community.

The SHL and GWC will be appearing before the Student Senate with a request for funds in the near future.

JFK library staffer visits Pittsfield

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A staff member of the John F. Kennedy Library Corp. toured four prospective library sites Monday and said all of them had pluses and minuses.

Alan Pierce, administrative aide to corporation President Stephen Smith, did not say which location he preferred. He reaffirmed that Pittsfield is one of eight communities under consideration for the archive-museum complex.

Pierce was escorted around the city by local officials and then had lunch with several educators, including James MacGregor Burns, professor of political science at Williams College.

Four PR students 'disciplined' charged with participation in rally

By [illegible]
Progressive News Service

The Disciplinary Junta of the Colegio de Agricultura y Artes Mecanicas in Mayaguez, Puerto Rico, has withdrawn four students: Rafael Garcia Rosado, Yanira Navarro, Ivan Gonzalez and Ramon [illegible].

They are charged with participating in a rally to commemorate the October 15 student strike, which paralyzed more than 50,000 students and closed down almost every university in Puerto Rico.

The "disciplined" students belong to FUPI, a federation of college students for independence of the island.

The string of repressive actions against members of FUPI is an attempt to pacify the students protest against the steps taken by the Administration to deal with the Puerto Rican economic crisis.

The Puerto Rican student senate and FUPI warned Rafael Pietri Oms, Chancellor of Colegio de Agricultura y Artes Mecanicas they would use any means necessary to return the suspended students their right to study.

Independent professors have been fired from different universities and regional colleges on behalf of the economic situation; however, well informed sources revealed that it is only another purge.

commentary

Hundreds of teachers have also been fired from the public school system, most of them opposing the ruling regime of Colonial Governor Rafael Hernandez Colon.

Repressive measures are being taken by Arturo Morales Carrion, President of the University of Puerto Rico, against the entire Faculty. Memorandum 75-5 of February 6, imposes a 37 ½ hours load to the professors. The order also imposes the task they have to perform during this period.

The President of the University of Puerto Rico was born in Cuba and worked with the American Intelligence in 1965 when Juan Bosch, President of Santo Domingo, was overthrown by a CIA-led plot. He was also Special Consultant to the Secretary General of the discredited OEA (Organizacion de Estados Americanos) and he was recently given an award as outstanding [illegible] of the year.

Meanwhile, the Administrators got an increase in salaries. The rationale behind the increases was that the Administration works more than twelve hours daily and sometimes on weekends. Accordingly, the professors will not get any increase in salaries because, the Administration says, they only teach a twelve credit load weekly and receive twelve paychecks for only nine months a year.

The austerity measures taken by the Administration will no doubt aggravate the situation more. With the students being repressed, the professors abused and the workers suffering the high cost of life, the time is coming to take effective steps towards solving the crisis.

The FUPI and the APPU (Professors' Association) will be on the workers side once more to defend their rights.

Baker residents sick of living in 'sheer filth'

By DEBORAH GALLAGHER and MELANIE JOHNSON
Staff Reporters

Baker Students representing the 350 residents of the central area dorm have initiated action this week to improve their living conditions. The main problem, according to Baker Head of Residence Elsie Walters, is "a case of living in sheer filth."

Walters, along with Paula Russo, Jim Hinckley, and Jane MacDonald student representatives from the dorm, have attended numerous meetings with area and University administrators aimed at alleviating the "unhealthy" living conditions, the lack of "adequate" security, and the problem of "overloaded" electrical system in the twenty-three year old dorm, Russo said.

Among the complaints of the residents, sophomore Hinckley said, is the storage of trash in the bathrooms. "We have eighty people on the floor and four barrels without covers," he added, "by the end of the weekend, it's a very unsanitary situation."

The representatives of the dorm are also protesting the "uncleaned urinals" which, according to sophomore Russo, haven't been cleaned in "four weeks" and the "growing mold and fungus in the showers." "Janitors just don't clean the showers," Russo said.

Environmental Health Specialist George Reed toured the dorm yesterday morning and said a major source of mold in the shower stalls was due to "inadequate ventilation." He said, "you get an old building like this and what can you do with the ventilation?" He added, "people don't help with hot showers."

Reed, a consultant to the University with no administrative power, said that "mold is not a big health problem." He agreed with Hinckley, however, that "certain things should be cleaned daily." Copies of his findings, Reed said, would be forwarded to Vice Chancellor Gage, Acting Director of Residential Life Kenneth [illegible], and Business Manager Robert Campbell.

In a meeting yesterday with Mr. Campbell and Central Area Director Thomas Trotman in Trotman's Hills North office, the findings of consultant Bill Marren's investigation into the electrical wiring of Baker were discussed with the three students. According to Marren's report dated March 3 the wiring is "adequate and safe" to accommodate "normal residential use." The report said the twenty amp limits on the circuits were "higher than in Southwest and Orchard Hill" which have fifteen amp limits. It went on to say that the system was "never designed to accommodate the electrical requirements of present day students."

According to Campbell, the estimated cost of installing a new electrical system is $60,000.

Students are forced, according to MacDonald a sophomore from Norwell, to utilize hot plates on the weekend, a major draw on the system, because of the lack of "adequate" kitchenette facilities. There are two stoves, she said, to accommodate the entire 350-student dorm.

Plans were discussed for the creation of a kitchenette on the third floor in existing "revenue-making space" now inhabited by four students as well as in the third floor lounge area. Campbell said the latter was the "easiest administratively."

Total renovation of Baker is not scheduled for three to four years, according to Campbell. All reserve expenditures, he said, are tied up in the renovation of Hamlin dormitory. He added, "nothing, nothing is going to happen quick, no matter what kind of pressure is put on."

The lack of manpower was also discussed at the meeting. According to Walters, there are three janitors for the entire dorm. "The janitors just can't do it all", she said. One proposal to hire students part time for weekend help is meeting opposition with the janitor's union, Campbell said, which is currently in negotiation with the University for a new contract.

In another meeting yesterday at 3:30 with Gage the students presented their grievances about the living conditions and lack of security in Baker. Gage said he could not "make any promises at this time," due to the lack of available funds. He stressed co-operation between students, administration, and janitors until the problems could be alleviated. The [illegible] resource fee would be a determining factor in solving the problems, he said.

Senator loses seat in off-campus move

By [illegible]
MDC Staff

A student senator who was elected on campus but has since moved off and lost his seat has filed a complaint with the Student Attorney General.

Peter Birnbaum was elected last year from Cashin but moved to Brandywine Apartments during January and feels he should still be able to represent Cashin in the Senate.

"According to the Constitution, you're elected for a year and I think I can still represent the area," said Birnbaum defending his complaint.

Cindy Iris, Student Attorney General, issued a statement to the Senate last Wednesday night opposing Birnbaum's request on the grounds that "...a senator, to be a voting member must be a bona fide resident of the area he or she claims to represent."

In order to insure direct representation for students an amendment has been proposed for the Senate Constitution stating that the only way a senator can maintain a seat after moving away from his or her constituency is to obtain signatures of 150 members or one-third of the constituency backing the senators maintaining the seat.

Iris has already received a petition signed by over 150 residents of the Cashin area asking that Birnbaum be replaced.

"This is important", said Iris, "because when the mandatory housing is out in September the SGA is going to have to make some adjustments to insure best representation."

There will be a hearing on Birnbaum's request tonight in room 901 of the Campus Center at 8:00.

Munley will receive diploma in jail

Inmate describes Education-Release program

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Tom Munley is a senior in chemical engineering here. Munley spends most of the morning and afternoon in [illegible] Science Center in classes or studying in the library but every night he goes home to Hampshire County Jail in Northampton.

Munley was sentenced to eight and a half years at Concord prison. [illegible] But, since this was Munley's first offense and because of his educational background he was transferred to Franklin County Jail.

"I'm out on Education-Release. They didn't have any program at Greenfield so I transferred to Northampton. The Educational Release Program is an alternative to wasting away in a cell. [illegible] than I could lose this program," he said.

Munley is not on parole although he is eligible after one year. "I'm still in jail. I have to go back every night and on weekends. And there are some restrictions. I can't go in the Blue Wall like the other students. If I got caught I could be back in a cell the whole day," he said.

Munley plans to go to graduate school after he gets his bachelors degree. He will probably enroll in the graduate school at UMass. "Normally they don't like to take graduates of the same school but given the circumstances they might waive the rule," he said.

Before his conviction Munley was a "good" student although "I'm more serious now," he said.

While Munley was in Franklin County Jail, he took two courses on independent study with a professor Dr. Middleton in Chemical Engineering at UMass to continue his education. "Dr. Middleton came in every week just to see how I was doing. Now I'm two courses short of graduation, which I'll take in the fall. After that it's graduate school," he said.

Although the Greenfield jail did not have an Education Release Program, "Sheriff Martin made it physically comfortable. There weren't a lot of stupid rules, just basic things to keep control," said Munley.

"It took me about a month to acclimate, to accept where I was and what was happening."

"Greenfield, at least, has a farm. You can work outside. But I found it hard to identify with the guys there. Most of the guys are [illegible]. They're used to the prison situation. They are pretty well institutionalized," said Munley.

The sound of the steel gates closing put Munley "in shock, at first." "It took me about a month to acclimate. To accept where I was and what was happening. One thing you learn here, you just something to hold onto. Everyone has to open the gates for you. And my friends here who knew me before, wondered what they first saw me. If I could walk through a door by myself," Munley said.

Ford accepts Ullman plan for compromise

Tariff decision, veto due today

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The White House said yesterday that President Ford had accepted a Democratic plan as a basis for a possible compromise on national energy policy.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said a Democratic plan promoted by Sen. John O. Pastore of Rhode Island and Rep. James C. Wright of Texas had "too much fluff and not enough detail." But he said a plan by Chairman Rep. Al Ullman and his Ways and Means Committee Democrats "accepts the philosophical heart of the President's program."

Did that mean the President, angling for compromise with the Democratic Congress to make America independent of foreign oil by 1985, judged the Ullman plan a basis for talk when Ullman's Committee starts writing the law?

"Yes," Nessen replied.

"It is a basis for discussion but by itself it is not a satisfactory compromise," Nessen told reporters.

Nessen said Ford would announce today whether he will suspend for 30 to 60 days the second and third $1 increases on oil import fees. The hikes were going into effect March 1 and April 1 but Ford indicated Friday he might suspend them as a compromise gesture to give Congress more time to enact an energy program.

Nessen said the decision will be sent to Congress along with Ford's veto of a bill suspending for 90 days his ordered fee increases. Ford ordered the hikes to spur Congress into action on writing an energy program into law.

According to Nessen, the Pastore-Wright plan "places an extremely heavy burden on the poor," is "dictatorial," does nothing to stimulate domestic fuel production and would set up a "super rationing board."

Nessen said one result of that plan would be to make foreign cars more attractive to Americans.

He also said the Pastore-Wright plan advocates more coal production but without environmental protection, leans too much to voluntary conservation, would spend too much money and relies on an "utterly unrealistic" prediction of a 10 per cent growth in America's gross national product in the last half of this year.

On the other hand, Nessen said the proposal from Ullman accepts such heart-of-the-matter Ford principles as using price instead of rationing to cut gas consumption and decontrolling oil production. He said the Ullman plan is "closer to President's and more complete."

Children line up for rice soup being rationed in refugee camps in Cambodia last Saturday. Deaths from starvation were reported to be on the rise in that war-besieged country, and the government has announced that all of the rice that is being airlifted from the United States is being given to the military, except for some going to the refugees.

Congressmen shaken after Viet tour; divided on increased aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Eight members of Congress returned yesterday from an Indochina fact-finding mission that left them shaken by what they saw but devided on the question of additional U.S. military aid.

At an emotional news conference, Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., denounced the sending of $522 emergency military aid to South Vietnam and Cambodia, saying it was likely to produce only more killing.

But she explained:

"I see a tremendous obligation to the people.

"We are forgetting there are people in South Vietnam and Cambodia and they do not progress as the war goes on; they are only destroyed."

The delegation met privately later in the day to formulate a report for President Ford and Congress.

Sen. Dewey Bartlett, R.-Okla., at a news conference prior to the delegation's meeting, said he felt the United States had a definite commitment to South Vietnam to keep up the flow of military supplies.

He warned, too, that if emergency military supplies were not voted by Congress within two weeks, "there's going to be a blood bath of major proportions" in Cambodia.

Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger, following a closed meeting with the defense subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee, said meanwhile that he was encouraged by what he perceived as "an increasingly open mind" among congressmen about the need for further emergency aid to South Vietnam.

He said he also sensed that lawmakers were particularly interested in the kind of regime that might take over if President Lon Nol's Cambodian government falls to insurgent attacks.

On arrival early yesterday morning, Rep. Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., told reporters: "I think all of us have been deeply shaken by what we've learned. It was a very moving and very widening experience."

Rep. Abzug called on the United States to undertake a "vigorous political and diplomatic offensive" to try to settle continuing hostilities in Indochina.

Indians evacuate N.M. plant

SHIPROCK, N.M. (UPI) — Armed members of the American Indian Movement yesterday ended their weeklong occcupation of an electronics plant under a grant of unconditional amnesty from its Navajo tribe owners.

During the day 40 Indians left the plant and 16 others said they would leave at 6 p.m. (EST) after tribal officials had inspected the plant.

The Indians dropped their demand that the operator of the reservation plant, Fairchild Camera and Instrument Co., immediately rehire 140 Navajos who had been laid off. They agreed instead to a settlement calling for an investigation of alleged civil rights violations in the layoffs and of employment conditions on the reservation.

The Indians entered the plant, which is owned by the tribe and leased to Fairchild, Feb. 24. They briefly held two security guards, but released them unharmed.

Fairchild, which said the occupation was a tribal matter, officially closed the plant Sunday but said it might consider reopening it when the Indians left. A meeting tentatively was scheduled for tomorrow in Phoenix between Tribal Chairman Peter MacDonald and Fairchild officials.

Thailand government asks US withdrawal

BANGKOK (UPI) — Thailand's new civilian government yesterday called for the withdrawal of the remaining American troops and warplanes in the country within 18 months.

Defense Minister Gen. Thawit Seniwong said the withdrawal "is stated in our policy as presented to parliament today. This means that the total withdrawal of the American troops and aeroplanes will be done within 18 months after we formally take office."

There are now about 25,000 American servicemen in Thailand and 300 [illegible] 17 B52 strategic bombers. They have been based there primarily because of the fighting in neighboring Indochina.

Thawit said the original plan called for a total U.S. pullout in two years.

"Anyhow, we will manage to have the troops withdrawn in time. The supreme command headquarters and the foreign ministry will handle the matter together," he said.

But Thawit conceded, "We are not quite certain whether the United States will be able to pull out all those troops in the time that we have set."

Asked whether the new government had considered the situation in neighboring Indochina in stating its troop withdrawal policy, Thawit said:

"The constitution also gives the right to the government to look for ways and means to save the country."

Communist-led shelling kills 19 in Cambodia

Compiled from wires

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia — Communist-led insurgents fired Chinese-made rockets into two crowded sections of Phnom Penh and its nearby airfield yesterday, killing at least 19 persons and wounding about 20.

It was the heaviest toll of casualties in the Khmer Rouge's two-month shelling campaign against the isolated Cambodian capital. The city is cut off from the outside world by road and river, surviving on a U.S.-financed airlift of ammunition, fuel and rice.

Almost all markets and shops in Phnom Penh remained closed for the seventh day in a row for fear of food riots and anti-Chinese race riots triggered by current shortages and high prices of rice and consumer goods.

Phnom Penh Mayor Un Thanouch broadcast an appeal to parents and students Sunday night to remain calm and stop the scattered lootings of shops and market stalls which have taken place during the past week.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Robert Anderson said the United States had arranged to fly 20,000 metric tons of rice from South Vietnam to Cambodia to help aid war refugees in Phnom Penh and other accessible areas.

Anderson said U.S. and international voluntary agencies will distribute the rice, which is a direct U.S. grant to Cambodia.

A single rocket struck outside the Monorom Hotel shortly before dusk. Witnesses said at least 11 persons were killed and more than a dozen wounded. Most of the casualties were hotel employees, pedicab drivers and passers-by.

The hotel, which houses the news teams of two American television networks, had most of its windows blown in by the blast, the second time in the past week a rocket round has struck near the building.

Abortion regulation bill introduced

Designed to lessen suffering of fetus

BOSTON (UPI) — The Massachusetts Legislature yesterday was asked to require physicians to adopt abortion procedures to minimize the pain and suffering of fetuses.

Rep. William D. Delahunt, D-Quincy, a sponsor, said the bill was not aimed at limiting abortions, but at insuring fetuses would be terminated "in the must humane way."

After urging the Health Care Committee to support his bill, Delahunt told reporters society should be as concerned with how it disposes of unwanted fetuses as it is to unwanted household pets.

"I'd compare it to the antivivisection issue," he said.

Though the bill, filed with Rep. Raymond Flynn, D-Boston, was opposed by a series of woman's organizations and medical groups, committee members said some form of the legislation would be approved.

I think it's a reasonable bill," said Rep. James Segal, D-Brookline, "especially after the Edelin decision," referring to Boston City Hospital obstetrician Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin was found guilty last month of manslaughter in the death of a fetus during a legal abortion.

Delahunt said his bill was aimed to prohibit saline infusion abortions which involve the injection of saltwater into the sac surrounding the fetus. The saltwater induces miscarriage.

Delahunt said saline infusion also causes significant pain to the fetus and may jeopardize the mother's health.

He would prefer doctors be required to use prostaglandin or other new and allegedly safer chemicals to induce abortions rather than saltwater.

The National Organization of Women (NOW), the League of Women Voters and R. Phillips G. Stubblefield of Harvard Medical School opposed the bill on grounds it violates the 1973 U.S. Supreme Court opinion on abortions.

High Court rejects Jackson State appeal

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Supreme Court yesterday refused to review a jury decision denying the victims of a bloody antiwar demonstration at Jackson State College in 1970 any damages from city police and state troopers.

The justices refused to grant appeals filed by survivors of two youths who were killed and three students who were wounded at the predominantly black school.

An all-white jury in Jackson, Miss., failed to find any liability among 45 troopers and city police who admitted firing shots the night of May 15 as a crowd of students was dispersing from the yard in front of a women's dormitory after the demonstration.

The student unrest at Jackson stemmed from President Richard M. Nixon's decision to send troops into Cambodia and the fatal shootings at Kent State University in Ohio.

Parents of the victims of a similar incident at Kent State University in Ohio have twice brought their case to the Supreme Court.

On the second round, the Court ruled last April 17 that they should have an opportunity to prove that the Ohio National Guard officers and other defendants acted recklessly. Lower courts have thrown the case out without such evidence.

During the Jackson incident, James Earl Green, 17, and Phillip L. Gibbs, 21, were killed and [illegible] Davis Whitehead, Vernon Steven Weakley, both 19, and Leroy Kenne Jr., 20, were wounded.

District Judge Walter L. Nixon Jr. ruled that neither state or city officials could be held liable for the deaths and injuries and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the ruling.

In asking for Supreme Court review, three of the seven wounded and the parents and relatives of the two dead students said it made no difference which individual officers fired the damaging shots, since "whosoever he shot, each and every officer who shot did so wrongly."

US Court gives state deadline for hirings

BOSTON (UPI) — The U.S. Court of Appeals yesterday gave the state until March 14 to hire more social workers, thus delaying at the last minute an order to cut off $800 million in federal funds.

The three-judge panel issued the decision at 4:55 p.m., only five minutes before the cutoff order would have gone into effect. Chief Judge Francis Coffin cited the "apparent good faith" efforts of the Dukakis administration in complying with the lower court order.

Noting that the legislature is now considering a $1.2 million request to hire more social workers, Coffin said a "legislative group cannot act overnight."

The state now has an additional 11 days to win legislative approval of the budget request to comply with the order issued Feb. 25 by U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman.

Freedman's order set the 5 p.m. deadline yesterday for approval of the budget. Legislative action was held up last week by Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, who announced that public hearings would be held on request. The Senate Ways and Means Committee will hold its hearing tomorrow.

Coffin cited the "possibly irreversible effect" of a federal fund cutoff, and said that such action could impede, rather than advance a final settlement. He said any request for a further stay would have to go before Judge Freedman.

Suez Canal reopening delayed by politics

CAIRO (UPI) — The Suez Canal is almost free of the rubble of war, but political debris must be swept away before it reopens, the Canal Authority said yesterday.

The authority said its chairman, Mashour Ahmed Mashour, toured the canal area late last week to check progress on repairs to installations damaged or destroyed since the 1967 Middle East war.

"The opening of the Suez Canal is not far off from the technical point of view but until now the date has not been fixed from the political point of view," Mashour said.

The authority, which regulates all Suez Canal affairs, said temporary pilot stations had been erected along the 100-mile waterway and efforts to widen the channel had been started.

A final sweep of the bed for explosives will be carried out this month by the British navy, an authority spokesman said.

When the canal has been declared safe, it will be up to political levels to determine the date for resumption of normal shipping, the spokesman said.

OPEC convenes

ALGIERS (AP) — Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries appeared at odds yesterday over how to keep prices high as surpluses accumulate in the face of declining consumption in the West.

Informed sources said the discord among oil, finance and foreign ministers was over whether to seek a general production cutback or to allow prices and output to be determined by market forces.

The ministers, preparing for the first-ever OPEC summit beginning today, met for four hours, with the production issue at the center of discussion. The sources said confusion prevailed, and further meetings were possible Monday night.

McCartney arrested

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Linda McCartney, wife of former "Beatle" Paul McCartney, was arrested on suspicion of possessing marijuana early yesterday when officers stopped the family's car for running a red light.

The California Highway Patrol said McCartney, his wife and their three children were driving along Santa Monica Boulevard in their silver Lincoln Continental when the auto sped through a traffic light shortly after midnight.

While a patrolman was writing a traffic citation, he said he smelled the odor of marijuana in the car and ordered the McCartneys out.

The officer said he found a plastic bag containing about 10 grams of marijuana which Mrs. McCartney had allegedly carried in her purse.

Coleman confirmed

Compiled from wires

WASHINGTON — William T. Coleman was confirmed by the Senate yesterday as transportation secretary, becoming President Ford's first black Cabinet officer and only the second black Cabinet member in history.

The Senate action was a voice vote with no opposing votes.

Coleman is a former president of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund and has served as a part-time official or consultant in four previous administrations.

Ehrlichman case ends

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Superior Court Judge Gordon Ringer, approving a prosecution request, yesterday dismissed a local perjury charge against John Ehrlichman, who was convicted in Washington in the Watergate conspiracy.

Assistant District Attorney Stephen Trott moved for dismissal because, he said, continuing with the case would be an "expensive and time consuming act of vengeance" and "an excess of our obligations."

Anarchists land

By United Press International

Five anarchists freed from West German jails in exchange for the promised release of a political leader landed yesterday at the Red Sea port of Aden after three other countries refused them sanctuary. The plane had less than an hour's fuel left when it finally put down.

A spokesman for West German Lufthansa airline in Berlin, who announced the landing, said he did not know if the five intended to remain in Aden or only to have their Boeing 707 refueled for a further flight.

Collective bargaining clash

Frank said he expects the administration to challenge some of their voting members. "I think it will only involve a small percentage of people. I don't think it will be an important hurdle because I think we'll win anyway," he added.

Beth estimated AAUP membership around 300 out of a total faculty population of 1500. Frank said he couldn't give an accurate estimate of MSP membership because a new six week membership drive is just getting under way.

Unionization plans and the recently released Academic Personnel Policies document will be topics of discussion at the MSP meeting this Wednesday, March 5, 4:30 p.m., CC 162. AAUP's meeting will be held Monday, March 10, 7:30 p.m., CC 804.

When asked about his reaction to the unionization campaign, Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery replied, "It's really a decision the faculty has to make as to whether they wish to be represented by a union or continue in the same collegiate-governance structure. The role I envision the administration should play is to make sure the largest percentage of faculty participate in the decision, and to assist them in clarifying in their minds precisely what a collective bargaining agent could deliver for them."

Said Frank, "I don't expect virulent opposition from AAUP, but I do expect much opposition from the administration, though it will probably be subtle."

Frank feels the administration is against the faculty having collective bargaining rights because it would give faculty members too much freedom.

Both Frank and Beth agree that a union would give faculty the right to bargain with the administration over such issues as salary and promotion policies, working conditions, merit pay increases, teaching loads, etc.

WMUA: Free-form radio

WMUA, the highly reflective voice of the UMass, Five College, and surrounding communities broadcasts music, news, and various special presentations twenty hours each day from our studios at 42 Marston Hall. Our signal carries an effective radiated power of 1,000 watts, enabling us to reach an audience throughout the Central Connecticut Valley, stretching from Southern Vermont down through to Northern Connecticut. We are located at 91.1 on your FM stereo dial.

Our musical format is free-form and richly varied, covering all areas of the musical spectrum. Special musical programs include specific time slots for jazz, country western and blugrass, and soul. We present expanded news coverage throughout the day, employing national and local sources in preparation for newscasts. Alternative news presentations, such as the Sunday News Collective supplement our regulary scheduled newscasts. Coordination with the Public Affairs Dept. adds greater dimensions to the News coverage with documentary news productions featured.

Special programming includes daily Third World programs under the direction and sponsorship of the Black Mass Communications Project. Also, regular time slots on the air have been secured by Gaybreak, the Women's Show, a Hebrew music show, We the People, and a Prison show.

In addition, WMUA remains the voice of UMass sports, featuring live broadcasts of football, basketball, and hockey contests throughout the school year.

Our regular station membership includes upwards of sixty-five people. Meetings are held on alternating days every three weeks, and everyone is cordially invited to attend. No matter what your interest in media is, WMUA would like the opportunity to offer a fruitful, exciting, and educational experience. We welcome your interest and hope to see you soon. A humane approach

To the Editor:

Yes, Kyriakos, there is a Santa Claus; seeing him, however, depends a lot on how and where you look.

When I was about five years old, my father told me that life isn't fair. Now, at 26, I am beginning to learn how to live with the disbalance. Few individuals can do very much to change the main courses of countries, politics or students' minds. I have walked in peace marches, written congressmen and taught [at UMass, even!] so I'm not just talking air. It is heartbreaking to be powerless and something I struggle with daily...but...there are always other individuals.

My mother never had a college education, but she doesn't have to have a B.A. to see other people's needs. She has never espoused a great and showy cause, from what I know. Funny thing, though, she was up helping fishermen in Labrador and Newfoundland before we ever heard about liberated women. She has started school libraries and sent hundreds of books to colleges you never heard of in Appalachia. She has helped countless individuals I would not embarrass by naming. Yet, my parents live in the suburbs and do all sorts of blatantly materialistic things.

My husband is about to finish college after many years of struggle. Friday he's going to spend the day moving an old lady into another house, someone he doesn't even know, simply because the phone rang and he was there. No, he's not majoring in human services, but wildlife.

I won't tell you about myself, but if you drop by sometime I'll give you a list of people you might feel better for knowing. There's plenty of all kinds in the UMass world and the "real world", but one tends to see more unpleasant than good. Face it, you can't see people working in Belchertown State School, because it's not located by the campus pond. One generally isn't aware of people reading to the blind in a remote corner of the library.

This is an embarrassingly affluent society [or at least it has been] and much of the youth is ill with the ignorance and arrogance of soft living. But I can't let thoughts of "them" cripple me, because then, my only escape, my tiny ropes to individual needs, will be weakened beyond use.

You may choose to discount my words. After all, I'm a woman, and we all know what men think of women's brains. Generalizations are pretty odious, don't you think? I hope you saw Samuel Stuart's letter to the editor; I think he has covered other areas, which explain aspects I haven't time to cover. I'm a working girl now. After eight years of higher education, and a couple of degrees, I can type some. I even like it.

Not much success here in dollar signs and prestige. But it's not what you know, whom you know, or what you earn, but how you think and live with what you have, that is to me the truest and most precious fruit of knowledge. I can tell from your observations that you are not stupid at all. I hope that this comment will help you feel a little differently about life.

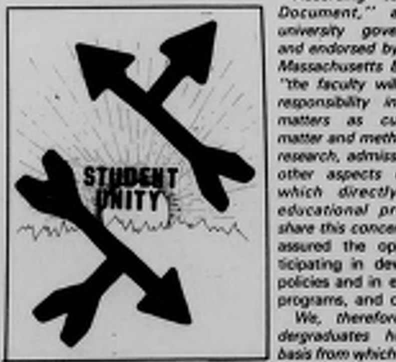
Journalists unite!

To the Editor:

As concerned students of the Journalistic Studies Department, we believe a more active participation by undergraduates in the departmental decision-making process would be beneficial to the growth and general well-being of Journalistic Studies.

Last year, Journalistic Studies, in conjunction with the English Department, decided to establish English as the sole track to a Journalism major. In response to the English department decision, we came together in a meeting sponsored by the Academic Affairs Committee, because we felt that undergraduates had not been effectively utilized in the course of reaching that decision.



According to the "Wellman Document," a statement on university governance approved and endorsed by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees, "the faculty will exercise primary responsibility in such academic matters as curriculum, subject matter and methods of instruction, research, admissions, libraries, and other aspects of University life which directly relate to the educational process. Students share this concern and they will be assured the opportunity of participating in developing academic policies and in evaluating degrees, programs, and courses."

There will be an organizational meeting for all undergraduate journalism students on Wednesday, March 5, at 7:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, 905. Discussion will revolve around issues brought up in the newsletter, along with any other ideas or problems we may have overlooked. This is an open invitation for you to become involved in the politics of your education.

Contention tilting tourney

The recent decision of the ECAC tournament selection committee to exclude UMass from its New England area tournament (as explained in yesterday's Collegian) smells of bad politics.

"They couldn't beat us on the basketball court so they went into the back room and took it away from our kids," said a disappointed Jack Leaman after he learned of the decision on Sunday night.

Leaman also advanced several other theories about the snub handed to UMass, including a media blackout, and a Worcester conspiracy between Ron Perry (Athletic Director at Holy Cross and a member of the committee) and Dee Rowe (presently UConn basketball coach and previously head coach at Worcester Academy.)

But whatever the reason, the decision made a travesty of the entire Eastern College Athletic Association set-up.

The Minutemen are, for the third straight year, Yankee Conference champions. Yet the ECAC decided not to invite the champ, but instead chose Connecticut, the team which finished in second place.

Over the last month, the Minutemen have the best record in New England, winning 12 or 14 games. Over that same stretch, Providence College, one of the teams invited, won only five of eleven. Going back even further, the Friars have lost nine of their last seventeen games.

In comparing overall records, UMass stands at 17-7, while Providence boasts a slate of 16-9.

Leaman explains, "Some guys who don't even know what New England basketball is all about make a decision that we're not good enough and there's no way they can justify it."

In light of the facts, we agree.

Action speaks for itself

To the Editor:

This is a letter that should not have to be written. But the Board of Governors should be held accountable for their action, or in this case, their inaction.

What is now two weeks ago, the BOG voted to reinstate Tony Tartaglia, "effective immediately," their own words. I am appealing to the people on the Board to wake up, to act effectively and in good faith. What good is this Board if all they can do is make paper, non-real decision? Is it effective policy for Board members to urge hasty action on vital decisions because they have a date waiting??

Must I remind the Board that the decision to reinstate Mr. Tartaglia is not a trivial point of order, but a decision that affects the financial and human welfare of Mr. Tartaglia and his child?

What Mr. Tartaglia seeks is merely the fair treatment by the Board and the management of the building he served for three years. It is agreed upon policy to inform an employee of the reasons of his termination of employment, yet Mr. Corker will not give his "reasons" because his lawyers advise him not to, leading me to wonder what "facts" he might have.

The Board of Governors are elected representatives of this student body, yet John Heys, longtime member of the BOG, is aware of this situation to have wondered aloud if the members have forgotten the students and their needs. Actions speak louder and more eloquently than words, John, and the answer screams at us, more loudly as each day passes.

Landlord's lament

By JAMES A. NOLLET

As when little boys who upon dying ascend into heaven in order to play a perpetual game of baseball, so too is there a niche in heaven for deceased landlords, or at least those who make it through the eye of the celestial needle. It is called landlord heaven. Landlord heaven is a landlord's prayer come true. Therein, he has a limited amount of housing available for a vast demand, commandments forbidding the creation of new apartments in the Mansion of the Father, and total freedom to charge whatever rent the market will bear.

Well, V.I. Lenin once promised us all a heaven on earth, and as far as the landlords of Amherst are concerned, it is here and is with us. Picture this: In 1970, Amherst had an apartment vacancy rate of 1.1 per cent, compared to a statewide (rural) rate of 6.9 per cent (U.S. Census figures). Since then, the ongoing growth of UMass has attracted the presence of 8,000 additional people, including students, professional staff, and "ancillary" service people. During the same time, the number of apartment units in Amherst grew by only 1,000 (these figures were obtained from "Rural Amherst has an Urban Problem" by Larry Magid.) And now, no new construction can occur at all, because the local sewage system is already being used to capacity and cannot bear an increase in utilization. With no rent control, Amherst's landlords truly have it made. The upper limits of their rates are determined only by rates charged by equally blessed competing landlords, and by the greater availability of slightly cheaper housing in more distant places. These figures are nothing new, and neither is the attendant story. Amherst has a housing problem.

There are three generalized approaches towards solving the problem, one long ranged, and two short ranged. The long ranged solution is simple and capitalist: Firstly, the student enrollment should be levelled off at its present number, in order to limit the demand on housing. I understand this is being done. Secondly, any problems preventing the construction of new apartments, such as sewage deficiencies, or zoning laws, should be solved expeditiously. Admittedly, this is easier said than done, but that is why the solution is long ranged. Then, construction of another 2,000 or so units should be considered. Capitalism, or The Law of Supply and Demand, works best when there is an oversurplus of "supply" and a corresponding undersurplus of "demand," and given a static university population, such a scheme could not fail to produce fairer prices than those now available. To be sure, the vacancy rate in Amherst itself might not decline — people like to be close to the place of their business — but it sure would in outlying communities, and the oversupply would have to affect the rates in Amherst itself.

One short range solution is rent control, which I'll discuss next time. The other short range solution is really not a solution as such, but a stop gap to keep the situation from getting any worse than it is. It is the mandatory dormitory policy without which, it should be agreed, the dormitories could not be filled. If this happened, the demand for off-campus lodging would necessarily rise.

As everyone knows, the University is considering abandoning the present policy in favor of a universal dorm fee, which everyone would pay regardless of where they chose to stay. It would be but another in a series of existing fees, to which all are objected in turn by someone or another. But I pay the bills without complaint. And why? Because I am not bound to attend this institution, and am therefore not bound to pay any of its fees. If the product which I am receiving is worth the additional expenditure of personal funds — and obviously it is, or I wouldn't be here — why then I make such payments in a spartan manner.

There have been some pretty large sums considered for the universal dorm fee. I have heard estimates as high as $275. Now, given the argument in the preceding paragraph, one might expect myself to be in accord with anything, even $275. But such a large sum would be discriminatory against the commuter, and is unnecessary.

A more general interpretation of the argument was given the other day in a letter to the Collegian by a Mr. J. M. van Tol who said, "....in being admitted to the University, we thereby agree to abide by the quasi-contract that requires the obeying of University regulations...." In other words, if someone is informed that the price of admission to the University is residence in University housing and he accepts admission, hasn't he forfeited any right to cavil about mandatory residence? I agree with Mr. van Tol in this regard, and incidently hope that the students engaged in the lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of mandatory dormitory residence lose their case.

Oil depletion

By GREG WILSON

Last week the U.S. House of Representatives showed a willingness to emerge from the doldrums of political conservatism that has plagued their chamber for decades. By an overwhelming majority they voted to attach a clause repealing the Oil Depletion Allowance to a bill providing 21.3 billion dollars in tax relief to the nation's taxpayers. This is the first time a move to close oil industry tax loopholes has received more than plain rhetoric in its favor.

The average American has subsidized the oil and gas industry for more than fifty years. Not only through the purchase of gasoline and home heating fuel at inflated prices, but also with the so called "oil depletion allowance." Basically it is a tax incentive first given to the oil companies to stimulate domestic production. When it originated in the 1920's there was a reasonable case in its favor.

At that time there was a fear of oil shortages. Yes, this nation has also experienced oil scares in the past. Congress believed that providing a tax incentive to the companies would spur them into further exploration and development.

Secondly there had been a problem with the arbitrary value put on a well by the I.R.S. The oil companies felt they were being unfairly taxed for "capital goods" slowly depleting.

So Congress instituted the Oil Depletion Allowance. Just how does the allowance work? The logic is that the value of a well drops each year as more oil is pumped out until when the last drop is gone it is worthless. In the manufacturing world the capitalist faces a similar problem. They are allowed to deduct the depreciation of machinery used in the production process from their income before taxation. Thus the Congress, with a certain amount of prodding from the oil companies' lobby, instituted a method so they too could benefit from a tax loophole. By claiming a depreciation for the amount of oil pumped they reduced their tax liability. They deduct 22 per cent of their gross income from their taxable income, a subsidy which in recent years has risen to 2.5 billion dollars.

But the logic of the twenties is absent in the seventies. The oil companies no longer need incentives to force them to increase domestic production and reserves. Their profits from a newly discovered well run into the millions of dollars and are more than enough to encourage them into further exploration and development. The depletion allowance benefits only one sector of the nation: the petroleum producers.

Indeed this move by the 93rd Congress is only a small step towards reducing these tax advantages. The time has come for the legislative branch to clamp down on this exploitation of its constituency. The system must be changed to increase the oil corporation's share in the tax burden and decrease the demand on the average citizen.

Ping-pong diplomacy

Two very interesting statements recently emerged from the White House, that has sent veteran observers into a scurry. For the fate of our nation has just been decided in a great contest reminiscent of Don Quixote taking on the Windmill. It was, like Ted White once remarked, as if the dragons were battling beneath the surface of the water and all we could see were the bubbles rising to the top.

In a statement released by the White House, President Ford announced that "without any question of a doubt" he would run in 1976. Speaking of the White House, he remarked that "we think that this is a great home, and Betty does not like to move very often." It was a statement designed not only to offend the furniture moving industry, but also potential opponents for the Republican nomination.

In another statement, Vice President Rockefeller remarked that, although he always wanted to be President, "I've got so much, what else could a man in my position hope for? But I have no prospects, no thoughts, no plans....I'm not a competitive factor with these bright rising stars."

The great battle had already taken place, and Gerald Ford stood victorious above the bleeding heaving form of his Vice President. It was truly a fight to the finish with national significance comparable to that solemn moment when the crazed emperor Caligula named his horse Consul.

What had precipitated the outburst, sources report, was when the President visited the FBI Library and looked up his file. To his chagrin and amazement, there was a complete compilation of embarrassing information including his I.Q., his bowling average, his "Romilar" addiction and the fact that he once played a battering ram in a High School play — sans helmet, of course.

He became further enraged, White House watchers learned, when he found out that the file was being kept for the personal use of Vice President Rockefeller. Although this came as no real surprise, since Rockefeller had long owned the Bureau, Ford knew that he had to take matters in hand. In a move reminiscent of Vito Corleone, the President challenged his personally appointed Veep to the "Battle of the Century", to decide who would run next year.

High White House sources disclosed that the President wanted to swim for it — across the Potomac and back. But the Vice President begged off claiming his age and the fact that he never learned to swim in water, only oil. Rockefeller then suggested that they play a game of Monopoly with the fate of the nation in the balance.

After many hours of haggling, the two finally decided on a no-holds-barred match of ping-pong, with Henry Kissinger as the line judge and referee. And so the three lumbered off to the Oval Office which had been cleared and prepared for the contest.

It was a solemn moment at the start of the match. After Rabbi Korff read the benediction, the President, sources claim, tried to get the psychological edge by bringing in Kate Smith to sing God Bless America. Rocky countered by offering Ford a stick of chewing gum, an offer the President refused, mumbling something about chewing and slamming at the same time.

The match then progressed, each player diving and ducking, twisting violently to produce the maximum slices and spins. Each volley lasted perhaps half an hour and each point was met with curses, head banging and vitriolic racket throwing, often aimed at the opponents' temple. Judge Kissinger flipped his head so often in following the flight of the ball that eventually he passed out and had to be replaced by his protege, the Shah of Iran.

After four days of vicious, sleepless competition, while the affairs of state were floundering in the balance, Ford emerged victorious by a mere two point margin, as one of his tremendous slams lodged in the larynx of the Vice President causing the latter to lose his already hoarse voice. It was a victory for Ford and noise-Pollution advocates.

Commuter Assembly candidate

To the Editor:

Commuter Assembly elections are being held Tuesday, March 4, and Wednesday, March 5, in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. I would like to inform commuting undergraduates of my candidacy and of the issues that I feel to be most important. Of top priority is the need for students to know what their Student Government is doing, and how their money is being spent. My other main concerns are:

1] What's going to happen with the Universal Fee? As it stands now, the commuters are going to get the bad end of the deal.

2] Continued maintenance of a good bussing service.

3] Day Care.

4] Tenant's Rights and Welfare Rights.

5] Advocacy for women and minorities.

I am presently a commuting undergraduate at UMass. I have had experience with the Poor Women's Task Force and the Public Relations Work Groups at Everywoman's Center, the Day Care Advisory Committee, UMass Women's Communications Network, and other areas of media such as WMUA and the Women's Media Project. This experience has given me some knowledge of how to deal with the Administration, and some expertise in publicity so that students can become better informed on what's happening with the issues that affect them.

If these are the issues that concern you, then I would appreciate your vote!

"Professionalism" and investigation

To the Editor:

It is with much concern that I view the recent action by the Campus Center Board of Governors. Is this not a board appointed by students to represent students?

The case in point is that of former Campus Center employee Tony Tartaglia. We have seen the board refuse to stand up for the rights of a student while trying to preserve the "professionalism" of Campus Center Director Mr. John Corker. How about Tony's professionalism; should not he be extended at least the same amount of consideration?

Now we see the board move to seek legal advise on the matter. Hopefully Tony will be reinstated immediately and also reimbursed for lost wages. I would also hope that the board initiates an immediate investigation into Mr. John Corker and his staff so that this type of assault on students will be discontinued.

To convey and to generate wisdom

To the Editor:

Samuel Stuart, in his letter of February 27, opined that Mr. Karoutsos' Commentary of the day before was anachronistic; Mr. Stuart suggests that we all are too busy seeking survival to implement the humanism Mr. Karoutsos pleaded for in his essay. While I can appreciate his articulation of the survival ethic, I find the utilitarianism that flowed from it appalling.

First, a historian cannot make energy out of the sun and an anthropologist cannot grow food in the desert [I know; I tried], granted. But the historian and the anthropologist can tell us what were the human implications of technological innovations in the past and warn us against repeating the same mistakes.

Second, the more intractable problems facing us now are human ones, not technological ones. For example, the distribution of wealth in America is a social, not a technological matter. Further, we have the technology to increase food production and the contraceptive technology to check population growth. But famine is sure to get worse in the developing countries, while population doubles there every 25 years.

Third, when Mr. Stuart writes, "...I'm not saying there are no [human] questions, only that you didn't show me any answers. While you're asking the questions, don't stand in the way of the scientists who'll answer them," he suggests that the scientists can ask and answer the human questions. No doubt; the "best and the brightest" systems analysts [read scientists] solved the Vietnam "problem" in 1964, and their recommendations became policy for two American presidents. But what were the questions they were asking? We know bloody well what the answers have been.

One of the primary goals of a liberal education is to convey and to generate wisdom [not just knowledge] about the relationship of science to human values; as students and faculty, we need to foster a climate that will permit us to ask questions, all kinds of questions — conservative, liberal, radical, even utilitarian — even questions that cannot be answered.

The media is the medium

To the Editor:

It seems like it has been an awful long time since people have heard the newr and felt really happy. These days the news run something like this: 1] Today the Phone Company announced it plans to lay off North America by May. 2] President Ford has revealed that he will give free skiing lessons to all members of Congress voting in favor of his energy proposals. 3] Saudi Arabia has made its 5th offer recently to buy the U.S. Air Force. 4] A bomb exploded in a Texas refinery today but sources declared that minimal oil losses were suffered. Also lost were a dozen or so humans which were easily replaced. 5] And in sports, Catfish Hefner recently has purchased the Oakland A's.

What effect does this have on the public? As one looks around, traces of mental depression are everywhere. And if anyone wonders just how depressing matters are, all they need to do is look at the statistics on sales of alcohol at the bars and package stores in the area. Next to the unemployment office, the package stores are the hottest business around. Full time cashiers have been showing traces of arthritis, I hear. On an average Friday night at Four Seasons several thousands of dollars worth of booze are sold.

If all the news does is depress people, why do we need the media? We need the media because now more than ever we must be aware of what is going on around us. The days of "ignorance is bliss" are over. For years big business, politicians, and the government ran amuck under our clogged up noses, but now we have caught our first big whiff. We can't lose the scent now.

If we are to really prosper again, everyone must care a little. This means caring about more than No. 1. If alcohol, cigarettes, and drugs were in the same boat as energy, I'm sure a hell of a lot more people would give a damn about helping matters. UMass would probably declare a national emergency. But reality can't be escaped forever. College just postpones it.

5x2 company to dance

The 5 x 2 Dance Company of Bruce Becker and Jane Kosminsky, hailed by critics as "masters of the modern dramatic form," will appear in concert at the UMass as part of the dance series sponsored by the University's Arts Council.

The performance will be tonight, March 4, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

A company of just two -- Bruce Becker and Jane Kosminsky --, each an acclaimed soloist, the 5 x 2 Dance Company has a repertory that reaches back to 40 years of modern dance masterpieces and forward to masterpieces of the future.

Some of the country's leading choreographers -- among them Twyla Tharp and Paul Taylor -- have given them permission to perform such works as Tharp's "Raggedy Dances" and Taylor's classic work, "Duet;" and Anna Sokolow and Lars Lubovitch have choreographed works for them.

Jane Kosminsky, whom Clive Barnes, writing in the "New York Times," called "dazzling," has appeared as soloist with the Norman Walker Company, the Paul Taylor Dance Company, the Martha Graham Repertory Company and the Washington Dancers in Repertory. Recently, Kosminsky was in Paris reconstructing Paul Taylor's ballet "Aureole" for Rudolf Nureyev, Merle Park, and the Paris Opera Ballet Company. She has been a member of the faculty of the Drama Division of the Juilliard School since 1971.

Bruce Becker, a dance award winner at New York's High School of Performing Arts, has appeared as soloist with the companies of May O'Donnell, Tamiris-Nagri and Norman Walker. As resident soloist with the Batsheva Dance Company of Israel, he mastered a multitude of important dance roles.

Noted for his imaginative versatility, he has appeared on Broadway in "Ben Franklin in Paris" and "Pickwick." He has choreographed for such performers as Chita Rivers, Gave Dell, Eileen Brennan, and Anna Maria Alberghetti. Mr. Becker has taught at the High School of Performing Arts and Utah State University, and recently received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts to choreograph a new work.

Tickets are on sale at the University's Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202, and are priced at $4 and $3 for the general public; half-price for UMass-Amherst students. Special group rates may be arranged.

Watergate prosecuter to speak on corruption

Attorney Richard Ben-Veniste, a major prosecuting attorney of the Watergate Seven cover-up trials and head of the Watergate Task Force under Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski, will speak at Western New England College today, March 4, at 8 p.m. His lecture in Sleith Hall is part of a series of programs sponsored by the Student Bar Association of the Western New England College School of Law.

The speech will cover Ben-Veniste's experiences prosecuting cases of "white collar" corruption in government which he terms the most complex and fascinating to prosecute. Before playing an integral part in the Watergate drama, the aggressive, 31-year-old graduate of Columbia Law School had already carved a brilliant career establishing his reputation in the bribery trial of Martin Sweig, former administrative assistant to ex-Speaker of the House, John McCormack. The trial resulted in conviction of Sweig on all counts.

Ben-Veniste, who has been named by Time magazine as one of 200 rising American leaders of the future, has said he enjoys "deflating the balloon of hypocrisy in society" in his investigations of 'white collar' corruption; however, it is his belief that "the public does have a say, and if they express it, it does have an effect."

The lecture is open to the public.

Writers sought

In a search for new writing talent, the publisher of a new literary magazine will be on campus, today.

Robert G. Beiderman will be talking with writing students of Dr. Dario Politella in Machmer E-10 at 11:15 a.m. and in Bartlett 456 at 2:30 p.m.

Beiderman, publisher of Paper's, Inc., a magazine now in its fourth edition, is a 1968 UMass graduate and a former student of Dr. Politella.

"We are looking for good material from promising young writers," said Beiderman.

OH Third World center offers law colloquia

The Orchard Hill Third World center is currently sponsoring a one credit Social Studies colloquia. The class begins today, March 4 at 8:00 p.m. in Dickinson dorm, room 114 off from the rec room.

The course was put together by the staff of the Third World Center and members from the MARY Program.

The class format will be presented by a group of people working together to project an educated response to the prefabricated problems of our society such as the American Judicial process. Also involved in class participation will be the young men and women from the MARY Program, who are residents of Orchard Hill.

The course will address itself to the various American Judicial procedures, including Prison reform,

Law and the court systems,
Education,
Political implications, in Justice and the society's need to adjust to constant social dilemmas.

There will also be guest speakers on several occasions dealing with their specific involvement and its particular implication from their respective field of study (i.e., Education, courts, prisons, etc.) The course is still open for enrollment.

Food stamp claims

Because of poor attendance at last weeks group application session for old food stamp claims, the Welfare Department has scheduled group applications again this week in the Campus Center Auditorium, on March 5th and 6th (Tu. and Wed.) at 10-12 and 1:00-3:00.

All applicants that have waited over 30 days should have received written notification concerning the availability of the group application process and a scheduled day and time.

Only 20 some people took part in the program last week, and 400 persons remain on food stamp waiting lists at UMass. If the Welfare Department has failed to notify you of a time and date for group processing, you are advised to contact the Food Stamp Program Office in Munson Hall (545-0865).

Welfare is again requesting that applicants bring the proper prove of income and deductions, if they have not done so already.

Fall seminar on Dutch lit

Since it will be given in English, Dutch 268 permits a rare glimpse of an important literature which is generally ignored due to a language barrier. At the same time it provides a panoramic view of specific interests which we all share in our century.

These include a series of subtle psychological studies such as: the devastation of guilt (Couperus), the silent despair of common people (Coenen), a lethal madness resulting from constricting mores (Oudshoorn), to bitter sallies against the business mentality (Elsschot).

The course will be given this fall in a once-in-a-week seminar fashion, in the later afternoon or early evening.

Limited to 25 students, those who are interested are urged to contact Professor E. M. Beekman in 522 Herter Hall; telephone 5-0316.

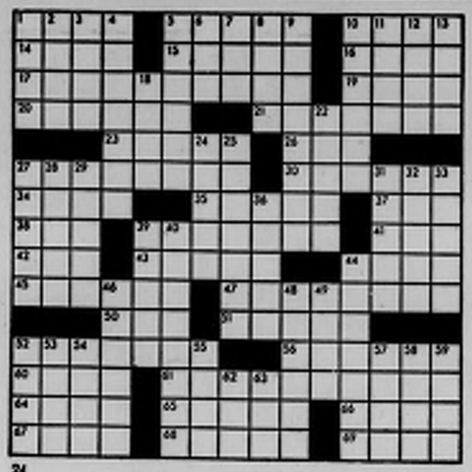
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved



Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, MARCH 4 — Born today, you possess a kindly, compassionate nature. For the most part others, whether or not they know you well, consider you a pleasant person to be around. You make few demands on people and certainly no more than you would make upon yourself under similar circumstances, yet at the same time you inspire those with whom you work to do their very best to please you. You always set the example of an honest effort to exchange for an honest reward — even though there are times when, like anyone else, you would rather loaf.

A highly diplomatic individual, you know how to get what you want from others without having them feel that you are taking advantage of them — even if you are. You know how to criticize without hurting, how to compliment without seeming to fawn, how to flatter without appearing to [illegible]. You have an advantageous [illegible] at times take [illegible] tances or [illegible] which you would have preferred to [illegible] would not openly say so.

A curious, inquisitive person, you are fortunate in possessing a highly perceptive mind which not only observes but also grasps, holds, stores, and ultimately puts to good use all that it observes. Always professional in your manner, you strike others as dependable, for you give off an air of certainty and self-confidence as few others manage to do.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

YanCon goes to Europe

Gridders to play overseas

By BILL ELIAS

The UMass varsity football team may be playing in Europe this spring. The Minutemen, along with the five other Yankee Conference teams, will be leaving late in May for a three week season in Rome, Venice, West Berlin, Istanbul, Barcelona, and Munich. Each Yankee Conference team will represent a city, playing three games with the possibility of a championship game.

The program was initiated by Robert Kap, head of the Intercontinental Football League of Dallas and Vienna, Austria. Kap, who hopes to familiarize the European people with American style football, is handling the finances for the whole affair.

If successful, Kap will attempt to start a new professional football league in Europe under his guidance. A native of Hungary, Kap originally approached the National Football League with his proposal hoping to attract teams of rookies and free agents.

Problems emerged because of the players strike, and finding coaches so Kap looked to the colleges. The Yankee Conference was the perfect selection since it has six teams and Kap, six cities.

After getting State Department approval the plan went to the Yankee Conference Presidents and Athletic Directors who also sanctioned it.

UMass officials in Boyden acknowledged the European Football Cultural Exchange Program saying "at present all systems are go." Caution is being taken, however, until the money backing the trip is in the bank.

Player reaction to the possibility of three weeks all expenses paid in Europe ranged from "it ought to be wild" to "I guess we'll have to start working out harder."

There are plans for televising many of the games throughout Europe, with a chance for coverage from ABC's Wide World of Sports.

UMass Senior is BBall "Superfan"

By STEVE TETREAULT

Gary Jakacky made his last Cage appearance last Friday night.

Although not as familiar as basketball seniors John Murphy, Jim Burke, Greg Duarte, and Bill Endicott, Gary Jakacky has been a fixture at the Cage for the past four years.

Starting with St. Anselm's in 1970, the Grayson resident estimates to have seen between 35 to 40 games as a UMass student. "I've only missed two games at the Cage," he said, "URI as a freshman and UConn as a sophomore, and both of these games occurred on nights when I had debate meets.

But I quit debate my junior year, and haven't missed a home game since."

Jakacky shows up early for games, often around five o'clock, and earlier for big games. "During my freshman year, I went to the Cage at 3:30 for a Providence game and the line was at Herter," he said.

He has sat in the same seat since sophomore year, in the top row of the student section in front of the main balcony entrance. "I can see everything from up top. People all around me are clapping, and I feel more in control of the situation."

Jakacky's academic schedule is built around basketball season. "In the fall, I do all my schoolwork before December, because I know nothing is going to get done during the season. In the spring, most of my work is put off until March."

During the season, the senior, who is a self-admitted frustrated jock, psyches himself up weeks in advance for games. "I was up for the Boston College game since last year. Usually I pick out one or two players on an opposing team and just hate them, but I hated the whole BC team."

Jakacky's hate list has included Providence's Marvin Barnes, Harvard's Tony Jenkins, Holy Cross' Mike Vicens, and BC's Paul Berwanger.

"I'm also easily excitable," he says. "While other people just clap, I tend to scream. I have come to identify very strongly with the team. It seems I go through the same emotional trials and tribulations as they do." Jakacky almost got into a fight with a Holy Cross JV player when he started screaming out "Bring back Kevin Stacom" at this year's game. Stacom transferred from the Cross to Providence at the end of his sophomore year.

Jakacky will graduate in June with a degree in Environmental Geology, and hopes to go on to grad school.

IM Redlights stop hookers

In fairness to the women on this campus who also read the sports page, this weeks intramural story is on woman's basketball.

So, Tuesday night it was down to Boyden Gym for a story.

At center stage: the Hookers and the Redlites (this was a coincidence by the way, even though the two do go hand in hand in the real world). Back to the game.

The Redlites from J.Q.A. started the game off fast, which looks to be their style of play, and took advantage of the somewhat inexperienced Leech team. With a tenacious two-one-two defense, the Hookers had a hard time moving the ball inside for a good shot. Time and time again, the Redlites forced turnovers, and intercepted passes.

J.Q.A. ran up an 8-0 lead, before the Leechettes got two points on the board. But the big-D went into effect again, and stifled the Hookers for the rest of the half.

In fact, the Redlites continued their dominating role through the second half also, again allowing only a single basket to their opponents, while scoring only eight points themselves.

Leech did play better in the second half, but Lady Luck must've been back at the dorm sleeping. Their defense picked some, but the offense was still non-existent.

In the end, the Redlites had their fourth victory, and stayed undefeated, while Leech drops to 1-3.

The final score was 22-4.

Down Court....The Redlites are mostly all from Framingham, and played high school basketball, if that has anything to do with the lopsided score. They didn't all play at the same time there, that is, they didn't play together until they got here. They're looking forward to the playoffs, which start in two weeks. Leech had lost some of its best players due to scheduling. Kathy and Karen Biggs (non-look-alike twins) scored 14 of J.Q.A.'s points. Next week...the Crabtree Trees...Hey, I hope this story was more interesting than my first two. If it wasn't remember, I didn't force you to read this. Can't be perfect all the time...

Woman skiers place second, third at meet

By WAYNE BEDELL

The women's ski team raced last weekend at Tenny Mountain in Plymouth, New Hampshire. Although they did not end up as the victors, the team finished a strong second on Saturday and third on Sunday.

The two giant slalom courses were icy but there were no bare spots and the runs held up well. Sunday's course was extremely tough and five out of the seven skiers fell, causing UMass to finish 15 seconds behind first place Boston University.

On Saturday the team was more consistent, with all five "A" racers and the two "B" racers finishing in the top twenty. Ann Delaney, Jean Hayden, and Beth Curtain participated in a strong supporting role.

On the whole, the individual performances were the most promising thing of the weekend. On Saturday Cathy Donovan and Kathy Clarke finished fourth and fifth respectively. Martha Moran continued her team-leading performance with a third on Saturday and a first place on Sunday. Martha has been the number one racer all season long and being a freshwomen, she has a bright future ahead of her. Chris Pesek, who fell Saturday, finished fourth on Sunday.

Next weekend is the last regular seven team meet. It will be held at Mittersill, in Franconia, N.H. The champions league will be announced that Sunday night, but things look bleak for the women. First place is literally all sewn up by B.U. However, UMass and Radcliffe will vie for second place and this is the ring that will be up for grabs next weekend.

The last race of the season will be the Can-Ams on the weekend of the 15th and 16th at Sunday River, Me. The Can-Ams will host four Canadian and four American teams and many of the skiers will be getting their first taste of international competition.

UM must play if ECAC pick

Plans for a would-be boycott of the ECAC tournament by UMass were scrapped yesterday, when a written document, binding UMass to a tournament appearance if invited, was discovered.

"If they invite us, we have to play," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "If we decline, then we are not eligible to play in any other tournaments."

On Sunday, Leaman was quoted as saying that he would ask his team to turn down an invitation if it were forthcoming.

The ECAC selection committee Sunday issued bids to Holy Cross, Boston College, and Connecticut, and announced that Providence College would be invited if they defeated St. Bonaventure in a game that was played last night.

If Providence lost, then UMass was to have been invited to the tournament, which opens Thursday night in Springfield.

Bitter UM in Maine

By STEVE DECOSTA

A bitterly disappointed band of Minutemen travel to Orono tonight to try and salvage something out of what has so far been a wasted season.

Providence College's victory over St. Bonaventure last night sealed the UMass fate. The Friars now advance to the ECAC tournament, while UMass must take its chances with the NIT. The selection committee for the Madison Square Garden classic meets to issue its initial bids this Thursday.

A win tonight would give the Minutemen their third consecutive Yankee Conference championship, a small consolation in light of the ECAC choices.

In a previous meeting at the Cage, UMass waltzed to an 85-49 victory over the Black Bears.

Maine currently is mired in the YanCon basement, despite the presence of leading scorer and rebounder Bob Warner.

The Minutemen did a job on Warner in that first game, holding him to only 11 points and blocking four of his short jumpers.

Coach Jack Leaman will probably field the same line-up that has started the last two games, going with the four seniors and Jim Town.

Greg Duarte has been the team's hottest player of late, scoring 54 points in his last three contests.

The Minutemen's full-court trap defense has also been a factor in recent wins. UMass has opened the last two games in the pressure defense, and has gotten off to commanding leads before the opposition could adjust.

The Minutemen should not lack incentive in tonight's encounter. In addition to winning the conference crown, UMass will be trying to show the ECAC that its tournament selections were a mistake.

TICKLING THE TWINE — Tonight's game is the third in five days for UMass, a tough stretch in which the Minutemen have spent no less than 12 hours on a bus.

Providence - 82
St. Bonaventure - 69

To say that Mike Pyatt can leap is an understatement. The disappointed hoopsters will have to be content with the YanCon crown and possible NIT bid, which are extended Thursday.

Win two of last three

UM rally tops Smith

By GREG LEVINS

The UMass Minutewoman fought off an inspired Smith College five last night to post their second victory in their last three outings. Previously UMass had defeated Fitchburg State Thursday night before bowing to Southern Conn. Saturday afternoon at Nope.

Thursday night the Minutewomen, led by the timely shooting of Nancy O'Neil, Nancy Barry and Chris Basile doubled their halftime lead to emerge with a 68-58 win. O'Neil and Barry tossed in 15 points each while Basile added 14.

Southern Connecticut, one of the leading contenders for post season action, brought their highly skilled squad to Nope. Paced by the performances of their two All-American candidates, Lynn Pagnesi (15 pts) and Mary Ann O'Conner (14 pts), they trounced UMass 84-60. UMass suffered through a very poor first half, managing only 19 points opposite 42 for S.C. However, Carol Albert's poised five came up with a stupendous second stanza pouring in 41 points but it just wasn't enough.

UMass' pair of super sophomore forwards Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile were the game's high scorers with 23 and 21 points respectively.

Last night at Smith, UMass returned to their winning ways, defeating the homesters 68-45. Although they won the contest by an impressive 23 point spread, the game wasn't decided until the final 10 minutes. At the mid-May mark of the second half the score was knotted 41-41. UMass responded, however, by outscoring Smith 27-4 during the stretch. Lu Ann Fletcher led all scorers with 21 big points. Nancy O'Neil canned eight points in the second half and finished with 12. Kathy O'Maley of Smith was the most impressive player on the court, throwing in 16 points, mainly on outside shots. Sue Bogle and Sue Molz each chipped in with 10.

Wednesday night UMass ends its regular season, traveling to Northeastern for a make-up game.

Woman Hoopster Nancy O'Neil shoots over opponent. O'Neil contributed 11 points last night, as the woman's basketball team rallied by Northampton rival Smith, 68-45.

Hockey: Puck didn't bounce

By DAVE EIBEL

A year ago at this time the UMass skaters were about to embark for Burlington, Vermont for their Division Two semi-final game with the University of Vermont Catamounts. But although Umass lost the game, 4-3 the players, fans, and coaches must have come away with the feeling that the team had shown the fabric of a potential championship team and given another year Umass would challenge for the title.

Sadly 1974-75 will not bring a hockey title to this campus as the Minutemen missed the Division Two playoffs for the first time in five years.

"We encountered problems that weren't really resolved early enough," said Coach Jack Canniff in explaining some of the reasons why the team did not qualify for postseason competition.

Chief among the problems the team encountered was the difficulty Canniff had in choosing a number one netminder at the outset of the season. Canniff started the season against New England College with Bruce Gledhill, a junior, between the pipes, but before long sophomore Dana Redmond won a clearcut victory for the goalie position, while sophomore John Riley saw limited action.

"It was the first time I went into the season without knowing who would be my number one goalie. There's no doubt in my mind that if I had made the decision who to make number one earlier we would have made the playoffs" said Canniff in retrospect.

Injuries can always be a factor in a team's performance and in the case of UMass there were some that could have made the difference this season. Scott McChesney, a pepperpot winger, broke his leg in the fourth game of the year at Williams and didn't return until February 12th against UConn when he scored a hat trick.

Defenseman [illegible] missed several games due to an ankle injury, forcing Canniff to insert Kevin Connors, who started the year at center, on the blueline.

Dana Redmond got hurt during practice the day before the last minute loss to Boston State on February [illegible], and his absence definitely hurt UMass, although Bruce Gledhill performed as well as could be expected in place of Redmond.

The injury that may have hurt the most came against Vermont February [illegible] at Orr Rink when Billy Harris, the junior center, ruptured his spleen falling into the boards. At that time his line with Scotty Stuart and Jim Cable on the wings had been hot. Harris' injury definitely hurt. Since Harris had been a key penalty killer and had centered the powerplay there can be no doubt that his absence was costly. Happily he will be back next year.

Sports analysis

There were several bright spots for the skaters, especially Redmond's scintillating play in goal.

"He was the second sophomore I had as my number one goalie," said Canniff. "The first was P.J. Flaherty and the reason he started was because I recruited him myself. I'm sure in regards to Dana that he has two outstanding years left," he added.

The freshman line of Chris Landry centering twins Billy and Bobby White turned into an explosive combination. Landry, the smooth skating brother of Salem State's all-American Rick Landry led the team in goals with 17, while the Whites proved superb in the corners.

"It was a big order to put three freshmen out there and expect them to perform, but they did the job," said Coach Canniff.

Probably the number one recruiting objective will be to find a tough defenseman who can keep the slot clear of enemy skaters. Many of the problems of this year's club came from the fact that the UMass defensemen couldn't move opposing forwards out from in front of the net.

"We could certainly use a thumper", said Canniff. "You got to have one like that to win."

The junior varsity team will be able to provide the varsity with several good players next year. Bill Flynn, Steve Shults, and Joe Wiles all saw action with the varsity in '74-'75 and that should make it a little easier to stick with the "big team" next year.

Looking back to the game or games that hurt the playoff chances of the Minutemen is a cinch. The key loss came way back on December 3rd when the Canniffmen dropped a 6-5 decision to Williams College in a game they led 5-3 with a minute and a half to go. They also dropped a 4-3 decision to Norwich at home after leading 3-0 and a 5-4 game to Hamilton after they had led most of the way.

"The Norwich and Hamilton games were at home and that's where you expect to hold onto leads and win games," moaned Canniff. "You could take back any of those three games and give us a win and we'd have been a hair's breadth away from getting into the playoffs."

However, with a nucleus of youth and a scope of experience UMass should be a contender next year. The most important position is solid, according to Coach Canniff, with Redmond in goal, and that fact bodes well for '75-'76.

Food Service purchasing without bids

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

The UMass Food Services has been purchasing produce since September from a Boston-area supplier without first seeking competitive bids from other companies, a possible violation of a state law requiring competitive bidding on all state agency purchases.

Food Services has confirmed that they have been purchasing fresh fruits and vegetables from Lowell Brothers Bailey in Chelsea, based on an agreement that guarantees the firm a 15 per cent profit on its produce sales to UMass, approximately $2000 a week.

Arthur Warren director of Food Services decided to withdraw UMass produce purchases from open bidding in an effort to improve the quality of foods served in the Dining Commons. According to Warren, UMass was receiving a lot of garbage, because the suppliers, in trying to win the bid were forced to hold their prices low, and could not offer high quality produce.

The arrangement with Lowell Brothers & Bailey is a one year experiment, according to Warren.

Daniel Melley, director of UMass Public Affairs, said that Food Services had made "a guesstimate" that by purchasing produce on a one-year basis on the Boston market, the result would be quality produce at a lower cost per portion.

The Massachusetts General Laws provide that all state purchases over $500 "shall, wherever practicable, invite competitive bids." The money being spent, according to Melley is student money from the trust fund, and not subject to this law.

The purchasing agreement came to light when Pinecrest Frozen Food and Produce, a supplier in Springfield who had been submitting bids for the past 15 years asked why bids were no longer being accepted.

Timothy O'Leary, UMass Assistant Counsel, chose not to comment on the situation, as he "was not familiar with it."

Allen scores HEW policies

By BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporter

Former School of Education Dean Dwight W. Allen yesterday acknowledged that he may have stepped on too many academic toes in his quest for educational change, and criticized HEW funding policies which he said encourage misuse of grants.

"One of the things I've been doing a lot of thinking about is the process of change," Allen said in a two-hour Collegian interview yesterday afternoon on campus. "If we had been able to achieve some of the changes with less abrasion, I would have been happier."

Allen, who resigned as dean Jan. 29 the day before the University acknowledged allegations of funds misuse at the School he headed for six years, was back in Amherst briefly from Lesotho, Africa, where he is on sabbatical leave.

In a wide-ranging interview which touched on both the educational achievements and fiscal excesses of the School, Allen made these points:

— Agreed that one faculty member at the School "may have had his hand in the till" but funds misuse was not widespread.

— Said he delegated much of his responsibilities to assistant deans, and as a result they were free to abuse the freedom.

— Charged that the School of Education costs less per student than two other campus departments and said other departments are administered "just as sloppily."

"In many ways the current HEW procedures cause waste of money," Allen said sitting in the Hills House office of a campus associate. "Often times grants will encourage you to be devious in order to accomplish straight forward things."

"Come the end of the year, you have to spend money just to get rid of it because they will take it back if you don't," he said grants should be awarded for more flexible periods of time.

He also said policies which allow lease of equipment instead of purchase, "encourage you to spend more money to get something done than necessary."

Allen criticized traditional academic programs saying "meaningless processes" in education were replaced with relevant ones in the School.

"The school, in seeking to have alternative standards, has been quoted as having no standards at all. This is false.

"The suffering process, the right of initiation, the putting students through the processes — that much I am very much against.

On funds misuse, Allen said some associates made mistakes, thinking they were copying his own "flexible" way of using grant funds. "What I always said to the assistant dean for administration is 'I don't want you to ever sign a statement that you can't justify or can't see the light of day.'"

Bob H. Suzuki, assistant dean for administration at the School, resigned last November after submitting a written list of allegations about funds misuse which triggered the current probes.

On funding, Allen said the cost of educating an average School of Ed student is $600, compared to $1,400 in business and $2,500 in engineering for an equivalent period on campus.

Gary N. Powell a former member of a committee supposed to work on alternatives to mandatory dorm residency claims the task was impossible from the outset.

Powell claims no voluntary dorm alternatives existed

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

There never were any reasonable alternatives to the proposed mandatory dorm residence, a member of a committee charged to find one, said yesterday.

Gary N. Powell, a former member of a committee-task force designated to work on alternatives to the voluntary dorm policy said the task was impossible from the outset of the study.

"I saw it as a year long study if we were going to live up to what we were asked to do. I also feel that if such a study were to be done, there should be student representation," said Powell.

Powell was asked by Warren Gulko, UMass Budget Director to join a committee to investigate implementing voluntary dorm residency and meal tickets for the Fall '75 semester. The six member committee was given one month to come up with alternatives, not recommendations.

Powell withdrew from the task force during its third week, due to its interference with his work (he is a research assistant working on a doctorate in Business Administration) and also because he felt the task could not be accomplished satisfactorily. Asked why he did not resign from the committee earlier, Powell said he stayed with it because he felt it was his job. Powell was supposed to work on the committee full-time, which in his case was 20 hours a week.

According to Powell, up until the time of his withdrawal, alternatives were under consideration to be submitted in the confidential report near the end of January.

Profile

The alternatives were approached from two angles, to either decrease costs, or increase revenues. To decrease costs:

— Less services. This would involve providing fewer services to students in the residential areas, possibly cutting down on the number of counselors and other student services.

— "Efficiency savings". This could involve cutting down on personnel and requiring more work of fewer people.

To increase revenues:

— Ask for more State subsidies

— Make extra use of existing facilities, i.e. bringing in more conferences to the University, perhaps in the summer.

— Universal Resource Fee — asking all students for a standardized fee to cover extra costs.

— Shift funds from one area to another, possibly by using new accounting procedures, etc.

— Bring in outside interests to campus, such as having the Dining Commons run by a separate concern, instead of having it run by the University as it is currently.

The committee made no recommendations, only suggested alternatives, Powell said. "We carefully avoided making conclusions, we weren't told to develop the one best way, but develop a range of alternatives," he added.

Powell said he felt the alternatives were initially arranged, then identified as to the degree of difficulty there would be in implementing them. The emphasis was placed on financial aspects, fixed costs and variables in the financial set-up of the dorms and Dining Commons. Then, the different fees that could be charged to students were considered.

Asked if he knew how the Universal Fee was decided upon as an alternative to use in the advent

Ford vetoes bill to suspend $3 oil tariff

Suspends $2 hike in compromise move

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In a compromise gesture to Congress, President Ford yesterday suspended for 60 days most of his controversial increase in oil import fees.

But he vetoed a bill that would have suspended his entire $3-a-barrel oil fee increase for 90 days, and urged the lawmakers to enact an anti-recession income tax cut by April 1 and a national energy conservation program by May 1.

Prisoners describe RI 'bastille'

Site of rebellion by inmates last week

CRANSTON, R.I. (UPI) — The Adult Correctional Institutions has been described as a "bastille" by Gov. Philip W. Noel. The inmates who live inside the bleak gray walls of the century old facility were warned by Noel last week to keep in line or they would be getting their "lumps and bumps."

"Before he give 'em lumps and bumps he better give them some clothes to wear," said inmate Romeo Gabriele, President of the National Prisoners Reform Association.

Gabriele and several other inmates were allowed to give a news conference Monday within the walls of the maximum security section and the over-riding themes of their complaints were idleness and inexperienced guards.

The news conference was held in the carpeted prison library, the only room with a semblence of cheerfulness. To get to the library the two dozen reporters and cameramen were led through a maze of barred doors and a south wing cellblock where inmates are allowed to roam freely during the day.

A stench of urine prevailed.

Most of the inmates are young, the average age 26, and a great proportion are "graduates" of the Boy's Training School. Inmates in the cell block talked freely with the reporters and some helped television cameramen carry their equipment.

"It's idleness from the moment a man wakes up," said inmate Donald Brant. "There's nothing in here for a man to do that will help him regain his dignity, preserve his self respect."

Inmates complain many of the jobs they used to do have been taken over by state employes because of union grievances. ACI inmates used to do laundry for all state institutions.

"We used to have a garment shop that employed 40 people. They took that away from us and it went to private industry," Gabriele said.

"We had farm gangs here, with one of the best herds around. That gave us milk and as a result we had a butcher shop, and that was all taken away from us. This is one of the major reasons for the unrest in the institution," he said.

In the maximum security, he said only 53 inmakes are working out of a population of 380.

The NPRA recently filed a $26 million suit in U.S. District Court claiming the state is legally bound to provide vocational, educational and other rehabilinative programs.

"Whether Governor Noel likes it or not every prisoner here is supposed to be in a rehabilitative program. From the moment a person steps in here he is programmed to be a failure," Brant said.

The inmates complained that the guards working in maximum security are the least experienced. "The officers are frustrated. They are set up as our foes. It's a very unhealthy situation. When we go to them for help or they talk to us they are told not to go that far," Brant said.

Sonny Pailin, acting president of the inmate Afro-American Society, called for more black officers. He said there are no overt signs of racism against black inmates by white guards, but said certain guards "develop hostile attitudes towards certain inmates."

"Justice is not evenly distributed," he said.

Referring to peaceful disturbances last week, Pailin said he felt the black inmates had a legitimate grievance. A black inmate who had a fistfight with a white inmate was placed in segregation and the white inmate was not.

The inmates called for meetings with Warden James Mullen and acting Corrections Director Donald Taylor to work out their differences in an "orderly manner."

"The time has come for us to sit down and talk to each other as men, not as animal trainer to the beast in his circus cage," Gabriele said.

On the way out a young inmate wearing a denim suit and serving time for receiving stolen goods helped a television cameraman carrying some of his equipment. "Can I help him put the stuff in his car," the inmate jokingly asked a guard. "Fat chance," the guard said.

Reagan hits Ford liberalism

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Ronald Reagan criticized President Ford yesterday for making too many liberal appointments in his administration and said Ford should not take conservative support for granted.

The former California GOP governor, describing his political plans as "fluid," also indicated that Ford's bid for the GOP presidential nomination next year could be vulnerable to challenges because Ford has never been approved by his party for national office.

In an interview with UPI, Reagan also expressed fears that congressional investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency could endanger the lives of American agents.

Reagan said he was "not pleased with the tenor" of Ford's three Cabinet appointments. "I do not believe a President should make appointments on the basis of trying to span a political spectrum," he said. "I think the President should make appointments of people who will implement his philosophy."

Reagan said he agreed that Ford "should not take conservative support for granted" in 1976 and supported an effort by Sen. James L. Buckley, R-N.Y., and other conservatives who have organized a new committee to influence administration and party policies.

Reagan said Ford was in a "historically unique position" in that he is an incumbent President never approved by his party or by the people.

Senators hope politics don't end here

"The student government got off on the wrong foot," said Cindy McGrath, the Senate Speaker. That first student group, she explained, should have demanded recognition in their own right, rather than "pleading" for it.

Asked if the present Senate effectively represents students, McGrath answered that one of the biggest problems in any government is communication with those it represents.

"It has to be a two-way street," she said, "which it very rarely is."

Notices and polls sent out from the Senate in attempts to elicit student feedback, said McGrath, do not get much response. However, this does not indicate that the students alone are at fault. There has to be "improvement on both ends" as she puts it.

"I'm trying to really push the Communications Committee," said McGrath. "We realize there is a gap, and we're trying to close it."

The Senate is currently opposing the proposed University resource fee. McGrath said that insofar as the Senate has not actually voted on the issue yet, she personally is "taking a stance against a fee in any form whatsoever." She said it is her perception "that there are a lot of middle administrators stepping on each other's toes" in trying to decide what action to take.

"If they cut that out," she continued, "the system would be much more efficient and it would save a lot of money which could then be put into other areas that need it."

The Rents and Fees Committee is trying to come up with a viable alternative, to the universal fee, said the Senate Speaker.

profile

"We should have something solidified within the next two weeks," she said.

For one thing, the Senate is requesting the Board of Trustees to institute a $10 application fee for undergraduates applying to the University, McGrath said. There are over 25,000 applicants a year.

"$10 isn't going to break anyone's back," she said, "whereas $250 would."

McGrath said the Senate's proposal "could be a big issue."

Savini found it hard to define a tangible goal for the Student Senate. He said the government is supposed to act as an advocate of student rights and welfare at the University, but specific goals are redefined each year with each new set of people forming the Senate.

"Our power is extremely limited," said Savini. "We are not legislative." Although the Student Senate is defined as the primary legislative body of the SGA, Savini sees its involvement in what he calls an "advocacy relationship" with little power in actual legislature.

"There is a significant difference," he explained, adding that the difference is not usually "visible from the outside."

Savini spoke of the Campus Center Board of Governors as being under "subtle but direct attack" by the University administration. The Senate is "fighting back—again subtly," he said, explaining that he plans to call a meeting of all the student community leadership in the near future.

"Our only strength is in numbers," said Savini. He noted that administration personnel is, of course, full-time, while students can devote only part of their time to the problems on campus.

'Programs for Families'

North Village offers program

By NANCY [illegible]
Staff Reporter

In September 19[illegible], the Health Education Division of the University Health Services received a grant for the development of peer sex education programs in communities other than dormitories. Three teams emerged. They are concerned with the Third World community, Greeks, and off-campus students.

North Village apartments which is primarily for married students was chosen for the off-campus team, because it is owned and managed by the University. Since then, an extensive range of programs have been offered, including lectures by Health Services staff, a sexuality workshop, a women's support group, and workshops on vocations and family planning.

However, the PSE grant funds run out at the end of the semester. If Programs for Families can't find new funds, it will be forced to discontinue. It is hoped that the money can be received from the University.

Dr. Thomas Wolff, a psychologist at Mental Health, is the team consultant. The North Village team consists of nine tenants that receive approximately $[illegible] a semester. "They are bright, energetic, and competent," Wolff said.

It has been extremely difficult to continue any program on a regular basis as there is no place available for persons to gather. Meetings have to be held in homes, resulting in limited space.

Wolff explained that he helped to draw up the PSE grant initially and that he was concerned about the lack of service extended to off-campus students.

Of the students in North Village, Wolff said, "They're under a great amount of stress – they don't have it very easy. Money is incredibly tight."

He described the Program as operating on a preventive developmental model, where "a population under stress is provided with preventive and developmental programming, so problems do not occur but growth does."

"The University is very inconsistent in their policy," said Susan Mackey, team member of the Program, living with her husband and child in the Village. Mackey said that the University first establishes off-campus residences for married students, but then makes no provisions.

"We really don't have any facilities here," agreed Alex Mackey, her husband, who also works for Programs for Families. "There is no playground or equipment for the children," he added.

"You have to understand the context of life there," Wolff explained. "These are young families with kids. Both parents are always busy – they have incredible commitments."

Wolff estimated that the Program has already reached between [illegible] and [illegible] residents, out of [illegible] apartment units.

Nancy Williams, another team member from North Village, said that most of the residents know about the Program, "but they don't understand it." She said that the subject matter of the programs at first mainly centered around sexuality, which "frightened some people off."

One of the biggest problems is child care. Mrs. Williams said that many more women would become involved if they could find someone to care for their children. North Village does have a Day Care Center, but openings are limited to 28 children. Mrs. Mackey reported that there are approximately 150 kids in the Village.

"I really think the Program should continue," said Mrs. Mackey, adding that it should be expanded to the other two off-campus married student areas – University Apartments and Lincoln Apartments.

Currently, an Infant Play Group sponsored by Programs for Families meets at Skinner Hall on campus, and there is an on-going women's support group run by Nancy Williams. A parents' discussion group is an addition to the Program. A newsletter called the "[illegible]" (Programs for Families flyer) is issued throughout North Village to inform tenants of the planned schedule of services.

The Graduate Senate has provided $[illegible] for programming and the Mental Health and Health Education departments contribute to staffing for the lecture series that is offered at the Village.

ROTC scholarship awarded to two UM sophomore roommates

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Not only is it a coincidence the annual [illegible] Air Force ROTC navigation scholarship was awarded to two UMass sophomores in the same detachment, but also both are roommates in James House, Southwest.

Joseph Howard and John Sargent were recently awarded a nationally competitive Air Force scholarship out of a field of 1,[illegible] applicants for their "superior academic abilities and true officer capabilities."

Cadet M. Sgt. Joseph Howard, last year's cadet of the year, and Cadet T. Sgt. John Sargent have enlisted in the Air Force inactive reserve in accepting this scholarship.

Both will be commissioned to Lt. 2 C. upon graduation and sent to navigation school at Mather Air Force Base in California.

The chances of two cadets receiving this award from the same detachment are slim, according to Maj. Bruce Goodhue, Asst. Professor of Air Science. Goodhue highly admired both cadets.

"They are among the best cadets in the sophomore class," Goodhue said.

Howard and Sargent, Air Force ROTC members since their first semester freshman year, plan to make the Air Force a career.

"I'll try to stay in after navigation school," Howard said. "The way the economy looks now I think I'm pretty lucky to have this security. A lot of seniors don't know where they're going. I know where I should be going," Howard said proudly.

Majoring in microbiology, Howard said it has been his ambition to get the scholarship for a long time. "I've been trying to get the award since high school," the [illegible] native said.

"I was really happy when I heard I received it because my father has been wanting me to get it all along. Mostly, though, it's been a personal ambition," Howard said.

Sargent was "naturally happy because I've been interested in Air Force ROTC ever since I came here to UMass. My interest has been growing ever since," Sarge said, as he is called by all who know him.

When asked why they chose the Air Force, Howard said he liked to fly and also "I'll be subject to world wide assignment. It's my kind of service – it has a better attitude than other services."

Sargent, a psychology major from Northampton, agreed with his roommate. "The Air Force is more of a family service. It's a newer service and its up with the times," Sarge said.

Both cadets belong to Air Force Detachment 370. Their scholarships finance their tuition, books, lab fees and allows $100 spending money a month. Both will be feted at a May ceremony in Herter Hall.

Sitting in a room plastered with Air Force aircraft photographs, Howard jokingly remarked, "along with the scholarship came a whole mess of orders."

University Year For Action Special Recruitment Issue

UYA! Do it your way

By LARRY SCOTT
UYA Center Staff

Until 1973, children in the public school systems in Holyoke and Springfield were not provided with a viable, physical education program. Because of University Year for ACTION Center's commitment to community service, five UYA Interns were placed in the schools. The five interns established and maintained an essential component of a public school system, while earning a full year of credits toward graduation.

University Year for ACTION Center is organized to help alleviate the discouraging conditions that exist in our cities and institutions, and at the same time open the resources of the University to the communities around it. The UYA Center is one attempt, within the University itself, to encourage innovative and exciting educational alternatives.

Juan Nieves, former UYA Intern at North Berkshire Early Childhood Development Center, did wonders with a parachute.

Since its inception at UMass in July 1971, over 400 students have taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the UYA Center to intergrate their University careers with a desire to play an active role in revitalizing community service.

In three years, over thirty agencies have been selected to take part in the UYA-UMass program. These agencies are located throughout Massachusetts.

Within their respective agencies, intern efforts range from after-school recreation programs at neighborhood centers, to assisting low-income tenants in solving housing problems; from teaching basic social skills to the mentally retarded to translating hospital procedures for use by Spanish speaking residents of Springfield.

Through the UYA Center, students earn a full year of academic credit while they function in full time positions at community service agencies dealing with the concerns of low-income and institutionalized residents of Massachusetts. Interns also receive a small weekly stipend.

The UYA Center exists at UMass and at [illegible] colleges across the country to make real the idea that education and social change are compatible, and that experiential learning and traditional classroom work can be integrated.

The UYA Center is open to all full-time undergraduate and graduate students within the Five College interchange program.

We are soliciting referrals from concerned faculty members, Department Heads and Deans.

The UYA Center is located at 315 Arnold House, UMass, telephone 545-1361.

Did you know?

Did you know that last year, student interns from UMass were responsible for the coordination and implementation of the therapeutic art program, with the Dept. of Textile, Clothing and Environment, UMass Amherst at Belchertown State School? Did you know that student interns from UMass initiated and implemented programs and activities at Northampton State such as women's support group, remedial education, carpentry, crafts, bingo, basketball, dance movement, etc.? Because of student intern efforts, City Wide Public Housing Tenants Organization received grants of $46,000 to provide salaries for security guards, as well as $46,000 for the Riverview Day Care Center and $44,000 for the Planned Parenthood program.

Did you know that student interns from UMass were instrumental in raising enrollment of students by 45 per cent and the reading grade level by 1.8 grades at the Neighborhood Youth Corp. Alternative School?

All the agencies listed above are non-profit, public and community service agencies with programs that directly affect thousands of low income families, families in the Massachusetts communities.

Putting it in very simple terms, we need Veterans in the UYA program. The communities need veterans in the UYA program.

The University Year for ACTION Center-UMass offers the ultimate in experiential education to concerned Veterans.

Veterans are older, and more mature than the average student. The Veterans' career plans are usually, very clearly defined.

A: Todos los estudiantes subgraduados y graduados:

Cuanto sabes?

Sabías tu que durante el año pasado los estudiantes internos de la Universidad de Mass. del recinto de Amherst fueron responsables de la implementación y coordinación del programa de arte terapeutico con el Dept. de Ropa, Textiles, y Ambiente de la Univ. de Mass. en "Belchertown State School"? Sabías tu que estudiantes internos de la Universidad de Mass. iniciaron e implementaron programas y actividades en Northampton State Hospital tales como grupos para apoyar y ayudar las mujeres, educación remediativa, carpintería, artesanía, bingo, baloncesto, clases de baile, etc.? Debido a los esfuerzos de estos estudiannes los siguientes grupos recibieron ayuda económica: "Ciy Wide Public Housing Tenants Organization" recibo $46,000 para proveer solarios a los guardias de seguridad, "Riverview Day Care Center" recibio $46,000 y "Planned Parenthood Program" $44,000. Sabias tu que estos estudiantes hicieron posible el aumento de la matrícula de estudiantes a un 45 per cent el nivel de lectura aumentó a 1.8 grado en el "Neighborhood Youth Corps Alternative School"?

Todas estas agencias mencionadas anteriormente no tienen fines lucrativos, son públicas, y prestan servicios a la comunidad a través de programas que afectan a miles de familias de bajos ingresos, específicamente familias Negras e Hispanas en las comunidades de Mass.

Si estás en las clases graduandas del '76 y '77 y estás pensando seriamente en continuar estudios en Leyes, Salud Pública, Educación o Comunicaciones, deberías mantenerte bien informado de estas agencias y envolverte en sus actividades en las comunidades universitarias. Nosotros en "UYA Center for Experiential Education" te podemos ayudar a integrarte. Hemos acomodado y continuaremos acomodando estudiantes de CCEBS en estas agencias en una posición pre-professional por un año. Tu puedes ganar hasta treinta creditos conduncentes a un grado académico.

"Ser puertorriqueño," dice George Maldonado, interno de la fase IV de UYA, "me ayudó a entender los problemas de los puertorriquenos y tambien los problemas de Negros y Blancos." Maldonado trabajó como organizador de inquilinos en proyectos de vivienda pública en Springfield.

José García, interno de la fase III de UYA, quien trabajó como asistente legal en Springfield, dice que los internos que pertenecen a grupos minoritarios, debido a sus habilidades y destrezas, pueden enseñar a los jóvenes en la comunidad los beneficios de la educación y estimularlos a continuar estudiando o regresar a la escuela. Dice, "Para los grupos minoritarios, la educación es poder." Por tanto, estudiantes latinos pueden ayudar la comunidad latina por medio de UYA. Pero, ¿Qué hay en UYA para ella?

Si estás seriamente interesado en una valiosa experiencia como lo hicieron los internos ya mencionados [illegible]. Tu puedes ser empleado en una posición pre-profesional en una agencia de servicio público a la comunidad. Por lo tanto, ven a vernos a UYA Center o llámanos al (413) 545-1361. Nuestras oficinas están localizadas en Arnold House No. 315.

Black students

If you are in the graduating class of '76 or '77 and are seriously thinking about a career in Law, Public Health, Communications, or Education, you should be well aware of community service agencies such as Western Mass. Legal Services, the Urban League, Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, Drug Abuse Foundation of the Pioneer Valley Inc.

All of the agencies listed above are non-profit, public and community service agencies with programs that directly affect thousands of low-income families, specifically Black and Spanish-speaking families in the Massachusetts community. You should be involved in their functions in their respective communities. We, at the UYA Center can get you involved.

We have placed, and will continue to place, CCEBS students in these agencies as well as others, in pre-professional positions for up to one calendar year. You can earn up to 30 credits towards your degree.

The faculty in the Afro-Am Department have made commitments to UYA by referring students to the program. One faculty member, [illegible], sponsored students in the Summer of '74. He said "The students that I sponsored were serious and they learned something from their experience. I kept close contact with them. I enjoyed it, and I will take on more students if the situation arises." He also stated, "I think experiential education should be an integral part of the University experience."

What have CCEBS students done in the past? One former CCEBS student Billy Roberts, while an intern at the Springfield Urban League, initiated and implemented the "Black Seeds" program, a program which motivates high school students in the community towards higher education. As a result of the "Black Seeds" program, over 300 students have been accepted to colleges across the country. Billy Roberts is now Dean of Students at Northfield College in Northfield, Minnesota.

While an intern at Western Mass. Public Television WGBY Channel 57, Larry Scott was one of the production assistants technically involved in fund raising campaigns which netted [illegible] in pledges and [illegible] in auction sales. He is now Communications Coordinator for the UYA Center, UMass Amherst.

We urge as well as encourage Black students to attend the UYA recruitment meetings.

Former UYA Intern at the Springfield Urban League, Billy Robert's counseled students in the "Black Seeds" program.

Women students

Lisbeth Berman and Robin Marsh, two interns at Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts, have planned and implemented medical and educational programs at the Planning Center as administrative assistants.

In five months, Robin and Lisbeth have been responsible for increasing the agency's overall ability to provide services by 33 per cent. Outside organization contacts were increased from ten to nineteen. They have lectured at the University of Connecticut School of Social Work, Smith College, and Hampshire Community Action Commission's Neighborhood Center. The latest achievement of Robin and Lisbeth have been arrangements with the health clinics: New England Medical Center for gynecological testing.

Wendy [illegible], a Psychology major, was recently involved in a class action case that affected Massachusetts Welfare Law. She won a class action case in collaboration with Attorney [illegible] of Northampton Legal Services, in U.S. District Court for the rights of individuals to apply for welfare without delay in processing. The decision determines when the 30 day deadline begins and what kind of information is acceptable for eligibility requirements. Wendy is one of three UYA Center interns at Western Mass. Legal Services. Need I say more? Women interns in UYA have made things happen.

Marcia Stemberg interned at New England Farm Workers Council.

Foreign students

Foreign students, much like veterans, usually have very precise career plans. Since they are here for academic purposes, the socialization between them and the surrounding communities of Western Massachusetts is fragmented. As of late, there have been four foreign interns in the UYA since 1973, Terry Chan, Paul Smith W., [illegible], and [illegible].

Terry interned at Model Cities in Springfield. His position was Planning Department Assistant. What impressed Terry the most was the fact that he assisted in decision making projects for the "Task Force" of which half of the members were from the immediate neighborhood. Terry also worked with the Model Cities Task Force by designing vest-pocket parks and having input in a plan to redevelop Winchester Square's business district.

Paul Smith W. from Panama, was a Summer '74 intern at the Family Planning Council of Western Massachusetts. At the Family Planning Council, Paul, being bilingual, was the liaison person for the Council and Spanish-speaking clients. He facilitated communication lines between the Council and the Spanish-speaking clients that were virtually non-existent in the past.

Patty Keenan, an intern at Hampshire Community Action Commission this year, was assisted by seven foreign students from the International Programs Office at the University.

We solicit as well as encourage involvement of foreign students. We also encourage faculty members to refer foreign students.

Anne Hegarty made things happen at Cerebral Palsy of Greater Boston.

Commentary

Knock on Wood

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

The supreme taboo around Whitmore these days is something called the "Universal Resource Fee." The mere utterance of the words causes administrative faces to go pale, sends icy shudders down tweed covered spines. University officials, when cornered on the subject, usually clam up like air tight coffins, grab for the next box of kleenex to wipe off the cold sweat forming on their brow, and suddenly remember all the urgent appointments they have to keep.

It is a cruel game the administration is playing with the students. For weeks university officials have been dropping comments about the necessity of imposing a fee to counteract the expected mass exodus from the dorms. The fact that these officials not once suggested an alternative to the fee, lead many students to conclude that indeed their next semester bill would go up substantially. But Dr. Bromery was quick to put this off as a "forgone conclusion."

The administration said it welcomed student input in working out alternatives to the fee. However, when students trying to gain more insight asked to see the two confidential reports on the costs of residential life which were the basis for the Universal Fee proposals it was like running against a brick wall. And even now Dr. Gage refuses to give out the "Gulko" report for fear that people "who wouldn't understand it would get hold of it."

> "It is a cruel game the administration is playing with the students."

Could it be that Whitmore is trying to hold off until the last day of classes, when nobody is around to protest any more, before announcing imposition of the fee? It would be a typical move.

Obviously the prediction that many students might move off campus once the mandatory dorm policy is lifted is not the real issue. In fact the University so far has not presented one shred of evidence to support this prediction.

In actuality, the student is being asked to pay for the debt services on the residential buildings. These tax free mortgage payments (over $3.2 million a year) are paid over a 30 year period to the university bond holders and, due to stiff interest rates, ultimately amount to over twice the original cost of the buildings.

Now if the State and-or Federal Government were to tax these debt services, almost half of that money could be rechanneled to the public, as most of the bond holders are so stinking rich that in their income bracket, 80 cents out of every dollar they make goes into revenue. Admittedly, this solution would require new legislation and would take time to accomplish, but it would most effectively do away with the absurdity of students begging for money to fill some already fat pocket for dorms in which many of them don't even live!

The most disturbing fact about the people who run this University is their chronic habit to make the student pay for everything, all the time, no matter what. It's so easy!

When Governor Dukakis slashed the UMass budget, President Wood never as much as mentioned the possibility of cutting down on "dead wood" in the administration. Rather, he instantly (and probably instinctively) started swinging the axe at vital student programs and projects. Just imagine the happy faces you'd see in Whitmore, if, for example, the Student Organizing Project were to lose its funds: all that "muddy water" down the drain!

Why shouldn't members of the administration pay part of the debt service bill? Sure, they don't use the dorms, but the same holds true for half the student population (only 11,500 live in dorms). A 6 per cent cut of all professional staff salaries would mean savings of over 2 million or roughly two thirds of the debt service fee!

Turning back to our beloved president, the budget for his office alone is $1.5 million. Now with that kind of money he could afford to pay each of the 30 members of his professional staff $40,000 a year and still have a quarter of a million left for his secretaries, office rent and the purchase of "CONFIDENTIAL" stamps! But show me the university president who spends that much money on professional staff and I'll show you a nut! The question then is, where does the money go to??

Look at the administration's travel budget of $38,000 and you'll understand why President Wood is able to fly to Amherst via helicopter at 60-70 dollars an hour whenever he feels like it, while the Governor of the Commonwealth rides the MBTA sub to work to save tax money.

> "...make the student pay for everything, all the time, no matter what. It's so easy!"

Wouldn't it be a fair law that stated no state employee may earn more than the Governor? Currently the President of UMass has an annual salary that is about $20,000 higher than the $40,000 of Mike Dukakis.

$65,000 of the University budget is set aside for "celebrations." Now what in the world could that be for? Surely it isn't for commencement activities, as each student is already charged a $10 fee to cover those costs on his/her junior year semester bill. Then, what else is so worth celebrating? Dr. Gage's birthday? April Fools'?

There are so many areas in which cuts could be made: Over [illegible] could be saved by cutting down the residential life staff, without even touching the heads of residence in the residential colleges. The dorms, should a greater amount of vacancies really occur, could be rented out to area residents and migrant workers, instead of only students. Many custodial positions in the administration could be filled by graduate students rather than by costly professional workers.

How many of these money saving measures has the administration considered, which ones will it implement? A blanket of silence covers the current state of Whitmore.

Well gentlemen, if you think you can treat students like a herd of sheep that you can shear naked whenever and for whatever reason you see fit, without asking questions or giving explanations, you are mistaken, quite mistaken!

It is not too late yet to let students in on the decision making process over the "Universal Resource Fee," genuine cooperation is better than confrontation any day. Knock on wood!

Editorial Focus: The Universal Fee

From our perspective

from YOUR perspective

The "universal fee," what it is, and the ramifications it holds for UMass students is the subject of today's Editorial pages. It is hoped that the information and opinions expressed today have provided information and insight on the subject. The universal fee presents an interesting basis for commentary, as it is one concrete embodiment of the trend toward which the administration is heading, and that is one of arrogance and disregard for student input in policy making.

One intended result of the abolition of the mandatory residency requirement was that dormitory living be competitive with off-campus living. If Whitmore wanted to keep the dorms filled, it would have to make the dorms comfortable, decent places to live, at a reasonable cost.

Dormitories have obvious advantages such as location and do provide some people with lifestyles and learning experiences which they enjoy. Many people do not intend to move off campus even if given the chance.

Nevertheless, the administration's viewpoint seems to be that the dormitories are destined to be emptied by a mass off-campus exodus. This is a ridiculous assumption for two reasons.

First, there is simply not enough off-campus housing to accommodate 10,000 more people. And second, not everyone living on campus intends to leave.

Why hasn't the administration come up with a program of improvements for dormitory living? Why has there been little effort to make dorm living as good, if not better, than off-campus housing? It can be done.

The lack of creative thinking and actions on the part of Whitmore suggests that we are all being taken for a ride.

STUDENT UNITY

Another important point is that of ownership. What will happen when and if the dorm debt is paid off? After the dormitories are paid for, they will ultimately become property of the state, which may, at its discretion, take over the buildings for other uses.

The administration has used the issue of the universal fee as a "divide and conquer" tactic against the student body.

The threat of a fee placed on commuters to pay for the "escape" of those still on campus has caused a split among students to the point where those already off campus may be agreeing with the administration in its effort to retain the residency requirement. If there is no singular student platform, there can continue to be accusations from Whitmore as to the validity and backing of the various arguments against the fee.

We now pay an annual fee on the "awful waffle" known as the Campus Center due to circumstances beyond our control. This time, the circumstances are within our control, the question is whether or not we will take that control.

Universal compromise

Sunday at 12:45 is always too early but the television seemed appropriate company and certain introduction to daytime. My little Panasonic is trustworthy and never fails to give me a clear picture at the flick of a switch and there, sitting in front of me was Al Ullmann, Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Now, I don't know what Al was discussing, but within three seconds of the switch-flick, he had used the word "compromise." I went looking for something else.

Daniel Boone was never really any good. After all, how many times can you watch someone fight a bear?

So I turned to NBC and right there, in sparkling black and white, was Frank G. Zarb, Federal Energy Administrator. His friends call him "thrifty."

Well there he was, being Frank with us, and believe it or not, he did it too. He said, "compromise."

Becoming slightly frustrated with more than just the television, I switched back to Al and wouldn't you know it? The man said "compromise" within three seconds.

Compromise is a great word. It can mean just about anything from the Yalta Conference to the Democratic Convention...from Henry Clay to Henry Kissinger...from Geneva to Jerusalem.

But compromise never solves problems. It only puts them off in hopes that "time heals all wounds." Nobody is ever satisfied with a "satisfactory agreement."

And that's the problem with this whole "universal fee" thing. Whitmore tells us that without this proposed fee, dorm and apartment rates would go sky high in no time at all. They state their objectives for proposing the fee as being:

"1. voluntary housing; 2. voluntary dining commons; 3. minimize pressure on off-campus rents; 4. maintain reasonable level of educational-human service programs; 5. improve physical environment by adequate renovation and remodeling program; 6. minimal impact on student cost; 7. meet institutional fiscal commitments."

If you throw out the first six, you'll get right down to the reason for it all. They're scared. Southwest isn't paid for yet.

Let's face facts. If they had any say about the first two objectives, this whole thing wouldn't even be coming up. They can't legally keep us on campus, so they're going to do it financially.

They're trying to compromise us. For once, the laws are with the students, and the administration is trying to get around them.

We don't have to settle for that. We don't have to pay for Southwest. It's not hard to understand that if we allow this fee to become enacted in the first place, the university will have the power to raise it at any time, just like tuition and dorm rates. If it helps you a little right now, it'll hurt you a lot in the long run.

There wouldn't be any problem if the dorms were at least "liveable," but after a week and a half of one of those shitty little rooms, claustrophobia or insomnia is inevitable to even the most stalwart UMie.

The solution they will choose is out of our hands. We have little say over the matter. The solution they have proposed is bullshit. It will only force the entire student population to pay for the University's bogus housing. We don't have to settle for that. We don't have to compromise ourselves.

Back to the barracks?

By FRANK HARRISON

Generally speaking, veterans do not wish to live in dormitories. Barracks living parallels the inadequacies and objections currently voiced by those students who are living on campus against their will. Despite the "residentialization" of both dorms and barracks (the military and the university now refer to them as residence halls) there is a lack of privacy, edible food and community feeling expressed. One difference exists however, the G.I. is able to waive the "privilege" of sleeping and eating on-base, and is given a quarters allowance for subsistence off-base. That allowance is supposedly the cost of feeding and housing the soldier had he-she remained on-base. As unbelievable as it sounds, the military presents a more equitable situation (allowing the person to make the choice and receiving the reimbursement) than would the University of Massachusetts (forcing those living off-campus to subsidize the Residence Hall program by paying a Universal Resource Fee).

As everyone knows, veterans live on a fixed income. There is little likelihood of another increase in educational benefits to offset the economic crunch facing the veteran-student today. Part time jobs are nowhere to be found, and housing is already scarce (1 per cent vacancy rate). With the retraction of mandatory residency requirements, a flood of new tenants will be released into the housing market. Demand for housing will rise, with financial ability being the determining factor rather than need. With this increase in demand, rents will undoubtedly rise, probably beyond the capability of most vets and their families. Matched with a fee increase to the university (Universal Fee) many vets will be coerced to either return to barracks life (the residence halls will enjoy a rent reduction to attract "voluntary" occupants), or be forced to drop out of school altogether.

There seems to be a lack of creative alternatives to the Universal Resource Fee. Such ideas as a cooperative residence hall, where students would contribute to the maintenance and administration of their dorm, and a payroll tax on faculty and administration (making the Universal Resource Fee truly universal) seem to be taken lightly by the administration, which has only proposed across-the-board program cuts or slashing of services. Warren Gulko, the Director of the Office of Budgeting & Institutional Studies states that "the time is now to initiate student involvement before the hard decision is made." The campus administration must present their plan to the Trustees before March 20th. One naturally asks, "Has this hard decision already been made for us?" SGA President Rick Savini has proposed a task force of students to initiate alternatives to the Universal Resource Fee. This group must meet immediately, and address itself to the problem. Veterans and non-resident students do not want to see any students living in dorms against their will. They will also reject the extortionary aspects of a Universal Resource Fee. There must now be a willingness for both communities of students to come together to meet the challenge presented by the fee. Student Unity must reflect more than a few posters.

These fat cat phonies would try any Sleezy con rather than cut their own flatulent budgets. STUDENTS BEWARE!

from THEIR perspective

"As I have said in earlier discussions, the Universal Resource Fee is one of the more viable options examined for achieving equity between off-campus and on-campus living for students. It is currently utilized in various forms at many private and public colleges and universities, in particular at the University of Connecticut, where it appears to be a generally acceptable choice by both students and administration. Discussions are now underway involving Vice Chancellor Gage and Dr. Gulko with the appropriate undergraduate and graduate student government units and it is possible that the administration proposal may be modified and-or changed. Whatever the outcome, my primary concerns are that we arrive at an option that takes into consideration those living in the residence halls, the commuter students and the environmental concerns of our neighboring communities. I further recognize that no solution is going to be completely acceptable to everyone, however, it is my hope that full information will be made available to all persons involved in working toward this important decision."

Chancellor Randolph Bromery

Obligations to be met

By DR. ROBERT GAGE
Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs

Questions have been raised recently on many campuses regarding the legality of requiring students to live in residence halls, and the court decisions have been varied. In some states residence requirements based on concerns for residence hall financing have been found unconstitutional; in others requirements for at least two years of mandatory residence have been upheld, most recently at Kent State.

Financially, residence halls fall short of being competitive with private apartments. Building costs are high because of public building specifications and the inclusion of public space such as lounges, etc.; maintenance services are costly; and public building authorities can't take advantage of the tax breaks from generous depreciation allowances.

For the solution of the problem we have suggested several conditions which should be met:

—voluntary housing and dining —minimal pressure on off-campus rents

—minimal impact on student cost

—continuation of reasonable level of educational and human service programs —improvement of the physical environment by renovation and remodeling

—satisfaction of the University's fiscal commitments

Several alternatives have been defined, each of which meets one or more of the conditions:

—binding contract for each student who matriculates to abide by University regulations

—continuation of the present requirements, hoping the current suit will be settled in favor of the University.

—requirement for living in residence halls 4 years with only limited exceptions (draw Arnold and Hills North and South back into use) —acceptance of voluntary housing with no change, thus assuring financial default —state appropriation of $2.1 million per year

—revised academic calendar

—economies and program cuts, including extensive lay-offs, totaling $2.1 million —universal resource fee of $275 per year applied only to in-coming students

—universal resource fee of $100 per year for all students

—universal resource fee of $60 per year for all students plus lay-offs and cutbacks of $1 million

—universal resource fee of $190 for new students and $90 for returning students plus $500,000 of cuts--or a fee of $125 for all students beginning in 1975 and increasing to $190 in four years

If the universal resource fee (or some other alternative that is socially, economically, and politically viable) is not the option taken, then the dormitory residents alone will have to bear the burden of a substantial rent increase. Much as the support of public schools is borne by all taxpayers--including those taxpayers without children in the public school system--the universal resource fee does spread the cost of maintaining residence halls and dining commons over all students, thereby reducing the cost per individual user. It would assure students of having a source of inexpensive housing on-campus for those who wish to use it. (Each of the universal fee proposals is based on reducing residence hall rents by an average of $135 per year and absorbing the anticipated increase for FY'76.) It would provide the resources through which each residence hall could be improved substantially in a much shorter time than the present system of renovating one dormitory per year.

I believe that everyone is beginning to realize how complex the problem is that faces us. The drawbacks inherent in some of the alternatives make them unrealistic. Many can not be implemented by September. Some of the alternatives may not be in the best interest of students, while others may not be in the best interest of employees. The ideal solution would be to identify an alternative that serves the best interests of the total University community (including the town of Amherst).

We have an obligation to the students to keep costs as low as possible, to the town of Amherst to ensure that present residents will not be forced out by substantial rent increases, and to the state of Massachusetts to meet financial obligations. The choice will not be easy, but will be made in consultation with student groups and in the best interest of the community as a whole.

decisions and to provide some kind of public information to students so that they may make appropriate course decisions."

According to Dorsch, "It is inconsistent on the one hand for the faculty and administration to use the compiled data as professor evaluation information, and on the other, to argue that it is too prejudicial to release for student scrutiny."

[illegible] said that only seven departments allow students access to the evaluation forms, but there is often an elaborate set of procedures that a student must go through while tracking down the relevant information.

The seven departments are– Afro-American studies, Air Force ROTC, Army ROTC, college of food and natural resources, linguistics, philosophy and psychology.

Don't let the price of a college education stop you.

The price of a college education is skyrocketing. Fortunately the Air Force has done something to catch up with it. For the first time, the Air Force ROTC Scholarships include the 2-year program, for both men and women.

If you can qualify, the Air Force will pay for the remainder of your college education. Not only do AFROTC 2-year college scholarships cover full tuition, but reimbursement for textbooks, lab and incidental fees, as well as a tax-free monthly allowance of $100.

To cash in on all this, just apply, qualify, and enroll in the Air Force ROTC at ________

It's a great way to finish your college education in the money, and build a future where the sky's no limit ... as an officer in the Air Force.

Student Senate meeting agenda

Three controversial items top the agenda for tonight's Student Senate meeting, which will take place in room 113 of the Campus Center at 7:00 PM.

One motion, concerning the authorization of the Senate treasurer to freeze any RSO accounts which don't reflect good financial standing, was postponed last week.

Another item deals with the allocation of Chairperson salaries to RSO groups. If this motion passes, it would mean that the heads of the various Student Senate Committees will be working many hours a week, voluntarily.

The last article on the agenda is a motion to "advise the Chancellor to advise the Board of Trustees to implement a ten dollar 'application fee' to all students applying to this University, for the purpose of raising money for existing programs."

Since the items on tonight's agenda will affect many students, it is advised that anyone interested in sharing his or her thoughts on these and other issues, should attend. Also, any students interested in seeing, first hand, how their "representative body" conducts itself, are also urged to present themselves at tonight's meeting.

Mass PIRG report released

MassPIRG's Research Associate Robert Gaines today released a report summarizing the results of MassPIRG's three month long study of the level of energy wasted by more than one hundred stores and businesses in Boston, Lawrence and Worcester. The seventeen page study, entitled "Commercial Energy Waste: An Extravagance No One Can Afford," documents the fact that Massachusetts' commercial sector is adding the cost of wasted energy to the skyrocketing bills which consumers are already paying.

Specifically, seventy-five per cent of the businesses actually surveyed were found to have measured temperatures in excess of 68 degrees F, while more than half of the light readings taken at sixty-two per cent of the stores surveyed were found to be in excess of Federal Energy Administration recommended levels.

"The cost to consumers of all this wasted energy is clear," said Gaines, "particularly when it is remembered that the Federal Government's energy bill was reduced by twenty-seven per cent for each federal building which was brough into compliance with FEA's heating and lighting guidelines.

Registrar closed Weds

Due to the extremely heavy volume of grade corrections, transcript requests, and course schedule changes, the Undergraduate Registrar's Office (Room 213 Whitmore) will be closed to "walk-in" as well as telephone inquiries and consultation all day on Wednesdays, commencing March 5 through April 16 inclusive. The purpose of the closing is to restore files to working order so that proper service may be rendered the other days of the week. A service table will be in operation outside the office only for distribution and collection of various forms.

WMUA

Here is today's schedule for WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Today's disc jockeys will be Stu MacDonald from 6-10, Steve Berger from 10-2, Mary Lawson from 2-6, Marc Bauman from 6-10, and Barry Williams going until 2.

8:32 a.m., High Tides, Jeff Jasver explains the relationships of the planets of the Earth.

8:40 a.m. & 5:30 p.m., River Valley Almanac, WMUA's community service calendar.

6:15 p.m., Off The Hook, Marc Bauman hosts an interview show which invites call ins.

8:00 p.m., Dr. Mary McWhinnie will be aired live talking about "Women as Explorers." Dr. McWhinnie was the first woman to go to the Antartic with the U.S. Antartic program. She is currently on the Committee on Polar Research.

9:00 p.m., Original Star Dust, [illegible] will be playing rhythm and blues, swing, jump, and rock and roll music of the 30s, 40s, 50s, and early 60s. This week's show will preview all of the styles of music that will be full shows through the semester.

10:15 p.m., Gaydream, Damian hosts a show for the gay community.

WMUA News will be aired at 7, 8 & 9 a.m. and at 2, 6 & 10 p.m. Headlines will be broadcast at 7:30 and 8:30 a.m.

McGrath and Savini profiles

Senate speaker Cindy McGrath

"We've got to tie together all our resources," Savini said, adding that students have just a month left to "force these issues to a head."

"Students have to demonstrate their faith in the student system or the administration will take over the whole boat," he warned.

Savini is twenty-six and a Senior at UMass. He comes from Dunstable, a small town in Massachusetts. His major is a BDIC in marketing via mass communications. He has been at UMass since the fall of 1971. Before that he attended the New England Aeronautical Institute in Nashua, New Hampshire, and also spent two years in the army.

As a freshman, Savini was a senator in the Student Senate. Afterwards he became Chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee.

"I had no intention of running for President," he said. But he finds himself in that position" since somebody talked me into it."

"The job takes a lot out of you," he added.

He hopes to maintain his activity, he said, by working in a political campaign sometime in the future, preferably a presidential campaign.

McGrath, the Senate Speaker, is also a Massachusetts resident. She is a twenty-one year old Senior majoring in English. She has served on various committees throughout her four years at UMass.

She became President of the Orchard Hill Area Government at the end of her sophomore year. She ran for senator a year later.

"Ten minutes after I was sworn in as a senator," she said, "I became the Senate Speaker." She added that she had contended for the position against four other persons who were already in the Senate.

"I guess they wanted a change," she said.

McGrath said she would like to find a job in public and-or educational administration leading to politics, following her graduation.

notice

Nominations for area representatives for the executive board of the Union of Student Employees must be submitted to room 428A, Student Union, by Thursday. Balloting will be Friday at a table in the C.C. concourse.

Ex-Dean Allen interviewed

"Everyone tells that the administration favors us in terms of money — that has to be the biggest laugh in town."

"I don't think the School of Education is administered any more sloppily than any other unit on campus. It depends on what you focus on," Allen said.

Allen said he will remain in Lesotho, Africa's capital city of Masura at least until the fall, where he is directing the establishment of the country's first public teachers' college with $2.6 million in grants from the United Nations and the Danish International Development Agency.

Tartaglia decision thought valid days after he had paid his bill for the semester, he was fired.

Scanlon said, "Just because he has paid the bill, it doesn't mean he has automatically retained student status. With 6,000 employees, it takes a while to process."

Tartaglia said he had paid his bill for the semester before applying for a job, and applied at Financial Aid before he was rehired by [illegible] Kinder, manager of the beverage dept. "But at a meeting before 80 members of the bar," he added, "John Corker, director of the Campus Center, told me to 'punch out and get out.'"

Kinder verified this and said all of the beverage employees could verify it.

Corker said the meeting was before six to eight supervisors and not 80 bar members, but had no further comment.

Milton Kerstein, a member of the Board of Governors, said, "Normally upper level management doesn't interfere." Tony went through the proper grievance procedure in good faith. When he couldn't get any rationale for his dismissal, he brought his case before the Board of Governors."

Kerstein said when the Board of Governors met, Corker wouldn't say anything about Tartaglia's dismissal. The board had a special meeting the following week but Corker still refused to talk because of "personal reasons."

"At that time," he continued, "the board voted to reinstate Tartaglia, because they felt Corker had ample opportunity to state his side of the story, and Tony had already presented his side."

After the board meeting, the reinstatement was to go to the Chancellor for approval.

After the reinstatement, several members of the board heard Corker say, "I don't care whether the Chancellor vetoes it or not, Tony Tartaglia will never work in this building as long as I'm here."

Corker had no comment on this statement.

Kerstein said the Board of Governors is reconsidering Tartaglia's reinstatement at the request of the Graduate Senate.

"In any situation like this," he added, "a fundamental concept of jurisprudence is that the aggrieved party is made aware of the charges against him. Tony has been going through this process since January 28, and, to date, he still doesn't know why he was terminated."

Astrology in Roman life lecture offered tonite

Tonight at 8 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center, Prof. Jean Rhys Bram of Hunter College, New York will offer a lecture on astrology in Roman life. Prof. Bram has translated Firmicus Maternus' work Mathesis (Knowledge) from the Latin and this translation will be published in the Spring of 1975. Prof. Bram will divide her lecture into two parts. The first part of her presentation will deal with the place and role of astrology in Roman life. The second will involve her recent translation and what Firmicus Maternus believed. The lecture should be of interest to the classicist, historian, and astrologer alike.

Uri Shulavitz speaks today

Uri Shulavitz, well known writer and illustrator of children's books, will speak on "Fantasy and Reality: Literature for Jewish Children" as part of the Five College Jewish Art Festival. Shulevitz has received national recognition for his work, including the coveted Caldecott medal for 1969, awarded to "the most distinguished American picture book for children." He has also illustrated some of I.B. Singer's books.

His talk will be this afternoon, in Campus Center 165 and is open to all.

Pilot project offered

A pilot project concerned with helping graduating women, minorities and non-traditional students will be held on 3 consecutive Thursday evenings from 7-9:30 p.m., March 6, March 13, and March 20th in the Campus Center, room 101.

Topics to be covered will be "Barriers Encountered in the Business World," "Job Search Strategies," "Resume Writing," "Interviewing," and "Getting What You Want." The enrollment is limited to 20 participants in each category.

Fernande Kaeser, pianist, will be presented in a faculty recital sponsored by the Department of Music in Bowker Auditorium Thursday, March 6, at 8:00 P.M. The recital will be open to the public without charge. The program includes Mendelssohn — Prelude and Fugue in D Major Opus 35, No. 2, Schumann's Davidsbundlertanze Op. 6, Liszt's Grande e'trede de Paganini No. 2, and Dances of Marosszet by Kodaly.

A native of Zurich, Fernande Kaeser started her musical studies at the age of seven. She gave her first concerts when she was ten. Before joining the Music Department at UMass in 1969-70 she earned the respect and acclaim of Europe as an exceptional performer by the perfection of her technique. She is especially known for the genuine beauty of her musical interpretation. Miss Kaeser has performed in most countries in Europe and hold prizes of the most honored music competitions. She has played widely in concert and radio with such great European orchestras as the London Philharmonic Orchestra and The Royal Philharmonic Orchestra.

Speaking as both a performing and teaching musician, Miss. Kaeser stresses the importance of one's own personality in music in defining the limits within which a person can expand and develop because of what he finds about himself. She sees music as being a very personal exchange of individual feelings and abilities. Of her own philosophy she says, "I play what I believe in. I do not strive to be literate in the words of music. Surely I am familiar with technique but that is not the most important part of music." She senses the true value and worth of music being the ability of a person to combine his characteristics and personality with the music. This combination then becomes "an exploration and process of growth." Miss. Kaeser's encouragement to aspiring students is most importantly to have motivation — a dedication which is total, from which talent and self-satisfaction is fostered.

Fernande Kaeser's performance in Bowker Auditorium will present a fine opportunity for students and the public to enjoy a truly outstanding artist.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5 — Born today, you are an exceedingly clever individual with a highly intuitive nature. You know how to take what you have learned through schooling and training, combine it with what you know instinctively, and reach conclusions which are both imaginative and practical. Your ability to see yourself as others see you enables you to be objective when judging yourself or your work. On the other hand, such objectivity may at times make it impossible for you to give yourself a much-needed benefit of the doubt.

Although you are interested in the arts, you may well discover — though perhaps not until much time and effort has been expended in an attempt to be artistically creative — that you have yourself little if any talent in this direction. Your involvement in the arts will satisfy you more if you keep it on an intellectual plane rather than trying to be artistically productive.

Although you are basically an individual of high good humor, you've a tendency to allow wit to deteriorate into sarcasm when you are faced with a person or a situation which displeases you in any way. You understand the value of diplomacy — but you are not prone to being diplomatic. Your dislike of anything that smacks of favoritism makes it hard for you to grant or curry favor.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, March 6

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — A day which seems calculated to confuse you. You should be reassured by afternoon hours that all is not as it seems; it's very much better.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Allow your logical approach to problems to carry you past any qualms you may have about tackling a new one. Insist on all facts and figures necessary.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — To be respected is not necessarily to be loved. If you have any fear of losing your present place in the home, ignore them. All is well now.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your efforts to be interesting may prove merely enigmatic as far as others are concerned. Try to make yourself clear first of all.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An act which most people would consider petty must not be allowed to throw you off your stride today, though it be performed by one in authority.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Make sure you possess a good and true sense of your own worth before you attempt any new projects. A chance for real gain appears on the horizon.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your sympathetic understanding of the plight of co-workers who have not been able to get their points across may make you a target for revenge.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Your natural dislike of the "show-off" may make it difficult for you to take another into your confidence. Overlook an unpleasant past experience.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Do nothing that would in any way disabuse others of the notion that you are to be trusted. You need to feel part of an "inner circle."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Several persons may attempt to share their responsibilities with you today. If you are wise, you will put them off, if not refuse altogether.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Your determination to succeed in a new enterprise does not surprise anyone today. Small children are especially taken by your tall tales.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — You would do well to keep your feelings about a recent difficulty to yourself for the present. Display knowledge to friends in the afternoon.

UMass wraps up YanCon

By STEVE SARACENO

Orono, Maine — UMass won its third straight Yankee Conference championship by thrashing Maine, 106-80, here last night.

The win gave UMass a 10-2 record in the conference, one game ahead of second place Connecticut. The Minutemen finished the season with an overall record of 18-7.

[illegible]

As in the last two games, the final score was not indicative of UMass' dominance of play. The Minutemen led by 30, 99-69, with just under five minutes left.

John Murphy and Mike Pyatt paced the Minutemen with 21 points apiece. Bill Endicott chipped in with 17 and Jim Burke, playing one of his best games ever, also contributed 17.

UMass took control early in the first half, breaking a 12-all deadlock by scoring nine straight points.

Burke was instrumental in the surge, hitting two jumpers and picking the Black Bears' pockets, leading to several easy hoops.

An eleven point run near the end of the half gave the Minutemen a comfortable 56-34 bulge at intermission.

Bob Warner did most of the damage for the Black Bears, scoring 26 points and pulling down 12 rebounds. Despite Warner's presence, UMass controlled the boards by a whopping 68-40 margin.

Other double figure scorers for Maine were Dan Reilly with 12, Steve Fitzpatrick, who tossed in 12 in garbage time, and Tom Burns with 10.

TICKLING THE TWINE — Jim Town broke the century mark for UMass by sinking two free throws with 4:34 to go. Leaman cleared his bench and the substitutes scored five points the rest of the way.

Jim Murphy's points came in the first half as he hit nine of eleven shots from the field.

Late in the game, Pyatt was assessed a technical foul for dunking. He went in for a layup, put it up clean, but Warner spiked it through the hoop... Boris, ref, you blew that one.

Warner received a standing "O" when he finally made a free throw. He missed his first five and finished the night at two of nine.

Arnold Johnson probably set a record for fouling out in the shortest amount of time. "The Dream" only played about five minutes.

The Minutemen now await word from the NIT. The selection committee of the Garden Classic meets tomorrow to issue its initial bids.

Involving School of Ed 'misconduct'

Grand jury subpoenaes files

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert Wood announced yesterday that records and files "associated with the charges of wrong doing and misconduct" at the School of Education have been subpoenaed by the federal grand jury in Boston.

According to Wood, UMass Amherst Treasurer Kenneth Johnson was issued the subpoena yesterday morning, and will appear in Federal District Court today. Wood believes the subpoena directs Johnson to take records of the Urban Education [illegible] Center in the School of Ed.

The subpoena came two days after the Collegian reported that it had been denied access to the records of the School of Education and the Department of Continuing Education, in apparent violation of the State's open records law.

Wood disclosed the existence of the subpoena at yesterday's Board of Trustees meeting in Worcester.

He concluded his remarks on the subpoena by saying, "although I regret that we cannot make the records available we will continue to provide as much information as possible. The treasurer has no alternative but to comply with the subpoena."

Contacted by the Collegian last night, James D. Newpher, special agent in charge of the Boston FBI office, confirmed the subpoena was issued yesterday morning and said it was a result of the investigation into misuse of funds at the School of Education.

Newpher said the subpoena was a part of the "natural process" of the investigation and denied that its timing had anything to do with Collegian requests to obtain School of Ed. records.

Wood also announced at yesterday's Trustee meeting the appointment of five member "visiting committee" which will "take a searching look at the organization, size, programs, academic procedures, and the directions of the School of Education."

The committee was formed at the request of Chancellor Randolph Bromery and was approved by the Trustees in a voice vote yesterday.

Wood said the committee will try to identify areas of weakness at the School of Ed. and make recommendations concerning corrective changes. [illegible]

Wood said he thought investigation of the school should deal with criminal wrongdoing, then questions of academic purpose, and finally specific details of poor administration or mismanagement.

The terrorists managed to reach the Savoy Hotel near the beach and entered the hotel.

Israeli troops later stormed the hotel where the foreign tourists were being held hostage and after heavy gunfire, a spokesman for the Israeli military command said "it's all over".

'Thrifty' franchise acquired

'Rent-a-car' service arrives

By ANN MARIE REIS
Staff Reporter

A branch of Thrifty Rent-a-Car has been secured at UMass through the Campus Travel Center and Steve Lepow, manager, has been "very satisfied" with the results.

"With 30,000 people here and no car rental in the area, I felt a need for it," he said. "UMass is a good place for one and it's convenient."

Thrifty is the only car rental that has a minimum age requirement of 21 in comparison to the 25 year old requisite of other dealers.

"This is certainly an advantage in this type of community, because we're hitting a bigger market," said Lepow.

The UMass ski club and debate team have used Thrifty Rent-A-Car as a means of transportation. "Many people from athletics and clubs probably haven't even thought of using us, though this does seem like a feasable way to get around," Lepow added.

Pat Stawasz, a Campus Travel employee, said, "We have a mixture of customers, but sometimes the faculty finds it easier than students to come up with the cash needed to rent a car."

Businessmen that visit the university "are not aware that this service exists" according to Lepow. "So our major sales are with professors, faculty members, and students," he added.

Subcompact cars-such as Vegas, and Volkswagens are most frequently rented. For $12, plus 10 cents per mile, and a gas fee, a customer can be accommodated with a car. A "100 Special" plan offers the first 100 miles free for $15.95, and 10 cents is charged for every mile traveled over the limit.

"Weekend specials are popular. They're ideal for a trip to Boston and back," said Lepow. A $37.65 package includes a car from Friday to Monday noon with the first 300 miles free.

The Campus Travel Center maintains the upkeep of three cars in the Campus Center Garage. Business is "very irregular," with sometimes up to ten cars rented out in a day. Bradley Field and Springfield send additional ones if needed, Lepow added.

Lepow recommends potential customers to reserve ahead. "There's a wait on last minute deals. I think a lot of people will want cars to go to Florida with during vacation, and there is only a limited amount. Those that book ahead are going to get a car," he concluded.

UMass offers pilot English course to students of foreign birth

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

UMass is offering a pilot intensive course in English to non-native, matriculated students at the University, according to Dr. Clodomiro Cabanas, Director of the English as a Second Language component in the Rhetoric Department.

Based on the results of the course, Cabanas hopes to expand the intensive program, which, he says, offers "equal education to foreign students and other non-native speakers of English at the University."

"Our goal is to extend this service to every qualified person who needs it," Cabanas said.

The 12 students enrolled in the course meet for 5 hours, 5 days a week, for which they receive 12 credits, according to Cabanas.

Clodomiro Cabanas

"With the intensive course, UMass is offering students on a low English level a chance to study at the University," said David Hopkins, the professor who is teaching the course. "By basing the selection process on previous knowledge of English, the school ignores a student's potential and [illegible] places too much weight on the mechanical skill of learning English, a task which can be accomplished while attending the University," he added.

The Rhetoric Department instituted the ESL component [illegible] years ago, and offers a three-course sequence [illegible] requirements.

According to Cabanas, this sequence has failed to meet "the complete language needs" of all of the non-native speakers of English on campus. Cabanas acknowledged credit for setting up the pilot course to Jane Blankenship, Acting Director of the Rhetoric Department and John Hunt, Provost for Special Programs.

Hunt used $3900 that was "in reserve" after the 4.3 per cent budget cut to fund the intensive course.

"We feel that this investment will save money in the long run if students could overcome the language barrier with one course," Hunt said.

There are approximately [illegible] students at UMass who are non-native speakers of English. According to Cabanas, lack of proficiency in English prevents some of these students from receiving quality education on the level of native speakers.

The degree of proficiency of the students in the intensive course varies, according to Hopkins, who has had experience teaching English in Brazil. Some of the students only have problems with [illegible] [illegible] backgrounds.

Hopkins stressed the importance of teaching ESL, saying that it is very different from teaching English to native speakers.

"In addition, by teaching non-native speakers," Hopkins said, "foreign students offer Americans a different perspective of life in the U.S. — it helps you to know what you're doing and why."

Question of 'open account'

Was bill paid?

By DAVE [illegible]
Staff Reporter

An "open account" for the wedding of Deborah Stefano, daughter of Purchasing and Produce Manager Steve Stefano, was confirmed yesterday by Craig Stuart, Campus Center business manager.

Stuart said no bill was received for the August wedding, although "most bills are proposed by the following day and it never takes more than a week."

Phil Amico, director of Campus Center food services, said he thinks the bill was processed last week, but it has not been issued yet.

Amico said, "A special bill had to be made up because of special items Mr. Stefano had ordered. The bill was sort of forgotten, and it never came to my attention again."

After a change in personnel in November, he added, the records may have been dropped.

The August 16 wedding took place on the tenth floor of the Campus Center according to the Campus Center Scheduling Office.

Sources said, "It was a fairly expensive affair. There was an elegant buffet with alot of showy items, such as cracked lobster and crab, and about 100 people attending."

The same source said the bill would have to be absorbed by the Campus Center.

Signs in CC must comply!

By THOMAS [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Any signs, posters, notices, in any location within the Campus Center Complex, not in conformance with the Sign and Poster Policy will be immediately taken down said Bud Wilkes, director responsible for coordination of the use of signs and posters.

The policy, approved by the Board of Governors, states that anyone interested in putting up posters, banners, notices or sign-up sheets, may do so, provided they have the approval of the Campus Assistance Center in advance.

The policy limits the locations of the policy and the size to [illegible] and states that no banners will be put up more than two weeks in advance of an event. Interested persons must be responsible for removal of its banner and will be limited to one per event.

Wilkes said since the policy has been instituted, paper pollution has cut down drastically, satisfying environmentalists. It has also allowed every person a better opportunity to put up a poster and know exactly where to go to find a particular poster he might wish to read, he added.

Before the policy, Wilkes said the Campus Center was continuously polluted and filled by satchels of posters. Those people responsible had little respect for the rights of others, added Wilkes.

UMass senior takes up own inquiry on Kennedy case

By SUSAN GENSER
Staff Reporter

"The coverup of President Kennedy's assassination would make the Watergate coverup look like a firecracker alongside an H-bomb," said a UMass senior who has done extensive research on the assassination of John Kennedy and intends to write a book on the subject.

David Joyce, a history major whose specialty is the 1960's and right-wing politics, believes there definitely was a conspiracy to assassinate Kennedy and a coverup. He said there exist certain theories that can not be proven, but are quite logical.

"I think wealthy extreme rightwing individuals are involved, with the possibility of their having connections within the intelligence community," he said.

Joyce became interested in the Kennedy assassination when he watched Lee Harvey Oswald being shot on television. After reading the report of the Warren Commission the presidential panel investigating the assassination of Kennedy, Joyce was convinced there was more to be looked into involving the case.

The research he has done so far on the subject amounts to roughly 60 pages and is divided into five chapters. Part of it deals with the Warren Commission, and the rest is a summary of Joyce's views on Kennedy's assassination and the reasons for it.

Joyce started seriously researching the assassination last summer to prove to a professor here that the Warren Commission conclusions are inaccurate. Professor Philip Swenson was "impressed with Joyce's persuasive criticism of the Warren Commission report and its inadequacies."

Swenson does not fully accept Joyce's proposed alternative theories but adds "his argument is intriguing and by no means implausible. He just needs more solid evidence to go along with the circumstantial (evidence) he already has".

One of Joyce's theories is that Oswald was a member of the intelligence community, and Joyce feels there is much evidence to support this. He has also looked into the CIA's role in the assassination but feels "CIA involvement can never be proved. They have more efficient shredders than Richard Nixon had."

Joyce based his arguments largely on the 26 volumes of the Warren Commission. He felt that the commission did not investigate the assassination thoroughly thereby initiating a coverup. He sees a correlation between this and the fact that of the seven-member commission, only one, Gerald Ford is still alive and in politics.

The part of the book dealing with the actual assassination of Kennedy was depressing to write, Joyce said. However, what he feels most is a sense of helplessness, the research paper is entitled "For What It's Worth"?

Joyce is currently working on the book but probably won't finish it for several years. He said it is a book on the 1960's and early 1970's, showing how the assassinations of this time have shaped the American political system. The research he has done so far will be incorporated into the book.

"I'm just writing it for myself as a historian, trying to explain American development during the 1960's and 1970's," he said.

Report to make teacher evaluations public

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

A 55-page report entitled, "Course and Teacher Evaluation, a Student Perspective," will be made available to UMass students within a week, according to Lawrence Magid, director of the Student Center for Educational Research.

The report consists of a detailed analysis of a telephone survey conducted by SCER which documents substantial student support for the publication of a course evaluation guide, said Magid.

"Students need an evaluative as well as a descriptive guide to courses and instructors in order to make informed course selections," he said.

Approximately 81 per cent of the 128 students contacted by SCER responded that teacher evaluation material should be made public, according to the report. Presently, all student-submitted teacher evaluations are classified as confidential.

The report reveals most students choose their courses from the Student Senate Course Description Guide or rely on advice from friends.

The survey results detail the kinds of information which students feel that an evaluation guide should contain and statistically reveal the criteria by which they rate their courses. Ranked by importance, these are:

- the quality of teaching material
- the enthusiasm of the instructor
- the instructor's clarity and understandability
- the flexibility of the course requirements
- the amount of time the instructor is willing to spend with students outside of class
- the instructor's openness to varying points of view
- information regarding the instructor's grading practices
- the format of the course (i.e. lecture, seminar)
- whether the instructor is racist
- the amount of homework required
- the cost of books and lab fees
- whether the instructor is sexist

What SCER recommends is a booklet which would combine statistical data with narrative summaries, said Magid.

In the past, course evaluation guides have consisted of hard-to-read computer print-outs offering only statistical information.

Students can obtain copies of the report by phoning [illegible], or by writing to the Student Center for Educational Research in room [illegible] of the Student Union according to Magid. Copies will be delivered by campus mail.

At least 80 other colleges and universities across the country now provide evaluative material to their students, said Magid.

The Student Senate last night delayed action on two controversial bills, one granting the treasurer power to freeze funds in RSO group accounts and another concerning the proposed implementation of an "application fee" to all University applicants.

The authority to freeze funding to RSO groups when the accounts do not reflect good financial standing is being sought by treasurer John Margossian.

An 18-13 vote postponed a final decision on the treasurer's request a week. Margossian, absent last night, is reportedly preparing further arguments. Assistant treasurer Nancy Nieko said the measure was being sought as a means "to get RSO groups to respond" to financial notices.

Jon Hite, chairperson of the Rents and Fees committee, sponsored a motion to implement a ten dollar application fee. Monies raised by the fee would be used to fund existing university programs according to Hite. Action on the motion was delayed for two weeks.

In other actions a measure to cut off salaries to committee chairpersons — approximately $20 per week, failed in senate action. Matt Burns echoing the majority's sentiment said, "These people deserve more than what they are paid."

Voting was postponed for two weeks on a proposed constitutional amendment. The amendment provides for future SGA presidential elections to be decided by a popular vote. The next SGA presidential election is presently scheduled for April.

Tartaglia seeks reasons for his dismissal

By [illegible]
Progressive News Service

"I just feel that I should be given the same courtesy to comment on other peoples' statements if they are given the courtesy to comment on mine," said Tony Tartaglia in an interview last night.

Tartaglia said he felt upset over coverage of his case by the campus press because Campus Center Director John Corker [illegible] the opportunity "to comment on what I said, but I was never asked to comment on what he said."

Tartaglia said, he feels no personal hostility to Corker either, but "I resent the treatment I'm getting. Apparently I'm just another number to him, and he feels he can do what he wants without fear of reprisal," he said.

What bothers him most is he still does not know why he was dismissed from his position as Campus Center bar manager, "and I've even talked to him personally since my dismissal, but he won't say anything," said Tartaglia.

Tartaglia said the issue between him and the office of Financial Aid had been resolved before his dismissal, and Milton Kenstein, a member of the Campus Center Board of Governors, confirmed this.

Kenstein said, "Richard Dorn (director of Financial Aid) told me he had no concern with any action concerning Tartaglia after the fall 1974 semester."

Last Thursday, the Campus Center Board of Governors voted to reinstate Tartaglia, "but Corker still refused to do it," said Kenstein.

Kenstein said, "Corker's action undermined the Board's constituted power to govern the building. He's done a disservice to the student body at large by disregarding them."

However, Kenstein said that Corker was advised to keep silent on the issue.

"Prior to last Thursday's Board meeting, Corker was advised by attorney [illegible] that there may be a lawsuit pending against him, and anything he said could be used against him," Kenstein added.

Kenstein said he told Corker, "If your case is good then you have nothing to fear, but if it isn't, maybe you better rethink this whole matter and hire Tartaglia."

Ford requests more emergency and summer jobs

Meets delegation back from Vietnam

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford asked Congress yesterday for more than $2 billion to extend 310,000 emergency government jobs six more months and to create 760,000 more jobs for young people this summer.

Ford also ordered an immediate study on how best to help unemployed persons whose jobless benefits have expired.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said Ford's actions were not an indication that unemployment is getting worse, but were intended to ensure that his basic anti-recession program goes as planned.

Aside from economic issues, Ford met yesterday with the congressional delegation newly returned from an inspection trip to South Vietnam and Cambodia, and with the leaders of a forthcoming Senate study of the Central Intelligence Agency.

According to Nessen, Ford will ask Congress for $1.625 billion more to continue until July 1, 1976, the 310,000 public service jobs he already had budgeted at $2.5 billion. Nessen said the Labor Department reported that unless it gets the extra money, it would have to start phasing out the 310,000 jobs this July.

The President also expects to ask Congress for $412 million for the 760,000 summer youth jobs because state and local governments have been spending too little federal aid funds on the program.

Nessen said $2.4 billion had been allocated to state and local governments for various job training and employment projects, but the recession economy forced too much of the money to be used on items other than summer jobs.

Last year, he said, federal funds paid for 360,000 summer jobs and this year there would only be about 190,000 such jobs available without Ford's action.

The 760,000 jobs will be in addition to the 190,000 Nessen said.

Ford also ordered aides to complete promptly a study growing from his "concern about the possibility of unemployed workers exhausting their unemployment compensation benefits," a growing problem particularly in industrial states.

Ford also met Wednesday morning with Sens. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and John Tower, R-Tex., to discuss the Senate investigation of CIA operations which began later in the day.

Church, chairman of the special investigating committee, and Tower, its ranking GOP member, said they were satisfied with Ford's promise of cooperation, although the President had reserved the right to decide on a case-by-case basis whether requested documents were to be furnished.

Simon urges increased tax relief for middle, upper income groups

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Tax rebates should be concentrated on middle and upper income persons because they will buy cars, television sets and other items which must be sold if the recession is to end, Treasury Secretary William Simon said yesterday.

[illegible]

Simon repeatedly avoided questions as to whether he would recommend a veto of the final bill if the depletion repeal was included. Despite the Finance Committee's action, a Senate floor fight is certain, and the House may well insist on its amendment in a House-Senate conference.

CIA file on Abzug provokes argument

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Existence of a CIA file on Rep. Bella Abzug, D-N.Y., yesterday provoked an angry exchange between Director William Colby and the congresswoman, who was chairing a House committee hearing yesterday on privacy rights of Americans.

Mrs. Abzug charged the Central Intelligence Agency with following her since 1953, when she was a lawyer in private life, and with opening her mail.

Meanwhile, Sens. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and John Tower, R-Tex., won President Ford's pledge of cooperation with a Senate investigation of the CIA, with the reservation that he would review any requests for documents on a case-by-case basis.

In his formal statement at the opening hearing of the House subcommittee on government information and individual rights, Colby testified there were countless ways Americans could have been named in CIA files over the past 27 years, often without their knowledge.

Cutting of welfare rolls proposed

Kelly says bill will win support

BOSTON (AP) — Legislation to eliminate able-bodied men under an undetermined age from welfare rolls will soon be proposed by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and will win legislative support, Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly Jr. said yesterday.

Following a committee hearing on a $1.2 million deficiency budget to pay for 255 additional social worker positions ordered by a federal judge, Kelly said he expects the legislature to reach a compromise with Dukakis on an age limit for the cutoff.

[illegible]

Kelly said the age ceiling for the cutoff could be lowered to 30 or 26 years in an effort to cut the general relief caseload by perhaps 50 per cent.

Kelly also revealed a new strategy for meeting the court order of U.S. District Court Judge Frank Freedman on filling the social worker positions.

Under the plan, state workers who would be laid off their present jobs in mental health or youth service facilities would be transferred to the Welfare Department and hired as social workers.

A U.S. District Court of Appeals decision this week gave the state until March 14 to meet Freedman's order or suffer the loss of $500 million in federal welfare reimbursements.

[illegible]

the so-called lateral transfers of state workers will eventually be returned to the House for concurrence.

To meet federal requirements, and the court order, social workers who now handle General Relief cases — which involve no federal funds — would be transferred to welfare cases in the Aid to Families with Dependent children AFDC category.

State workers who are laid off their present jobs would then be transferred into General Relief casework.

At the same time, Kelly said the state will seek ways to reduce the General relief caseload which, he said, is rising mainly because of apparently illegal additions of college students.

In apparent reference to plans for reducing the General Relief case load, Kelly said, "I think we'll get into a situation where able-bodied men will have to work."

Asked where they would find jobs in a period of high unemployment, Kelly said, "They will go to work...somewhere. I suggest the state provide some type of employment."

US plane hit

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Heavy Communist shellfire ripped into Phnom Penh's airport, the lifeline link to the outside world yesterday hitting a U.S. airlift jet and halting all commercial air traffic to the besieged Cambodian capital.

U.S. military spokesmen said a chartered World Airways DC8 jet was hit by rocket shrapnel and sustained minor damage, but flew back to Saigon safely. The plane carrying rice, fuel and ammunition was the first reported hit since the U.S. airlift started last week.

Amherst Board of Health institutes new service

The Amherst Board of Health has begun HEALTH HELP, 253-7066, its new Information and Referral service for health related inquiries.

"We hope many people will take advantage of this chance to find out what health services are available to them right here in town and throughout the Pioneer Valley area," said Karen Smith, newly appointed head of HEALTH HELP. "We are equipped to handle health related inquiries from everyone, and to refer callers or visitors to appropriate agencies or services that can help them."

People with questions about child health, health programs for the elderly, clinics, hospitals, health screening, tests or evaluations, home care, extended care facilities, family planning, services for expectant and new mothers, mental health, drug or alcohol abuse counseling and many, many others may call or visit the Amherst Board of Health, in Town Hall, 8 a.m.-12 noon, 1 p.m.-4:30 p.m. Or telephone 253-7066.

HEALTH HELP is the product of joint planning by the Amherst Board of Health and the town Health Advisory Council to increase community health awareness and promote individual preventive health action.

The new service plans to inform residents of the many local health facilities already available to them, and to help them reach facilities and services for all health needs.

HEALTH HELP staff is looking forward to an increasing number of calls and visits, as more and more area residents become aware of the service.

"Everybody has at least one unmet health need, one health question they've always wanted to ask, but didn't know where to turn," said Smith. "Let's hope they contact HEALTH HELP, at 253-7066."

AIM member Means released in Denver

Bill Means, member of the American Indian Movement and brother of AIM co-founder, Russell Means, was released Tuesday after being detained in Denver, Colo. for the investigation of the possession of marijuana. The police could find no evidence other than two marijuana seeds and a roach clip. Upon investigation, the police also found that the guns discovered in the Means car were legally registered. After being detained for 48 hours, Means and the four people traveling with him were released with no charges pending.

Late Monday night, in the wake of five days of violence on the Pine Ridge Reservation, twenty rounds were fired through the house of Matthew King, long time interpreter for Oglala Sioux Holy Man, Frank Fools Crow.

The incident followed a series of confrontations between American Indian Movement members and their supporters and the local BIA policemen, headed by Tribal Chief, Richard Wilson. Wilson, whose self-styled "law and order" police squad has a long history of intimidation and harassment of Indians on the reservation, was reported as having threatened to "shoot up some houses if we have to". Wilson reportedly said this in the Kyle Community Center on the Pine Ridge Reservation just a few hours before the actual shooting took place.

When asked for a comment on the lack of response to shooting from the BIA police, the agency reported that "they hadn't had enough patrolmen to respond to the shooting."

Labor comm. designs units for bargaining

BOSTON (UPI) – The Massachusetts Labor Relations Commission has designed 10 bargaining units for state employees, clearing the way for negotiated wage increases, possibly within the current year.

In the decision announced Tuesday the commission designated 10 specific categories of employees, five professional and five non-professional, under which state employees will be able to bargain for pay hikes for the first time.

State officials said actual negotiations could begin "very soon" if the labor relations decision is not challenged in the courts.

The commission decision does not cover employees of state colleges who will continue to bargain for wages with boards of trustees.

See 'Libba' Cotten

The [illegible] Coffeehouse is sponsoring, March 7, at [illegible], Mt. Holyoke College at 8:30 p.m., the beautiful and wonderful music of Elizabeth "Libba" Cotten.

Elizabeth "Libba" Cotten, the composer of "Freight Train," "Washington Blues," and many other traditional music favorites, was born in Chapel Hill, North Carolina in 1893. As a young girl, she became proficient on both the banjo and guitar and played lead in the family parlor band. Inspired by the railroad near her home, Libba composed "Freight Train" before the age of twelve. She remained in musical obscurity until the 1940's, when, after having moved to the Washington, D.C. area, she was "discovered" by the noted collector and performer of traditional music, Mike Seeger. Libba has since recorded the Folkways albums, "Elizabeth Cotten, Folk Songs and Instrumentals with Guitar" and "Elizabeth Cotten, Volume 2," both of which have become classic traditional music recordings. Libba performs widely; her credits include appearances at folk festivals at Newport, Philadelphia, Smithsonian, Wolf Trap, Mariposa and many others; night clubs and coffee houses in many cities; several college campus tours; and TV appearances on "Great American Dream Machine," Laura Weber's "Guitar, Guitar," and Pete Seeger's "Rainbow Quest." A charming personality and story teller, Libba's ability to communicate with diverse audiences is remarkable. Her guitar arrangements of "Freight Train," "Wilson Rag," "Spanish Flang Dang," "Washington Blues," and "Honey Babe," "Your Papa Cares For You" have become integral parts of every serious guitar instrumentalist's repertoire.

3/'Houston 12,' Free

The trial of five of the political activists known as the "Houston 12" ended on Feb. 11, in acquittals on the charges of "assault with intent to murder a police officer."

Charges against Miguel Trujillo, Alex Rodriguez, and Jose [illegible], three Chicano men, were dropped. The two Anglos, William Christiansen and Barbee Hale, were found guilty on lesser charges of "aggravated assault against a police officer," and received sentences of one and two years probation.

The trial stemmed from a demonstration held in southwest Houston on October 9, 1973, three days after the outbreak of the Arab-Israeli war. Youth Against War and Fascism (YAWF) organized a picket line of about twenty-five people to protest a rally being held to protest a rally being held to raise money and support for Israel.

The purpose of the picket line was to alert people to the danger of American military intervention in the Mideast, and to expose the political and economic nature of the United States' role there.

"Houston is the headquarters for the oil companies like Tenneco and Shell, and these companies are very influential in the politics of this town," said Alex Rodriguez at the time of the demonstration.

"The public exposure of their schemes to seize control of the oil in the Mideast is something they want to stop," he continued.

Many of the demonstrators had aroused the anger of the Houston Police Dept. a few days earlier, when they had protested police brutality in the Chicano and Black neighborhoods. The protest took place at the graduation ceremony of Houston's police cadet academy.

When the peaceful demonstration against the pro-Israel rally was about to disperse, the police moved in and started clubbing people with flashlights, blackjacks, handcuffs and pistols. Within minutes, more than one hundred police in twenty-five patrol cars arrived on the scene, backed up by attack dogs, paddy wagons and a helicopter. Twelve of the picketers were arrested and brutally beaten.

The defense committee for the Houston 12 says the widespread support from the Chicano community, as well as national support, heavily influenced the outcome of the trial. On Jan. 26, 2,000 people from Houston and other parts of the country arrived in a show of support for the defendants, while a packed courtroom heard testimony during the week preceding the trial.

All twelve defendants, however, face yet another trial, scheduled to begin February 25. They are charged with aggravated assault, which could bring a maximum sentence of two years in prison and a $1,000 fine.

But the Defense Committee says the worst is over, since the charges dropped so far — assault with intent to murder a police officer — could have resulted in a sentence of life imprisonment.

"They couldn't get any of our members in jail," said one Defense Committee member.

On Professor Ross

To the Editor:

With the death of Professor William H. Ross on February 24th, the University of Massachusetts community lost a great teacher, energetic supporter and friend. He will long be remembered by the many students whom he taught during his forty-two years as a faculty member because he really cared for people. He gave of himself with his enthusiasm and time, and he was not above using unique ways of getting his ideas across to students. Bill was also a modest person who, in an unobtrusive manner, supported the programs of the University and the Amherst community in many ways.

I shall personally remember Bill Ross as the man who served as Mace Bearer at Commencement. The Mace Bearer is traditionally a faculty member who has received the University's Distinguished Teacher Award and, in 1962, William Ross, Professor of Physics, was the University's first recipient of this honor. He proudly carried out this assignment in recent years despite the physical handicap of arthritis, and in all the varieties of weather which seem to haunt Commencement.

The Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts was most fortunate to have had Bill Ross as a teacher, colleague and friend. We shall miss him.

Vet school a swindle?

To the Editor:

An AP from Boston was carried by the Collegian on Mon., March 3, 1975. It announced 30 openings for New England veterinary students to come from the University of Pennsylvania.

This is not going to solve the problems for the pre-veterinary student, nor will it prevent the severe shortage of veterinarians in this state.

First of all, the U.Penn. Veterinary School is on academic probation for overcrowding. It is only of 3rd accredition because it does not have the facilities to teach the small animal practioner.

If the states were to arrange "contracts" with the U.Penn School, pre-veterinary students would no longer even be considered by other Vet schools that they may wish to go to [ones that are better equipped]. These other veterinary schools would inform the applicant that his state already has a "contract" with U.Penn. and would suggest that he-she apply there.

Also, if these "contracts" were to go through, the state taxpayers would pay $16,024 per student per year for 4 years. Most of this money would be exported, for according to the New England Board of Higher Education figures, 3 out of every 4 of these veterinary students will NOT come back to New England to practice. Thus, not only will we be exporting money, but we will still have an increasing shortage of vets in New England.

Also, without an upright School of Veterinary Medicine in New England, we will not have the diagnostic clinics and research facilities so badly needed in New England.

I only hope our legislators and taxpayers will "look before they leap" into an expensive and nonrewarding proposition such as "contracts."

Women's Day activity

To the Editor:

In recognition of International Women's Day on March 8, the Amherst Young Workers Liberation League is sponsoring an activity today March 6, at 8:00 p.m. in Room 168 Campus Center. It will be entitled "Women in the Struggle: Equality, National Liberation and Peace." There will be speakers on the role of women in South Africa, Puerto Rico, the Mid-East, the United States and Cuba. The speakers will deal with the condition of women in those countries as well as the contribution women are presently making in the fight against racism and apartheid, national oppression and imperialism, for Peace, National Liberation, Independence and Socialism.

Greeks and 'the fee'

To the Editor:

There has, of late, been much talk of the proposed Universal Fee and its possible economic repercussions on the student body and the Greek Area in particular. Granted, economics are essential to the argument against such a fee, but it is our opinion that economics aren't the whole issue. There are so many other highly valuable ways in which the Greek Area contributes to the well-being of both the community and the University. As Greeks, and as Presidents of Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity and Chi Omega Sorority, we feel that these less publicized, but nontheless viable assets are in dire need of consideration by everyone.

The Greek Area serves as an excellent source of public relations for the community. For example, every year the senior citizens of the town are [illegible]

Notations on Nollet...

To the Editor:

I would to respond to a few of the obscurities in James Nollet's "Landlord's Lament." It is possible to be tolerant with much of the misguided rhetoric that the mandatory residency litigation has produced, but I fear that even the biblical Job would be drained of all patience by such fool's shit as Mr. Nollet's comment of 4 March.

The general weakness of Nollet's argument is the fundamental relationships he fails to observe in his discussion of "simple and capitalist" solutions to Amherst's housing dilemma. The most important of these is the one which exists between the group that controls the University and those who are controlled. We as students come to the University with a basic expectation of two service commodities for our money: To attain an education and acceptable food and shelter while attempting to get that education. Setting aside the question of the validity of a UMass education, we examine the issue of housing. It is here that we discover some intolerable aspects: Should Nollet or the reader scan the Collegian of March 4 she or he finds that "Baker residents [are] sick of living in sheer filty."

Further research indicates that every report filed on the residency system [including the affidavits of the suit plaintiffs] speaks of overcrowding, crime, unhealthy conditions and general psychological discomfort with the lifestyles dictated by dorm residency. Within a situation such as this the relationship between administration and students becomes a twisted one in which the physical and emotional needs of the one are exploited for maximization of efficiency with its attendant economic gain for the other. I would submit that even Mr. Nollet's imaginary "quasi-contract" lacks an exploitation-justification clause.

The onus is clearly on the University. Not only do the "owners" of the school [the trustees] control the students who attend that school, but they also exert a determining influence on the economic and ecological well-being of much of the Pioneer Valley. With this power in hand the trustees have some options for action on the pressing problem of adequate housing for UMass students. [illegible]

Educational ideals: Don't look back

With cumes on the rise and nontraditional education on the chopping block, the time has come for students to seriously begin developing their role in the procedure of academic affairs.

Any student who has ever wondered why they are here, (and who among us doesn't fall into that category), should begin to seriously consider what input, if any, we have in determining what the University should be.

There is something wrong when students tend to opt for easier credits in the same area and end up with higher marks than those who chose the harder offerings but probably learned more from a course.

There is something wrong when cases such as the above result in an average cum of 3.0 at this University while those who decided not to take courses pass-fail and suffer out a semester of work end up with a cum of 2.5.

There is something wrong when much of this University is looked upon as a game. Once you learn the rules and devise short-cuts, you can end up with a high grade report for little more than watching television and getting to know bartenders.

I am not advocating a return to stricter, more traditionalist education in any sense, I would merely like to point out some of the injustices which innovation has caused and propose a means by which students could benefit on their own terms, through competition within their own values.

As I see it, a University should offer two options; anyone coming here should be able to obtain knowledge whether it be for professional standing, or for their own personal growth. If one wants to major in an area which requires strict academics such as pre-med, one should only have to compete with his peers. That competition should be rough. But the case should be radically different for someone who comes to a university to pursue education. For the very idea of pursuit of knowledge for knowledge sake is contradictory to structure. And that is where the mistakes are being made in our system.

At any given hour when school is in session here, there are at least fifty different lectures, discussions and seminars going on simultaneously on campus which are often more relevent and more stimulating than whatever one may be attending at that same time. The fifteen credit hour rut is a drag which inhibits personal inquisitiveness and often discourages academic quality. People don't learn anything unless they want to — just try to remember the quadratic equation you memorized in high school, or if you like math, try to remember the leading characters in Tale of Two Cities.

An ideal program is one where students determine their goals and are then informed of classes to attend and books to read. The students may then take part in discussions and report progress and new goals to an advisor-teacher. When that teacher or goal is exhausted a new one can be found. Meanwhile, the student must also be given channels through which they can become an active part of the community in an effective way.

Of course I'm off the wall, surely I'm a sickening idealist. But these ideas aren't mine, I got them from Plato, who set the idea centuries ago. When I hear people talking about revising systems, returning to no pass-fail, and adding F's back to the cume due to the failures of certain programs, I only think it is time to remind ourselves of the reason why we are here and what those programs were aimed to accomplish. And just because they failed it is no reason to return to Victorian education.

Thanks to such programs as UYA, PTen, the School of Ed, BDIC in both their success and failure, we have come a little closer to ideal education...it's not time to regress.

Render unto Caesar what he seizes

Last Monday the Executive editor and myself jointly penned an article entitled State of Siege Issue. Since its publication I have further contemplated the events surrounding and leading up to its conception and final genesis in print. This sudden erruption of callous irritation on the part of Campus Center security surely necessitates much more than a mere commentary initiated by a small provoked assemblage of journalists.

Each day countless letters and commentaries pass through the editor's hands and wend their way to the presses. After an initial reading the average letter or commentary ceases to have any affect on the reader, nevertheless the author.

[illegible]

But fear not, for like all bureaucratic organizations, Amherst Towing can be bought off! A quiet ten dollars, slipped nonchalantly into the driver's hand can save your car from untold expense! It happens every day and recently the siezers made the mistake of propositioning a member of the campus media.

Scott Bacherman, program director at WMUA dared to defie the terrorists when last week he came upon them in the process of removing his car. Granted he was parked illegally, as is the case in most incidences, but there was still enough [illegible] for the police to take hold of.

By this time station manager Marc Berman had contacted Collegian photographer Bill Howell and the photo that appears here was taken. A crowd began to gather. Pressure was rising on the authorities. Robert Kittle, also of Public Safety, approached Bacherman.

"If you would cooperate with the law we could avoid this waste of time. Just pay us ten dollars and we'll let you go."

"Just let me have my car and I won't hassle you any more," retorted Bacherman. It was another hour [illegible] happened; I believe they call it politics.

The people, if that's not too cliche, do not have to stand for this! We do not want the present system to continue. The prices are outrageous; the service ridiculous. Try digging your car out of a "plowed" parking lot. How much money goes to the parking office? Some tune close to a million, and try to drive down behind the Chemical laboratories, or near the farms behind the Text Book Annex area without cracking an axel!

The whole business goes well beyond mere parking problems. It is a downright invasion on our privacy and private property. A short time after snapping the aforementioned photo, Bill Howell was [illegible]

Anthony Newman in concert tomorrow night at Bowker

Anthony Newman, harpsichordist-organist, will appear in concert at 8 p.m. tomorrow, March 7, in Bowker Auditorium. This will mark the final performance of the season in the University of Massachusetts Arts Council Chamber Music Series.

In 1967, Newman made his recital debut in New York. "Anthony Newman and the pedal harpsichord arrived last night for a joint debut at the Carnegie Recital Hall," reported the New York Times, "and neither is likely to be forgotten soon. Certainly Newman's technical mastery matches the best in the keyboard field."

Newman has issued six LP's on Columbia Records including THE GOLDBERG VARIATIONS, SIX BRANDENBURG CONCERTOS and MUSIC FOR ORGAN. Tickets are now on sale at the Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, 545-0202, and are priced at $4 and $3 for the general public; half-price for UMass-Amherst students.

'Astrology in Roman life' tonight

Tonight at 8 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center, Prof. Jean Rhys Bram of Hunter College, New York will offer a lecture on astrology in Roman life. Prof. Bram has translated Firmicus Maternus' work Mathesis (Knowledge) from the Latin and this translation will be published in the Spring.

Home Ec scholarships available

The Eastern Massachusetts Home Economics Association has made available four $250.00 scholarships for 1975-76 for students majoring in Home Economics. These scholarships are a gift, not a loan, and are applied against tuition.

Applications for this scholarship are in Room 104, Skinner Hall. Deadline for filing your application is March 10, 1975.

Hampshire comedy depicts student life in campus apartment

"Oh, Boo-Boop-de-Doo," an original musical comedy, will be presented at Hampshire College tonight on March 7, 8, and 9. Written and directed by Hampshire student Ann Reddig, the play features a cast of nine, dancers, and a chorus. The ragtime music was composed by Sarah Weeks, and the choreography is by Lisa Leizman, both Hampshire students.

"Oh, Boo-Boop-de-Doo" tells the story of four university students living in a campus apartment together.

The play will be presented at Emily Dickinson Hall Performing Arts Center. Tickets, at 75 cents each, may be reserved by calling 542-4620, or may be purchased at the door. The play will begin at 8 p.m.

Field work anyone?

The Women's Studies Program offers students the opportunity to earn University credit for work done in the community. Anyone interested in doing a field work project this semester or next should stop by the Women's Studies office and check out their field work resource file. Dale Melcher, the community resource person, has been working to compile an extensive resource list of possible field work placements in the Amherst-Northampton area, keeping in mind the focus of women's studies, areas of majors and transportation problems.

Please call Dale at the office or leave a note if you're interested in a particular area for field work and want help finding an agency to work in. If you've already located a field work project, please stop by and pick up the approval forms.

Outdoor Group offering...

The Outdoor Interest Group will be offering some one credit colloquia this semester. One of these classes began this Wednesday, March 5.

A colloquia, The Whale Study Group, offers a chance to learn about whales—their biology, the history of whaling and the ecology of marine mammals.

The format of this course is fairly open. A tentative outline consists of lectures in March by the instructors, combined with readings and discussion. After Spring vacation the course will consist of a series of speakers and films. A field trip to a whaling museum remains another strong possibility.

Anyone interested in becoming part of this one credit experience should call [illegible] or [illegible]. The course meets Wednesdays at 7 p.m.

Another colloquia beginning after the March vacation, is the Natural History of the Connecticut River Valley co-ordinated by Tom Pruner.

This course is designed with the intent of using human resources within the valley to aid ourselves in understanding the area we live in.

The format of the course will be a series of weekend day trips to areas of interest guided by people who have specialties in some aspect of the valley's natural history.

Other colloquia sponsored by the Outdoor Interest Group this spring will be Bicycling, Birdwatching and possibly Canoeing, Kayaking, Rafting and Nature Photography. Details on these courses will be forthcoming.

More information concerning the time and place of this colloquia will appear in a later Collegian, or you may call Tom Pruner at [illegible].

Commuters seek teachers

The Commuter Assembly Office needs undergraduates to teach accredited colloquia courses in the following areas: academic counseling, canoeing, hiking and camping, tenant's survival, the dynamics of how to buy a new or used car, appliance repair, woodworking, bicycle repair and maintenance, town government, auto repair—both basic and advanced, Volkswagen repair, first aid, audio visual equipment instruction, sports, and career counseling.

You receive two credits for teaching the course and your students receive one credit for taking it. You are encouraged to teach the course in your living area. Also, to enhance your teaching skills, a teacher training workshop is offered.

If you are skilled or knowledgeable in one of the above areas, or have something else you would like to teach, you can pick up a proposal form in the Commuter Assembly Office, Room [illegible] Student Union, the Academic Affairs Office, Room [illegible] Student Union, and the Commuter Affairs Office, Room [illegible] Whitmore.

Any questions or ideas you have should be directed to Tom Coffey at the Commuter Assembly Office [illegible], or at home [illegible].

Don't let the price of a college education stop you.

The price of a college education is skyrocketing. Fortunately the Air Force has done something to catch up with it. For the first time, the Air Force ROTC Scholarships include the 2-year program, for both men and women.

If you can qualify, the Air Force will pay for the remainder of your college education. Not only do AFROTC 2-year college scholarships cover full tuition, but reimbursement for textbooks, lab and incidental fees, as well as a tax-free monthly allowance of $100.

To cash in on all this just apply, qualify, and enroll in the Air Force ROTC at ______________

It's a great way to finish your college education in the money, and build a future where the sky's no limit . . . as an officer in the Air Force.

Judo club to test skills at Temple

By BILL ELIAS

On March 7 and 8 the UMass Judo Club will be traveling to Philadelphia to test their ability against universities from the entire east coast.

Sponsored by Temple University the Eastern Collegian Judo Championship is divided into two days of competition. Opening day, Friday, will consist of matches from the six weight divisions; 139 lbs. and under, 139 lbs. – 154 lbs., 154 lbs. – 165 lbs., 165 lbs. – 176 lbs., 176 lbs. – 205 lbs., and 205 lbs. and up.

The final day of the tournament will involve team championships utilizing the five best Judo players from each school. In this competition all matches are chosen at random with no weight restrictions. This means a player 120 lbs. could be fighting an opponent weighing 220 lbs.

Each match lasts 3 to 5 minutes unless a player executes a clean throw (called an ippon), which instantly wins the match.

The judo club at UMass has been together for six years and competing in the Eastern Judo Championships over the last few years. It meets twice a week, Tuesdays and Thursdays, at 7:00 in the Boyden gymnasium wrestling room.

Teacher (Sen Sei) of the class is 2nd degree black belt Billy Stevens. Eight of his pupils, almost all brown belts will be competing in Philadelphia. The competing members are; Adam Cohen and Jim Javaris in the 139 lbs. – 154 lbs. division, Tony Fiore and Steve Houle in the 154 lbs. – 165 lbs. weight class, Kevin Homewood and Jim Young from 165 lbs. – 176 lbs., and Ray Allard at 205 lbs. and over.

Judo is a Martial art taken from Jujitso in the 19th century by Jigoro Kano. Kano used the non-killing aspects of Jujitso to form his art. This "gentle way" emphasizes throwing techniques, hold downs, chokes, and arm bars.

The ranking system; white belt, green belt, brown belt, and black belt, is used in most of the martial arts. White belts are worn by beginners progressing to the black belt for experts.

This system started long ago when teacher and student practiced outdoors. A student just learning would have a white belt. The more he practiced the darker the belt would get from contact with the ground. Green at first from the grass, then gradually darker and darker. When one was wearing a very dark belt it was evident he had practiced a great deal.

For that reason he was thought to be expert in his art.

Todays' system is not nearly as crude, belts of darker color are awarded after much practice and work under the teachers supervision.

shooting, or playing defense. (Say hello to Moses Williams - 5 rebounds in 3 minutes vs. Thames Valley, Jon Bingham's 4-4 shooting also vs. Thames Valley, Bob Minihan 4 points in 1 minute vs. Sienna, and Ed Shirley - 3 defensive steals during the 3rd overtime against Springfield.)

A feature which several J.V. Basketball teams do not follow is the full utilization of the entire squad. What made the triple overtime win over Springfield that much better was that UMass used the entire squad while Springfield only used 9 out of their 12 players. According to Coach Gaudette, "If a player has practised hard all week, then I'll try to let him get into the game. Putting somebody in does not mean an end to the game, no matter what the score is."

The final ingredient which made the success of the team was the players confidence in their coach. As Glen Taylor put it, "What makes Coach Ken Gaudette a winning coach is his communication with his players. He knows his stuff well and transmits it in a manner that we all respect him for."

It's a team philosophy of playing like a unit more than just individuals that best describes the success of this team. It's too bad this concept doesn't filter into more professional sports teams. Perhaps winning would be more enjoyable and losing less painful if it did.

Swimwomen's Griffin a dedicated coach

By STEVE TETREAULT

The UMass women's athletic program, including the woman's swim team, has shown steady progress over the past several years, according to woman's swim coach Pat Griffin, despite a feeling of "inhibition" imposed as a result of the UMass athletic setup.

According to Griffin, coaches of women's sports are assigned to the Physical Education Department and the coaches of men sports to the Athletic Department. As members of the PE staff, the women are expected to carry classes and do clerical work, besides coaching.

"If you're a dedicated coach, you will spend much of your time with your team, and teaching might suffer as a result. What I sometimes end up doing is working full time with the swim team and another full time on teaching duties," she said.

Griffin's swimming program has improved immensely over the four years that she has been coach. Four years ago, the team had eight members and won 1 dual meet. It has steadily progressed to the point where 28 women are now involved, and the team this year has finished 4th in New England and 8th in the East. Also this year, the team is sending four representatives to the Nationals, to be held next week in Arizona. They are Penny Noyes, Melon Dash, Cindy Whiting and Reenie Groden.

In the course of its rise, the team has outgrown its schedule. "We would like to expand our schedule next year, for we have outgrown the Yankee Conference, but that costs money," said Griffin. The woman's swim team has a budget of $2300 this year, as compared to $700 four years ago.

She is requesting a budget increase next year, partly to upgrade the team's schedule and partly to hire an assistant, preferably a diving coach.

Griffin was a swimmer at University of Maryland during her college days, specializing in freestyle and butterfly events. "I was All-College freestyle, but the swimming quality in the Washington area was very low," she said.

In accounting for her team's relative success, Griffin revealed that, depending on the schedule and season, the team workouts vary. "At the beginning of a season, the team works hard, which tires them out but builds a foundation. As the season progresses, its merely a matter of keeping tuned," she said.

"In addition I remember that this is a "college team", she said. "Swimmers may have studying and other things to do. I impose no rules, practices are not mandatory, and I don't make cuts. If there is room in the pool, I will keep swimmers."

"I call this 'feminist coaching'. It is providing an opportunity for women to swim, but also to learn a little about themselves."

Swim women at CConn

The UMass women's swim team will take to the road one last time for their final dual meet of the season tonight against Central Connecticut.

After a somewhat confusing season of cancelled meets, the team has compiled an over all meet record of 4-2. They will attempt to add a win to their record tonight against the brand new Connecticut team. (This is Central Conn's first meet ever.)

The task might not be as easy as it seems for the UMass women, though, as top contenders, Cindy Whiting, Melon Dash, Carol Griffiths, Penny Noyes, and Reese Groden sit at the meet out. UMass Coach Pat Griffin is [illegible] new faces this time and hopes to see UMass times improve.

UMass men swimmers prepare for New Englands - try for new marks

By BOB HIGGINS

A year ago, members of the UMass men's swim team set six University records in the New England championships at Brown University. Eight members of this year's squad will be returning to Providence today through Saturday in an attempt to repeat last year's record-shattering performances.

The eight men who will be competing are co-captain Joe Hebert, Ben Crocker, Harry [illegible], Russ [illegible], Dave and Ron Boucher, Duncan Lomas, and diver Earl McAllister. Of these swimmers, only one (McAllister) will not be returning to the next year's squad.

The Minutemen are coming off one of their poorer performances of the season. "I was not satisfied with many of the times," said Coach Roy Melamed, referring to last Saturday's tri-meet with the Universities of Vermont and New Hampshire, which his team split. "I hope they do better in the New Englands." The team is well rested and should be ready, according to the coach.

The swimmer that Melamed expects the most from is breaststroker Dave Boucher. "I think he could be a finalist in the 200 yard breast," said the coach.

It is doubtful that any other swimmer will be able to place high in any events. However, Melamed hopes that many swimmers will improve their times considerably, and perhaps break some school records. Last year, for instance, distanceman Ben Crocker set three school records (500, 1000, and 1650 free), and Melamed thinks he should be able to break at least the 500 record this year.

Jayvee Bball wrapup, team of the future

By MIKE BERGER

Coach Ron Gaudette of Thomas Valley probably said it best when his team was thoroughly beaten by the J.V. Minutemen 96-55. "Never have I seen a 13 man squad display such hustling and cohesiveness. Their fast break wasn't as impressive as the fact that whoever Coach Gaudette substituted did not let up in intensity."

If you were one of the basketball zealots who showed up 2 hours before every varsity game, you were one of the fortunate to witness the development of a productive and well running machine.

The J.V. basketball team recently finished a most successful basketball season with a record of 9-4. But what was most impressive about the squad was just the quality of "team basketball" exhibited.

Coach Ron Gaudette explained the achievement of the team in this manner. "The reason for the team's success was just their development as a team. They are just an aggressive group of individuals who have made up for a lack in height or shooting ability with aggressive hustle. As a result, they have won several games this year which on paper, they should have lost."

It was the hustle and aggressiveness that earned the J.V. Minutemen victories over Springfield (86-84), Holy Cross (87-85) and Connecticut (66-64) despite being behind by as much as 10 points in all three games. And when they were not in nail biting contests, their immense strength in displaying the fastbreak was demonstrated with scores of 86-68 vs Siena, 86-71 over New Hampton, 87-45 over Amherst and 96-55 over Thomas Valley.

With the advent of the rule which allows freshmen to play Varsity, only one of the J.V. players, Chuck [illegible], was recruited or on scholarship. After a tryout of 80 candidates, Coach Gaudette found himself with 13 different levels of abilities in shooting, rebounding, and in playing defense. At the beginning of the year, Gaudette felt that the team would be lucky to win 6 games. But what transpired during the season is both a credit to the players and the coach.

Freshman Mike Pyatt's jump to the Varsity looked extremely damaging to the success of the team. Without the 6'5 195 pound Pyatt, UMass had no one to contend with opposing centers and forwards that were as tall as 6-8 and 6-7. As a result of this lack of height, UMass had to beat their opponents by being over aggressive, and by hustling just a little bit more. Pyatt's departure to the Varsity gave 6-4 Mike [illegible], 6-3 Don Byrd, and 6-2 Glen Taylor the chance to dominate the offensive and defensive boards. Using their quickness, agility, and the knowledge of blocking out their men, they were able to grab offensive and defensive rebounds and start the strong point of this team - the fast break.

Besides a domination in rebounding, the following had to happen for UMass's fastbreak to work. 1) There had to be quick aggressive guards who knew how to quarterback the team and hit the open man. Joe Mariano, Joe [illegible] and Dave Snader competently filled these positions. 2) Accurate and consistent shooters. Chuck [illegible]'s 20 point average and 49 per cent shooting led the team almost every game. However, one could more times than not count on Glen Taylor, Don Byrd, and Proctor Daniels to chip in with 12, 10, and 8 points respectively. 3) An intimidating and opportunistic defense. Never was the defense any better as it was in the triple overtime victory over Springfield when Ed [illegible] and Joe [illegible] led UMass with a total of 7 steals and 3 blocked shots between them. 4) Capable substitutes who could enter the game at a moment's notice and immediately pick up the team, whether it was rebounding,

Expansionitis

The scene is inside the office of Uranium City general manager Jacques Lucre who is awaiting the arrival of the star and best skater on the Uranium City Radiations, Rinsey Hoarfrost. Two nights ago January 21, 1987 in Hattiesburg, Hoarfrost kicked the goal net in a fit of anger and ripped the mesh beyond repair. Although the Radiations sat on the Hattiesburg Hats 5-2, Lucre is fuming about more than his team's 7-67-1 record. As the renowned center, who earns $2,613.98 per Hockey League, ('cause all the big cities already have teams), enters the room whistling, Lucre stand to greet his superstar.

"Hellllo, Rinsey," blurts the GM.

"Good mornin' Mr. Lucre. Gosssh, what'ya want me for?"

"Welllll, it's about the other night in Hattiesburg. Now we know very well that we can't have you going around ripping nets in expansion cities like you did against the Hats, don't we Rinsey?"

"We do?" mumbles Hoarfrost, but quickly recovers, "Gee, yes sir Mr. Lucre."

"The new teams are having trouble paying the players and making enough money to run the [illegible] between periods. If your inconsideration of expansion teams continues, we'll just have to take it out of your paycheck," lectures Lucre. "Why just last week you speared and completely destroyed the [illegible] around the rink in Ketchum. [illegible]"

Just as Hoarfrost is about to speak, Lucre continues, "Another example in the past month is the time you shattered [illegible] goalie mask with a slapshot from the red line. Now, can the [illegible] manage to buy [illegible] another mask? Of course not," the Uranium City executive replies to his own question. "And that means that [illegible] will refuse to play the rest of the season without a mask. [illegible] So you know what that means, Rinsey?"

"Not exactly, Mr. Lucre," responds a confused Hoarfrost.

"Well let me tell you. It means that there will only be 39 teams left in the NAHCHL. Now realistically, how can we compete with the other seventeen leagues in the country? I know you're sorry, Hoarfrost, but there's no excuse for your disregard of the expansion teams. It will cost you a $2,500 fine. That's all. Now let's get that team of yours prepared for the big home game against the [illegible]; we want to please all of our 300 fans."

"Thank Mr. Lucre, I know I deserve worse. I'll try to be more careful on our next road trip."

As Uranium City's top scorer [illegible] exits and shuts the door of the office, Lucre leans back in his swivel chair, takes a puff on his cigar, smiles and says aloud to himself: "If only those critics of expansion who were so skeptical and opposed to hockey expansion way back in 1975 could be here now to see how much better hockey really is with expansion. I'm sure they would be able to see for themselves that the talent in hockey hasn't been diluted. Why, even a rational man like myself can see that."

Senate supports

The Student Senate moved last night to provide three buses to transport students to Springfield for the planned protest of the ECAC's tournament selections. Supporters of the rally plan to meet at 3:30 p.m. and leave at about 4 from Boyden.

Othmar Schoeck: Dirty old man or postal inspector ?

Weir Chrissemer: Not insane, ultimately responsible

Schoeck Unto None

(a conversational nocturne for conductor and contrabuffoon)

by Your Sacred Cowboy and Mike Kaylek, not to mention Wier Chrissemer and Penn Jillette, without whom...

Who is Othmar Schoeck, and why isn't he saying anything about anybody? Well, for one thing, he doesn't care, and for another...he's dead (Ahhhh...). And to celebrate this event the Othmar Schoeck Memorial Society for The Preservation of Unusual and Disgusting Music is performing The Beethoven Ninth Symphony on Saturday, March 8, at Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College. We spoke to the musical director and conductor of the O.S.M.S.P.U.D.M., Wier Chrissemer, and his [illegible] sidekick, bodyguard, and dwarf, Penn Jillette. We began by asking him whether or not he believed it possible to objectively experience one's own death and carry a tune. Wier told us he was glad we asked that question. We next asked him how the whole thing began:

Below The Salt: How did the whole thing begin?

Wier: That's a very exciting story...I decided I wanted to play funny music.

B.T.S.: What gave you the inspiration for this?

Wier: I am an inspired person.

B.T.S.: But there wasn't any one source of inspiration...it wasn't Frank Zappa, it wasn't...

Penn: I think it was more the opposite of that; it was that no one was really doing this well.

Wier: No one was doing it, period.

B.T.S.: Ohhhh, here we go. I see Peter Schickle and P.D.Q. Bach are going to be in town, when is it, the week after your concert?

Wier: Shhh.

Penn: Peter Schickley sucks dead rats.

B.T.S.: But seriously, tell us about P.D.Q. Bach. Did you ever hear him before you started?

Wier: Yes, I heard his first album, which I consider to be one of his best. The only thing he did which is comparable to what we do now is the "Unbegun Symphony," which is a three-movement piece using exclusively themes from the classics in combination, rapid profusion. But that's not done as well as it could have been; the harmonies at times get very messy and it's just like a lot of people playing different tunes instead of an organized piece. The type of humor is fairly similar.

B.T.S.: So your music is better from a quality standpoint?

Penn: Well, one of the things Peter Schickley has over us...Am I saying his name right, Schickley?

B.T.S.: Schickle, I think.

Penn: The thing Schickley has over us is the ability to pay musicians very, very well, to have them practice as often as he wants.

Wier: Yes, that is really my major difficulty, getting people who are musical enough and with enough sense of humor. And who have the time to be dedicated to the Schoeck cause.

B.T.S.: You've got people who are holding down other jobs...

Penn: We've got people who are losing other jobs...

Wier: The Society's basic problem...money. Being able to put on a concert without losing...

Penn: To do something like this in a college town is an incredible plus and an incredible minus; the incredible plus being that there are a lot of people with free time who might have the knowledge to enjoy a Schoeck concert, and the incredible minus being that most Five College area people are used to getting entertainment incredibly cheap, and we're not funded by anybody.

Wier: It's also expensive in terms of my energy, to have to combat musicians who do not want to show up for rehearsals.

B.T.S.: Or who don't want to be funny?

Wier: Who don't want to be musical, is more of a problem. Everybody wants to be funny, drop their instruments, play wrong notes, wear different colored socks. They're not professionals, like symphony orchestra musicians.

Penn: I think all of this points to the reason why this is the last Schoeck concert. It's just that everything that can be accomplished with a pick-up group from the Five college area — and we're doing, so far, all the work — has been done on this one. This is the biggest one, and as for the last one...

Wier: And it's too expensive and too exhausting to do another one.

B.T.S.: Are you the total control man, Wier, are you ultimately responsible?

Wier: Yes. I pick the pieces, I arrange them, I get all the musicians together, I even copy out all the parts in my spare time. At work.

Penn: All of the musicians are very happy to have been in a Schoeck concert; none of them really welcome the prospect of working on a Schoeck concert. That is, everybody is very proud after having finished a Schoeck concert and getting all the laughs and all the applause, and it really feels good. But that's not their life.

B.T.S.: Do they usually feel it's been worth the work?

Wier: Their work, yes— they don't do anything. They rehearse, sometimes well, sometimes not very well, and they show up for the concert, and that's all.

Penn: You see, if you're a competent musician, the parts Wier writes aren't extremely difficult, so the major work lies in everything Wier does. For every ten hours that Wier puts in, all the musicians probably together put in an hour.

B.T.S.: How about the big O himself?

Penn: The big O?

B.T.S.: Othmar.

Penn: Oh!!! We refer to him as Mr. Schoeck, most of the time, or Schoeck-head.

B.T.S.: Well, perhaps the folks at home would like to know about Othmar.

Wier: Born September 1, [illegible], composed mostly songs, wrote some orchestral compositions, some chamber compositions, mostly songs. Over six hundred boring, boring songs. Died: March 8, 1957. I used to work at WAMH, and I found this record of his, the title translates, "Buried Alive." I put it on, and it was real, real boring. Real, real boring. And the other side was real, real boring. And it was... time seemed to stand still. And I said to myself, this person has something, this is far beyond normal boredom, this is transcendent boredom. And even more important was the radio audience reaction: it was entirely absent.

B.T.S.: Ahh, then you named the society after this gentleman because...

Wier: We figured Othmar had achieved something beyond the ordinary, a true genius as far as the total mastery of boredom was concerned, and we thought we would honor this gentleman...He looks like a cross between a dirty old man and a postal inspector.

B.T.S.: A lot of people dismiss this sort of thing as a goof...

Wier: It's not a goof. I take this music very seriously, because it's not funny, in the final analysis, if it's not...funny.

B.T.S.: So this is real music, then...

Wier: No, it's a goof. But really, we're not trying to say, hey, isn't it funny how classical musicans take themselves seriously. I think it's great that classical musicians take themselves seriously, because it's a serious business. And this should be taken as seriously...but the effect is humorous.

Penn: And a lot of the pieces, like the Toccata and Fugue in D Minor, even though it's being played on two accordians and a bass clarinet, once you get into them, aren't funny at all, they're just very, nice pieces. The reaction I saw at some of the other Schoeck concerts was, when you first see that a violin piece is going to be played on a xylophone, you laugh. When it starts to be played, usually you get into it, and like it, just like you would the regular violin piece; there might be a giggle at one expression...And at the end you applaud and laugh and you don't know which, which is exactly what we're working for. So that people aren't sure whether it's really, really good music or really, really funny. And the answer to, hopefully it is, that it's both.

(Tickets are $1.50, or two for [illegible], available at For the Record, Tripod Audio, Guitar Workshop, Earthworm, and Paul's Old Time Furniture Emporium.)

Harkness Ballet: Sensual, tender and absolute

by Susan Deskocil

The soon-to-be-disbanded-due-to-lack-of-funds Harkness Ballet gave an intense performance at Hartford's Bushnell Theater at 8 p.m. last Friday night. Directly back from their European Tour, they seemed to be giving us the most powerful performance of their companies short but incredible history, which began only 12 short years ago.

Time Out Of Mind, choreographed by Brian MacDonald, dealt with human as animal. Reminiscent of West Side Story's Rumble scene, this highly erotic dance would not have been performed as thoroughly [illegible] by any other dance company. [illegible]

[illegible]

I can't help but wonder what Europe thought of this one. They've had Bejart's sensual and tender dances, but have they had anything as clean cut and bold as this?

GOVERNOR DUKAKIS may hike state college tuitions.

Dukakis warns of tuition increases at state colleges; Bromery opposed

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Faced with a $425 million deficit, Gov. Michael Dukakis has warned that "reasonable increases" in tuition at state colleges and universities is necessary if a planned $169 million cut in higher education costs cannot be made.

Chancellor Randolph Bromery said yesterday he is "opposed to a tuition increase because the more you raise the tuition, the more you eliminate people who have recently gained access to higher education — namely, the lower-economic people."

Bromery said he is expecting increasing pressure to raise tuition from the Governor and legislators. "The problem is," Bromery said, "they're taxing the wrong people." Bromery believes free education should be extended to the baccalaureate degree and should not be ended after high school.

If tuition is increased at UMass it may be hiked 100 per cent. "The rumor is UMass tuition will increase 100 per cent," student government association president Rick Savini said.

Savini plans to meet with Dukakis, who was not available for comment yesterday, later this month. Savini hopes to rescind the Governor's warning. "Because of some bad connections, I've had trouble setting up a definite date to see Dukakis," Savini said. "I'd like to see him within two weeks."

When Savini was asked whether the Governor knows about the proposed universal fee, Savini said Dukakis is "probably not aware of it."

A spokesman for the Governor, Arthur Beaulieu, said the Governor has "not at this time" made a definite decision about the tuition hike.

Mary Fifield, Dukakis's press secretary, said late last night the Governor is considering many options at this time, but "no final determinations will be made within the next two weeks."

"I would have to say that to hike state university tuitions is just an idea the Governor is contemplating to help solve his budgetary problems," Fifield said.

CC manager may lose job

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night passed a motion that would delay renewal of a campus center manager's contract pending an investigation into "irregularities" in the billing procedure for a wedding held last August.

The Collegian reported yesterday that sources indicated that Steve Stefano, purchasing and produce manager, had not yet been billed for his daughter's wedding reception on August 18.

The board of governors also passed motions calling for the reaffirmation of its decision to rehire Tony Tamagla and the establishment of a committee to evaluate the performance of four Campus Center managers.

Campus Center Director John Corker told the board that he intended to fully investigate the case and that he felt it was a matter better undertaken by Campus Center staff rather than a board committee.

Board member John Hays pointed out that the case deserved special attention because Stefano's contract is due for renewal in "the next couple of days."

Supporting Hays' position, board member Jackie Joyner said, "If Mr. Stefano's contract were not coming up on Saturday it would be a different matter, but there is no way we can renew the contract until the matter is cleared up."

Three variations of a motion concerning the case of former Campus Center employee Tony Tamagla were presented to the Board during an hour long discussion on how the board should deal with the case. The final motion passed by the board charged that the board had been prevented from implementing its decision to rehire Tamagla because of "administrative manipulation."

The motion reaffirms the board's decision to rehire Tamagla and states that the issue should be taken directly to the Chancellor.

Commenting on the motion, board member Steve Louis said that it will bring Tamagla's grievances to the Chancellor and "if he doesn't solve it, the board decision will stick."

Board member Arthur Gould presented a motion to the board calling for the evaluation of the "performance records" of Campus Center managers Phil Ambos, Carl Villy, John Corker and Steve Stefano.

Gould said the evaluation process was not intended to be a "witch-hunt but neither is it going to be a white wash."

"There are questions in this building that need answers," Gould said "and that is what the committee established by this motion would be able to do."

UMass cops get $ break on DC meals

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

The UMass Police Department is the only state employer on campus taking advantage of a state law permitting Commonwealth workers to enjoy reduced meal costs, according to dining Food Services Director Arthur Warren.

Chapter Seven of the Massachusetts General Laws, otherwise known as the "Red Book," a 20 year old law or [illegible] "let "any state employee who is on duty may eat in state dining commons at a charge not more than 30 cents a meal."

"While Campus Police are the sole users of the privilege, not every police person does," said Capt. Robert G. Joyce. "The actual figure of police eating in the dining commons is not available."

According to Warren, the average meal costs 71 cents. "I guess that means that the students subsidize the other 41 cents," said Warren. Student meal ticket holders pay an average of $1.48 per meal.

Warren also said that there were "sticky legal questions" involved with student workers utilizing the privilege. Student dining commons workers are not eligible for the plan because they must hold meal tickets in order to work in the dining commons. Technically, other student employees can eat in the dining commons under the law but so far no one has tried, said Warren.

"I don't know what I would do if students tried to," said Warren. "I guess I would try and stop them."

The legality of the situation will be resolved once the Union of Student Em-

Should course forms be confidential

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery said last night he was "not aware" that course evaluation forms are confidential and not open to student inspection. He added he would look into it and "find out under what law they were ruled confidential."

English Department Head Joseph Frank said he would give 100 per cent approval to making the forms available to students, if there was also some sort of explanation about how the course was taught. Frank is also President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, a group heading a faculty union.

Professor David A. Booth, secretary of the faculty senate, said he had "no comment" on the issue.

UMass student attorney, William [illegible] has said that the confidential classification of the forms may be in violation of Massachusetts Public Records Law.

Frank said that easy teachers and those teaching voluntary courses usually get higher ratings, so that requirements of the course should be included with the evaluations.

At the end of each semester, students are asked to fill out extensive questionnaires to evaluate their courses and professors. The Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) has recently released a report in which they recommend that this information be made available to students, so that they would be more informed about courses.

Tenant group votes on Sunday

Married housing may become co-op

By DEBBIE SCHAFER
Staff Reporter

The UMass Tenants' Association (UMTA) will meet Sunday to vote on the possibility of Married Student Housing going cooperative.

UMTA organizers feel that as a co-op, they will be able to "eliminate the excessive costs which result from the inefficiencies of the University's maintenance and management."

Working toward this goal, the UMTA presented a summary of their research into cooperative housing plans to Chancellor Randolph Bromery and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert Gage on February 28. A copy of the plans have also been forwarded to the University Trustees.

[illegible]

Bromery's failure to respond to them.

The University administration has strongly encouraged UMTA to pursue the concept of administrative self-management, according to UMTA leaders. "If they granted us the rent rollback, it would be an admission of their errors and mismanagement," said Whittaker, "and so they are urging us to go ahead with the co-op plans. It's their way of saving face in the eyes of the Trustees," she added.

War called 'lost'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A congressman just back from Southeast Asia said yesterday "the war is lost in Cambodia," and a colleague urged the U.S.-backed government to raise a white flag in surrender.

In all, four of the eight Congressmen who toured Southeast Asia recently said Cambodia's President Lon Nol should be encouraged to resign, so that power could be transferred to the Communist-backed Khmer Rouge rebels or to exiled Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Freeze proposed

ALGIERS (UPI) — Leaders of the world's oil producing nations yesterday ended their first summit meeting by proposing a conditional freeze on oil prices, linking the cost of oil to the cost of industrial imports from Western nations.

But such a freeze, they added, would depend on Western agreement to reform the world monetary system to protect the oil nation's bank accounts and investments abroad and to give massive development aid to the Third World.

Offensive launched

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — A Cambodian government task force plunged into swamplands surrounding Phnom Penh's Pochentong airport yesterday in a desperate counteroffensive seeking to push back rebel gunners and keep open the capital's only supply line.

Rebel forces with mortar, recoilless guns, and rockets forced a temporary halt of the U.S. rice and ammunition airlift. Only a limited number of flights were resumed yesterday.

Reactors safe

WASHINGTON (UPI) — All but two of the nation's 23 nuclear power reactors have passed a government ordered test for cracks in their cooling pipes and most already are back in operation, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said yesterday.

The nationwide test was ordered Jan. 28, the day after five cracks were discovered in emergency core cooling system pipes at the Commonwealth Edison reactor in Morris, Ill.

EPA ruling criticized

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency's call for a suspension in clean air automobile exhaust rules would result in more smog, death and disease in the nation's big cities, environmental and public health groups said yesterday.

Cambodia must survive, says Ford

Declares time short in war-torn nation

Compiled from Wires

WASHINGTON — Declaring "time is running out," President Ford warned last night that Congress must vote emergency military aid within two weeks if Cambodia is to survive the current Communist offensive.

In a nationally televised and broadcast news conference, Ford hinted for the first time he was willing to see Lon Nol step aside as Cambodia's president in order to spur negotiations and end what he called "an unbelievable horror story."

"Time is short. There are two things the U.S. can do to affect the outcome. For my part, I will continue to seek a negotiated settlement. I ask the Congress to do its part by providing the assistance required to make such a settlement possible.

"No one should think for a moment that we can walk away from that without a deep sense of shame," he said.

He said the first issue "is the future of the people who live there. It is a concern that is humanitarian — food for those who hunger and medical supplies for the men, women and children who are suffering the ravages of war.

"I would like to be able to say that the killing would cease if we were to stop our aid, but that is not the case," he said. Questioned by reporters, Ford also:

— Said he believed "there is a growing concern in the United States over Cambodia's plight which has been accentuated since we have seen the horror stories of recent weeks, the wanton use of rockets in Phnom Penh." He said there now was "a great deal more" bipartisan interest in Congress toward helping the Cambodian government.

— Declined comment on reports the Central Intelligence Agency may have been involved in assassination plots against foreign leaders.

Public power called savings to consumer

BOSTON (AP) — A special study commission said yesterday that a public power corporation could save Massachusetts consumers [illegible] million annually by 1985 but it stopped short of endorsing the controversial power proposal.

The commission, established by former Gov. Francis W. Sargent last July, reported its findings to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

The panel took no position on a variety of bills pending before the legislature's government Regulation Committee to establish a public power agency that would generate electricity.

"A public corporation is feasible, and there are some benefits to it," said Paul F. Levy, executive director of the commission.

But commission Chairman [illegible] repeatedly declined to say at a news conference if he personally, or if the commission itself, will urge Dukakis to support the public power concept vehemently opposed by private utility companies.

Israeli-guerrilla battle leaves 14 dead

Compiled from Wires

TEL AVIV, Israel — Israeli troops smashed a hotel siege by Arab guerrillas yesterday in a battle that left 14 dead — seven terrorists, four hostages and three Israeli soldiers, the Israeli command said.

After a day of confusion and various official announcements on casualties and hostages, Maj. Gen. Shlomo Gazit, chief of military intelligence, put the final death toll at 14.

He said the Arabs were holding "about 10" hostages when the Israelis stormed the small hotel on the seacoast, which the terrorists invaded Wednesday night. He declined to give their nationalities.

After the Israeli assault on the Savoy Hotel near the U.S. Embassy, soldiers searching through the debris flushed out an eighth terrorist and seized him after a brief exchange of new gunfire.

Seven of the eight guerrillas died and the captured survivor claimed he came from Egypt.

But Maj. Gen. Shlomo Gazit, chief of Israeli military intelligence, ruled out any Egyptian involvement in the assault. He told a news briefing there were indications the hotel guerrilla attack was aimed at destroying Kissinger's [illegible] peace mission to the Middle East.

In Cardiff, Wales, Kissinger condemned the guerrilla attack on Tel Aviv as "random and senseless" and said it could only provoke counter strikes and make his peace effort more difficult.

In Washington, President Ford said, "Outrages of this nature can only damage the cause in whose name they are perpetrated."

UYA worker seeks end to lead paint poisoning

By PAUL LOGUE JR.
Staff Reporter

> A landlord is required under the housing code not to rent to tenants with a child under six if there is any lead paint in the dwelling

Elimination of lead paint poisoning is the target point for Patricia Keenan, a University Year for Action volunteer.

Working out of the Hampshire Neighborhood Center in Northampton, Keenan has found two cases so far where children have been poisoned by eating lead paint. The results of poisoning could lead to convulsions, anemia, mental retardation and death.

"Lead paint poisoning is a completely preventable disease, says Keenan, "but the politics involved in prevention is causing us problems."

The law banning lead based paint for interior use was passed in 1966 and for outside use in 1970. Many homes have flaking and chipping which could be a potential danger for youngsters, according to Keenan. "Many times we can't enforce the law until some kid gets poisoned, then action is taken," Keenan said. "We have been mobilizing students to go door to door to [illegible] children under six who might have the disease." Many landlords are reluctant to repaint an apartment because of considerable costs.

It is put off until some child gets sick, but then it is too late, she added.

Keenan is also a housing specialist who helps people in the area find subsidized housing and gives information on various realtors, in the housing market.

"I'm an advocate who helps people relocate, counseling them and trying to find a suitable place so they can make the adjustment comfortable." A landlord is required under the housing code not to rent to tenants with a child under six if there is any lead paint in the dwelling.

But many landlords will try to get around the law, said Keenan. Blood tests are given at the Hampshire Neighborhood Center on Pleasant Street in Northampton upon request or people can call there and it is possible a volunteer can make a visit to your home. Making the public aware of the problem is the start of wiping out the poisoning completely, Keenan said.

WBZ airs UMass prof's film on women's health issue

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

"Anything You Want to Be," a film by Asst. Prof. Liane Brandon of the Film Production and Media Studies Program at UMass School of Education, will be featured as part of the forthcoming WBZ-TV Impact special titled "Who Owns a Woman's Body?"

The special, which will deal with all aspects of women's health care including abortion, contraception and self examination, was canceled from its original Friday, February 28 airing date and postponed indefinitely because of the "extremely powerful" implications of the program's content, as stated by the sponsor.

According to Brandon, the special will include segments on birth control, reproductive freedom, female sterilization, and feature such noted women authors as Ellen Frankfort, Vaginal Politics, Barbara Ehrenreich, "Witches, Midwives and Nurses": The History of Women as Healers also feminist Flo Kennedy. "Deadly Night Shade", an all women's musical group and the Arlington Street Church Women's Caucus will provide the musical highlights for the program including [illegible] title song "Who Owns a Woman's Body?"

Speaking about her own film, "Anything You Want to Be", Brandon considers the eight minute film "very dated today compared with when it first appeared," as a Blue Ribbon winner in the 1971 American Film Festival.

The film deals with a young girl as she fantasizes her future plans and desires guided by her parents' insurance that "she can be anything she wants to be", while on film the direct opposite is shown. "Deciding to become a physician the young girl enters the high school guidance office dressed as a doctor but comes out in a nurse's uniform." Brandon explained. The film examines the constant changing identity of femininity and feminine roles.

Brandon, involved in filmmaking for a number of years, has made [illegible] of her own films. The most recent one called, "Not So Young Now as Then," deals with a 15th year high school reunion.

"Film is a great creative release and new tool for communication in the classroom," said Brandon, teacher of filmmaking for classroom teachers, commenting on the use of media in education today.

"Students seem more critical of a film, whether their own work or someone else's, than they are of traditional print and verbal education," she added.

One of the founders of New Day Films, an independent feminist filmmakers distribution cooperative, Brandon said that she does not see the use of films replacing teacher duties in the classroom but that, "creative films can certainly enhance traditional education and yet need not be dogmatically educational."

Speaking about prospective filmmakers, Brandon said that most people view only the glamorous added product and therefore want to make films not realizing the technical difficulties and hard work that is involved in even an eight minute film. "But it is all worth it," she added.

Brandon's motive behind her work is not with an eye toward's a market. She makes films because "I want to say something."

She is now in production on her eleventh film, an eight to twelve minute "non-traditional fairy tale," where in the end the princess rides off into the sunset not on the back of a white horse, but alone on her ten speed bike.

Jeep burns near Grad Research Center

By BRUCE R. FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

A state vehicle caught fire and burned Thursday, according to Captain Robert Joyce of the UMass Department of Public Safety. The vehicle, a jeep, was discovered burning at 8 a.m. near the Graduate Research Center. The Amherst Fire Department responded, but the jeep was a total loss. The cause of the fire is unknown, and is under investigation.

On Wednesday, a Southwest resident was arrested and charged with assault and battery. Hector L. Vega [illegible], 23, of Washington Tower, was arrested at 3:36 p.m. by Detectives Michael [illegible] and Daniel Hagan. The arrest came after an investigation of complaints received the day before from a female resident of Washington Tower, said Joyce.

Three larcenies were also reported Wednesday. In Dickinson dorm, $81 dollars worth of cash and property were taken from an unlocked room. The victim's pocketbook was found in a stairwell, minus a wallet, watch, and papers.

A stereo tape recorder valued at $129 was taken from an unlocked room in Hills House.

Also, on Wednesday, a '64 MG was reported stolen from Lot 33. The vehicle had been locked.

Vandalism during the day included a vending machine in the Public Health Building, a broken window in Crampton, and another broken window in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union. Combined damage to the windows is estimated at $[illegible], and both were broken from the outside.

Juniors: Want grad school?

By PAT ABCTOR

Juniors who think that they might be interested in graduate study should begin preparing for the admissions process right away. Although the formal admissions process normally begins in the fall of one's senior year, or about one year prior to admission, there are a number of steps prior to the formal application process.

Despite the obstacles it is more important now than ever before for women and Third World people to sustain their pressure for admission to graduate and professional schools.

Even if you plan not to go directly to graduate school, or if you are uncertain about your options after your undergraduate degree, schedule an appointment with the Pre-Graduate Advisor (545-2100) in [illegible] Machmer Hall, the CASAC office.

Local TV program gives legal info to low-income groups

The problems that low income groups face with housing, welfare, and consumer laws is the subject of a television show Friday night on Channel 57's "Open Doors Presents", at 7 p.m.

Cynthia Jaques, a senior sociology major and UYA intern, produced the show through the Western Mass. Legal Services in Springfield. The program, which was televised partly in Spanish, was directed primarily towards low income groups, welfare recipients, and mothers on A.D.C.

The show has two parts. The first, a series of slides, deals with a low income mother on A.D.C. living in a slum under depressed conditions. Part Two is a panel discussion between a male and female attorney who discussed housing and welfare laws which referred to the slides.

Editorial Focus:

International Women's Day

The editor's perspective

The base of understanding

By B.J. Roche

Tomorrow, March 8, is International Women's Day, in 1975, which is International Women's Year. So it seems appropriate to honor the day through the expression and clarification of different women's problems, assets, and ideas.

The history of International Women's Day goes back to 1913, in St. Petersburg, where Soviet women took to the streets to demand their rights as workers. Now, 62 years later, in an expression of a commitment to the liberation of the world's women, the United Nations has declared 1975 International Women's year.

Today's special section in the Collegian was produced to give women a forum of expression, and to provide food for thought for others, both men and women. There were a few problems encountered in the production of the issue, one of which was the time element, the least of which being a lack of talented women who have something to say. Yet on a daily basis, women are underrepresented on the Editorial pages of the Collegian. In terms of the media, we may well be the "silent majority" on campus. The loss is not only our own, but everyone's, as our voices go unheard and our ideas are misunderstood.

Feminism is not the only "women's viewpoint" on campus, yet women with feminist ideals were the majority responding to the idea of a "women's issue." To many people, "feminism" is a frightening word, due to conditioning and preconceived notions. Conditioning is difficult to overcome, but a fair appraisal of feminist ideas cannot be accomplished without an understanding of such ideas. And without dialogue, without expression, there will be no understanding.

We welcome and seek responses to the articles in today's issue, whether the reader agrees or disagrees. But most of all, we hope that the articles will be read and thought about.

B.J. Roche is Executive Editor of the Collegian.

Women and justice

The Joanne Little case

By SHEILA WATSON

Joanne Little is a 20-year-old black woman who has been indicted for first degree murder in North Carolina for the killing of her jailer, Clarence Alligood. This charge carries a mandatory death sentence in North Carolina.

On August 27, 1974, Joanne had been in the Beaufort County Jail for 3 months awaiting action on her appeal of a breaking and entering conviction. Beaufort has no facilities for women, no matrons, no degree of privacy. According to other women who have stayed in Beaufort, advances by jailers are a common occurrence. She was the only person in the cell block at the time when Alligood entered her cell armed with an ice pick and allegedly attempted to sexually assault Joanne. During the struggle, Joanne stabbed Alligood numerous times with his ice pick and fled from the jail. In an interview, Joanne said that if she hadn't fled, "I never would have been able to reach the stand. They would have used everything they could to keep me from talking."

[illegible]

2. The State medical examiner was prepared to support Joanne's story from the observation of the evidence, but he was not allowed to testify before the grand jury which indicted her.

3. Joanne is to be tried in Beaufort County. Few black people of either sex are called to serve on juries. This region is also one in which many white people hold the worst sort of prejudices against black women.

4. Joanne is indigent and funds have been requested to hire a criminologist to investigate her case, but the state refuses to provide her with the money. The testimony of such an expert is crucial to the outcome of her trial.

5. Vital evidence, such as the jailer's clothing has been scattered among various law enforcement agencies, making it extremely difficult for defense attorneys to locate and have the material examined. Requests that the evidence be kept safely in one place have been denied.

Commentary-on feminism

Why feminist theory?

By JEAN BETHKE ELSHTAIN

Those who espouse feminism should be able to defend their positions from the inside out. A feminist perspective--whether it is radical, liberal, or Marxist--is a theoretical position. Marx is reported to have said: "Reality does not stalk about with a label." This means, quite simply, that the "facts" of women's oppression may be assimilated into one of a number of competing explanatory frameworks. We cannot do without theory. Those feminists who believe they are only laying out the "facts" will be less capable of defending their positions against others who may have clarified and examined all the elements in their perspectives.

Certain key questions must be asked as one goes about exploring competing feminist theories. What are the author's assumptions about the sources of women's oppression? What concepts are deployed to explain and to understand the nature of persons and of societies? What implications for strategy and change emerge from the theory? If the society were restructured according to the author's model what would be different and what would stay the same? Is there a logical relationship between the author's presumptions and her strategies for change? No feminist perspective should be exempt from critical scrutiny.

Let's explore briefly one version of a feminist perspective with the questions I have cited in mind. Shulamith Firestone, in The Dialectic of Sex, articulates a radical feminist perspective (which I distinguish from liberal and Socialist versions of feminism). The source of women's oppression, she argues, lies in nature. The basic "dualism" from which oppression springs is "the sexual division itself." Human nature is viewed as a set of drives mediated or perverted by culture. Human society is the domination of one sex class (males) over another (females). All of culture and society are a direct outgrowth of the original biological dualism.

What are the implications of this position? If nature itself is the fundamental inequality, nature must be changed. The focus of efforts, therefore, will be not on social structures and institutions but on altering or mitigating the effects of biology. Firestone's scenario for change runs roughly as follows: (1) free women from biological tyranny, (2) this will undermine the society organized around biological production and the family which will automatically (3) erode the systems of oppression reared on the family.

Her focus on the presumed biological determination of women's oppression inevitably draws her attention away from those social structures and institutions implicated in the oppression of persons, male and female. She is forced to adopt individualist strategies: "a revolutionary in every bedroom." Her theory pushes her away from collective movements for change to individualist assertions of freedom from biological tyranny and to a naive faith in a future technology "geared" to human purposes.

Feminists must articulate and clarify their positions in order to recognize the manner in which the adoption of a feminist perspective carries with it moral and political implications. We cannot, I repeat, do without theory.

By P. J. PROKOP

It isn't easy being a woman, in these times. I guess it never was, we just notice it more now. As life becomes more complicated, it gets tougher to deal with. The development of our society, especially in recent years, the "awareness, concern and involvement" years, has made all of our lives, realities and everyday problems more complex and intense than those our parents had to deal with. All this is our ongoing search for achievement, improvement and new levels of intellectual sophistication. The concern for the status of women was not a contrived bid for attention; it exists and should be recognized for what it is: women, just people asking for a fair deal. I guess the whole problem is not that anyone opposes that very basic idea, but rather some people do not like or agree with the various approaches or tactics used to make people 'aware'.

> "Many people feel 'feminism' is being shoved down their throats."

Many people feel 'women's liberation' or 'feminism' is being shoved down their throats. Some may feel pressured or threatened by it, including some women who are not really involved with these groups or causes. It can leave a damaging feeling of being a traitor to one's sex, or on the hand, 'women against the world'. There's the catch. Techniques to educate the public or promote a cause leaving feelings of pressure, guilt or anger can be a real turn-off to a lot of people. The main idea is lost in the thick of muddled-up methodology, and that is a waste. It is unnecessary, it is avoidable.

Some may argue that stirring up emotions is beneficial and at least leads to a reaction and hopefully some kind of constructive thought. I quite agree that this is true in some instances, but in others, I feel the opposite-effect results; people just tune it out automatically with the reaction, "I just don't wanna' hear about it, alright?

UMass has a number of organizations concerned with women's rights, goals and problems. When I first came to UMass I paid close attention to these groups, and often marveled at their progress and enthusiasm. They are supportive groups, and although I am not actively involved with any of them, I know in the back of my mind, they're "there if you need them." A nice, secure thing to know, but it is not paramount in my daily existence. I have no facts to back it with, but I have the feeling that many other women have experience the same kind of thought. Some women are reluctant to get actively involved in such organizations because of the image they have acquired. You've all heard it, the 'tough, hard-hitting feminist bitch.' Untrue as it may be in most cases, it is not the image some women want to have even remotely connected with them. It's not fair, objective, or in my opinion, right but it's there.

At UMass, women and men are all affected or at least informed by the media, of the current status of women's rights. The novelty of it has worn off by now, and so has some of its effectiveness, in terms of re-educating society. People know all about women's equality now, and even though there have been definite attitudinal changes, many very important ones, there is still a lot of work left to do.

A prime example might be an average UMass weekend, perhaps with an evening spent at the Bluewall, Hatch or a dorm party. Here's the test. With all the media concerning sexism, chauvinism, (male or female), and all its various appendages, what's the guy at the Wall going to do first?

1) Approach the average looking, or maybe even off-beat looking woman, sit down and talk about where her head's at.

2) View sensational looking woman, calm himself down and 'suavely' swagger in her direction, stopping to light her cigarette with a cordial offer of a drink, making a point of how dull the bar is getting, talk of 'heading back to the ole dorm.'

> "People know all about woman's equality now, and even though there have been changes...there is still a lot of work to do."

3) Seeing no one more interesting than his thought, proceeds to break last week's record of beer consumption.

The answer could be any one, depending on the situation and the personal involved. It could be none of the above-mentioned. Woman's and men's roles could be reversed. Think about it anyway. UMass men and women, where are your heads at on the subject of women's equality? Your guess is as good as mine.

I rest my case.

Women in politics

By ELLEN KRIGEST

The 1970's will be remembered as the era of the political breakthrough for women. A new chapter has unfolded for the Women's Liberation movement, as more and more women advance into major league politics in both this country and abroad.

In Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher was elected as the new Tory leader and could very well become Britain's first woman Prime Minister, if the Tories should win next year's national election. Three weeks ago, Mrs. Thatcher toppled former Prime Minister Edward Heath from his ten-year reign as the Conservative Party Chief. After defeating a formidable array of male challengers, Mrs. Thatcher has effectively penetrated the traditional male-dominated world of politics.

The growing success of women in U.S. politics was revealed last November when both local and national elections displayed several "firsts" for women. Ella Grasso became the first women to be elected to the office of Governor, in her home state of Connecticut. Janet Gray Hayes who was elected mayor of San Jose, California, is the first woman mayor of a city with a population over 500,000. For the first time, New Yorkers elected a woman, Mary Anne Krupsak as Lieutenant Governor, and Californians elected a woman, March Fong, to be Secretary of State. In North Carolina, Susie Sharp is the first woman Chief Justice of a State Supreme Court.

Throughout the 1970's, women have made permanent inroads into the political arena. In last November's election, eighteen women were elected to the U.S. House of Representatives - two more than in the previous House. At the state level, the number of women state legislators increased from 305 in 1969 and 470 last year to 587 in 1975.

This growing array of woman politicians has given rise to a new sense of professionalism. Women are no longer entering politics solely for succession purposes: Widows filling the incomplete terms of their husbands. As in the case of Ella Grasso, women are now being elected on their own credentials. The seeds of professionalism are visible among the women politicians. Many, like that of their male counterparts, hold law degrees, as in the case of Mary Anne Krupsak, New York's new Lieutenant Governor; or simply, a Masters Degree, as in the case of Margaret Thatcher who earned a M.A. in Elementary Education. This growing sense of professionalism has played a major role in the breakthrough in politics for women.

Shirley Chisholm was the first Black woman ever to be elected to Congress. Her political career is almost parallel to that of Great Britain's Margaret Thatcher. Chisholm, a specialist in early education and child welfare, entered politics more or less by public demand in 1964, when she ran successfully for the New York Assembly on the Democratic ticket. Thatcher entered politics as a parliamentary candidate when she was a practicing research chemist and part-time law student. She finally reached cabinet rank in 1970, as Minister of Education and Science. Both women are outspoken and independent minded as politicians. But most important of all, these two women, as part of the new trend of women politicians, have effectively entrenched themselves in the traditional male-dominated world of politics. Both women have made precedents in the political arena and are responsible for the breakthrough in politics for women.

As more and more women advance into major league politics, both nationally and internationally, the future holds in store a political promise for women. Who knows, Margaret Thatcher may indeed become Britain's first woman Prime Minister. The new trend of women politicians has been given a great boost, as women capture the international spotlight as world leaders - Indira Ghandi or India and Golda Meir of Israel.

In tune with this new trend of women politicians, the day draws near that we may have a woman President. It could be just what this country needs.

I love you

By STEVE TRIPOLI

So tomorrow is International Women's Day and UMass isn't doing a thing (officially) to observe it. Figures. We're all secure enough in our liberalism here in Happy Valley so that our good intentions are known to all, right? And we are all terribly pro-women, aren't we? Sort of like we were all for the colored people ten years ago, right? Of course! THEN WHY THE HELL AREN'T WE DOING SOMETHING ABOUT IT?! Because we're not really committed. Of course!

But my message here is mostly non-political. It's one of love, and it's mostly for men. Spend a moment thinking about the women in your life, then ask yourself a question: 'Where would you be if not for them?'

The first woman in almost everyone's life is his mother. To most of us she is one remarkable woman. It certainly is the case in my life. What hasn't she done for you? She loves you. God, above all she loves you and everything she does is an extension of that love. She's with you almost constantly in your first years. She cooks for you. She holds your head when you're sick. And when you finally grow up and think she's lost her relevance to your life, she reveals the most splendid thing about herself. She is an open, perceptive women who understands. She is invaluable. She will cry when you leave her to live your life with another woman. But she'll never stop loving you.

There are your sisters, if you're lucky enough to have them. They let you know about the other side of the world when all you care about is baseball. They, too, are a hell of a trip to grow up with. They, too, have meaning in almost every phase of your life.

Along the way you meet a lot of other remarkable women (no, I haven't forgotten THE woman in almost every man's life -- I'm just saving the best for last). I've had the experience of meeting some of the most remarkable. Some of the names you see over stories in this section of the paper today belong to remarkable women. They are intelligent, sometimes brilliant. They alter the way you perceive reality, and make you dig them while they do it.

And then there is that final woman, THE woman who is hopefully part of your life. Oh, you may have been burnt the first time you thought you were in love, and that can be a very, very painful experience indeed. Enough songs have been written about it, to be sure.

But that woman is everything to a man. We are [illegible] constant reinforcement, constant reassurances of our worth. The woman that you love, and loves you in return, is that reinforcement, as you are to her. Why? Because she is there. I don't know why it matters so much, but it's part of the chemistry that makes men men and women women, and it's been that way since men and women began.

So the University isn't doing anything for Women's Day, huh? That's their loss. Me, I'm going to just sort of dig the other half on Saturday, and always. This will be my only public declaration of it. I hope it's not too insufficient as a means of expressing just how much I really love you all.

Where is everybody?

The door is open, but the office is usually empty.

I see a lot of events for gay women evolving on campus: there are support groups and counseling at Everywoman's Center and Southwest Women's Center. Lesbian literature courses are being taught. The second weekend in May there will be a Lesbian Conference in this area.

There are places for any woman to be in a comfortable all-female environment. The lounges of the Women's Centers are roomy. Dances, concerts, Feminist Conferences, and poetry readings have brought women together. But what is missing? Is this the wrong time for gay women at UMass to try to form a community?

When I was Coming Out I wanted to meet other women who understood my feelings; but I wasn't interested in a counselor, just a friend. I finally got the courage to go to a meeting of the Gay Women's Caucus, but these days the brave women aren't around to befriend the scared ones. I was in a support group for a while; but now that I have the 'courage of my convictions' I am reminded of how scattered we are. I can't count on running into women I've just begun to know, because most live off campus. I feel awkward calling women I met only once, never mind the problem of trying to find out their phone number or last name without being afraid of seeming 'too interested'. I still go to places where I know gay women will be, either in the company of gay men or non-gay women. But I know that there are hundreds of gay and bisexual women around UMass who just stay home alone or put up with old companions who wouldn't understand.

Is the Gay Women's Caucus the place to find the gay women? Where is everybody? I can't take seriously the suggestion of an organized social something -- or -- other for gay women when the only place that new women know to come is the Caucus and the brave women aren't giving the support these women need.

I will probably be leaving the area next year when I finish school. I see a lot of promise in the Pioneer Valley for gay women to form a community in the future. I hope UMass gay women can be a part of it, because there are so many loving, understanding, sometimes scared women out there who need a place to call home.

Women in music

Into the spotlight

By MEREDITH MANNING
Progressive Music Director

Music has never been an easy profession for women. Recognition and publicity are common enough, but since the latter part of the sixties, women have been accorded the challenge of transcending the flighty image that has frustrated both artistic control and financial leverage.

The artistic value of Billie Holiday and Bessie Smith, typically, was recognized only after their death. Their struggles to understand a new brand of racism, manifest in the world of music production, became more difficult as the relationship between sex and color discrimination was acknowledged.

Third World and white women alike are now facilitating a change of attitude by demonstrating their ability in production, composition and performance. The myth that music is an arena for men only is challenged by the success of female performers in jazz, blues, country, folk and rock.

The traditional absence of women in the music scene stems, in part, from the immediate reaction a young girl gets when she expresses a desire to enter into this field. Parents or friends may try to persuade her to look towards a more promising career or certainly one with more security.

This attitude is further reflected by the notion that music is fundamentally a masculine art. How many women musicians have been confronted with that twisted praise exemplified in, "Yeah! She's really good -- for a woman..."?

Thus it appears that female artists are dealing with not only their own socialization conflicts, but also the problems inherent in a business controlled by men.

The huge cross cultural followings of Aretha Franklin and Janis Joplin may suggest that the public will gradually accept "deviants" from the female image. Certainly, the influence of professional bluesmen on the funky, low-down, jazzy characteristic of Bonnie Raitt's style hasn't detracted from her appeal as a fine woman vocalist. Similarly, despite the woman-oriented themes prevalent in the songs of Joni Mitchell, her deep insights into the realm of loneliness, frustration, confusion and desperation explain her appeal to both men and women.

There is a consistent move toward themes which describe the implications of being a woman in contemporary society. Many of Dory Previn's songs illustrate our powerless position in a system that dictates distorted needs and provides the rules to satisfy them. For instance, sometime during the Watergate exposé, Dory received an obscene phone call which prompted a theme that integrated the problems of individual and public invasions of privacy succinctly.

Hello station to station united nations? Someone called before and it was real obscene would you please intervene oh, you're too busy ending the war...but did you ever explore what begins a war? It begins with an obscene phone call.

In the past year or so, women music enthusiasts have become more receptive to the increasing number of feminist song-writers. Holly Near, Meg Christian and Tracy Nelson, all these artists making personal and political statements about themselves as women, with lyrics that communicate a growing sense of sisterhood.

If musicians, particularly women, hope to become recognized as valuable artists instead of manufactured stars, we must support producers who are aware of the exploitive, manipulative nature of the conventional music industry.

Kudos...

Special thanks to Benita Fullana, Barbara Pridham, Karen Monaco, Debbie Schafer, Mary Dolan, Ellen Conn, Debbie Wilson, Karen Miller, Joyce Kinesfsky, Chuck Kidd, the Collegian Board of Editors, and all the other people who assisted in the production of this issue. It is hoped that this is not just an end in itself, but a beginning of more women's input into the Collegian. Shalom.

Anti-nukes hold workshop

On Sunday, March 9, two anti-nuclear groups in Franklin-Hampshire counties will sponsor a free natural energy workshop for area homeowners, builders, carpenters and anyone interested. The workshop is planned to help those who are building homes or would like to remodel their present home using solar energy to heat and or cool the building and to heat home hot water.

The use of windmills for electricity will also be discussed as well as methane digesters and solar heated greenhouses. People are invited to come with specific projects, problems in mind.

The workshop will be held from 1 to 5 p.m. at the Hillcrest School behind the Sheffield Middle School in Turners Falls. Time will be spent in small workshops where experts with experience in designing and building solar and wind systems will explain and discuss with all interested the different types of systems available.

Nursing research day

The Beta Zeta Chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, National Honor Society of Nursing, will hold a Second Annual Participative Research Day on Saturday, March 8, 1975. Selections of completed and ongoing research in the field of professional nursing will be presented throughout the day. A luncheon will be served at which time Florence Downs, R.N., Ed.D., Director of Post Masters Programs and Research at New York University's Division of Nurse Education will present the keynote address.

Research Day will be held at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Registration will be from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. in rooms 101 and 102 of the Campus Center.

Prof to speak on Judaism

On Sunday, March 9, Eugene Borowitz will visit the UMass campus for a guest lecture. Rabbi Borowitz is a Professor of Education and Professor of Jewish Thought at Hebrew Union College.

In addition to his journal Sh'ma which he edits, Borowitz has written a great deal on modern Jewish thought and ethics. His latest book is [illegible]. The talk will begin at 1:30 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge and is open to all.

Elementary school sponsors tag sale

Parents and teachers at Marks Meadow School will hold a Tag Sale on Saturday, March 8, from 10 AM to 3 PM at the School. The public is invited, and refreshments will be sold. Proceeds from the sale will make it possible for children at the School to attend "Outdoor Classroom" Nature Camp in April. Anyone who would like to contribute items to the Tag Sale may bring them to the School on Friday between 6 and 8 PM, or call Mary Kinsgrove, 549-6191.

Goaltending: A suicide mission

"Your mission, should you decide to accept it (and you will accept it) is a very complicated one. It requires acute vision, instantaneous reflexes, an abundance of self-assurance, a dauntless attitude and a great deal of physical endurance. Your job will be to stop the enemy at all costs, even if it means corporal abuse. Your enemy is insidious because you may not even see it coming. It can achieve speeds so great that it becomes only a blur and it can bounce or deflect. Your mission is by no means an easy one, and it can be extremely dangerous, but one thing you must never forget is that your only job is to thwart your enemy."

This is the assignment that goaltenders attempt to carry out every time they skate to their limited playing area-the crease. Their enemy the puck, can be evasive. That flat, rounded piece of solid rubber can also injure and no matter how much equipment a goalie wears its impact is felt. In fact, somehow the blow of a puck against the goalie's protected body dispenses the adrenaline and the goaltender—it's hard to explain—wants more than ever to make another save.

Standing on two slender and elongated blades of steel, the goalie resembles the knife-throwing circus act. Like the lady strapped to a slab of wood courageously awaiting her partner to hurl a knife, the goalie is "tied" to his net and must be patient and ready to foil an attack by the opposing team.

The players behind those impersonal, sometimes scary, sometimes funny-looking masks, however are as normal as you and I.

The netminder is the backbone of any hockey team, providing his teammates with moral support when he comes up with a big save. Dana Redmond, a sophomore who earned the top goaltending spot for the UMass Minutemen, feels that the satisfaction in goaltending comes from playing good and Redmond [illegible] goaltending. The UMass netminder, who is a product of Bedford High School, is superstitious like many other goalies. He has a good luck charm and a habit of putting on his left skate and pad first.

In order to stay in shape, Redmond plays a lot of tennis and runs, but practices are trying and games are "mentally exhausting."

UMass coach Jack Canniff, the 1972 NCAA College Division Coach of the Year, feels that goaltending is 75 per cent of hockey and that "a team can't be successful without an outstanding goalie." [illegible]

Gymnasts host Syracuse; close out regular season

By BILL DOYLE

Shooting for the team's best regular season record ever, the UMass men gymnasts take on Syracuse tomorrow afternoon at 2 p.m. in Boyden in their regular season finale.

Sporting a 9-2 record, the Minutemen will be out to top a 9-3 record set two years ago in Coach Tom Dunn's first year at UMass.

"It may be close after the first two events," Dunn said (Syracuse led Southern Connecticut after two events before falling to the top team in the E.I.G.L.), "but we shouldn't have any trouble after that."

A victory for the Minutemen would give them a 7-1 record in the league and sole possession of second place. Syracuse is 2-5 in the league with victories over Pitt and Cornell.

The team received some bad news yesterday as it was learned that Paul Marks, all-around man, and John Fabbricante, vaulter, both may be lost for the remainder of the season with injuries.

"Paul's bad back has been bothering him," Dunn said, "and it was too sore for him to practice. Fabbricante landed wrong off his vault yesterday and his knee popped out and then back in again."

Both will definitely miss tomorrow's meet, Dunn said, and possibly the rest of the season.

It was a bitter set back for Fabbricante especially as tomorrow would have been his last meet as a Minuteman. He, along with Bill Brouillet, Roy Johnson, and Tim Beasley, will be graduating this year.

There is a chance that Johnson may be back since he has a year of eligibility left because he sat out last year. But since Tom Dunn probably won't be back as coach, Johnson may not return.

Brouillet's all-around total against Temple was the tenth highest total in the nation that week. UMass' 207.40 total is ranked 19th in the country this season. Roy Johnson also came up with his best effort against Temple in the all-arounds.

Fabbricante has been scoring close to 9.0 all season in vaulting and Beasley's versatility has added to the team's depth.

Tomorrow UMass will be using the gymnasts with the best compulsory routines, Dunn said, in order to get ready for the Easterns, which will be held next weekend. Because of having better compulsories, John Brandon will be competing the last three events, and Dave Douglas will be on the rings (he probably has better compulsories than even Lusk, Dunn said.)

Charley Hall, out since December with a sprained ankle, will be in the floor exercise in an exhibition routine. He and Beasley will be competing to see who will go to the Easterns.

Syracuse's best gymnist is Greg Collins, the defending E.I.G.L. champ in side horse, Dunn said, but they lack the depth and the all-around men to overtake UMass.

Last dual for women gymnasts

By BILL DOYLE

Tomorrow, International Women's Day, marks the last dual meet of the season for the UMass women's gymnastics team, as they meet West Chester State at 7:00 p.m. in Boyden.

Making their final appearance at Boyden are co-captains Jeannine Burger and Marian Kulick along with Gail Hannan and Ann Olson. Burger, Kulick, and Hannan are graduating while Olson will be returning to Oregon from which she is a transfer student.

Burger, who last year won the Easterns setting the UMass record for the best all-around total, and Kulick, who has been injured most of this year but has been coming along recently, according to coach Virginia Evans, both were members of the UMass national championship team of two years ago and members of last season's Eastern championship team.

Hannan was set back by a knee injury her freshman year, Evans said, and a dislocated elbow kept her out last year. Olson has been a "pleasant surprise" according to Evans. She was a walk-on, who had totaled as high as 34 points in the all-arounds for Oregon, and has performed well of late.

West Chester State, a team from Pennsylvania, has been scoring in the upper 80's to low 90's and Evans said she "doesn't expect a slaughter, but not a squeeker either."

Pam Steckroat and Jeannine Burger will be the only all-around performers for UMass. Pam Steckroat usually is the other all-arounder but sore wrists will keep her out of the vaulting.

Gail Hannan, Linda Nelligan, and Marian Kulick will compete in vaulting against West Chester and the one who comes up with the best score may go with the team to the Easterns in a couple of weeks, Evans said.

UMass is 6-1 on the season. Neither the women or the men have lost a meet at Boyden this season.

ECACprotestors scarce

By BEN CASWELL

About 50 UMass basketball supporters showed up yesterday at the Springfield Civic Center, the site of the first round of the ECAC basketball playoffs, to show their displeasure with the ECAC's decision on the tournament participants.

The protestors arrived at the Civic Center about 4:30 and marched in front until the starting time of the night's first game (7:00 between Connecticut and Boston College).

Early in the demonstration things were relatively low key with most of the people entering the building and breaking the picket lines being Center officials or press people. At this time there was not much interaction between the UMass supporters and those peple entering the building.

Later on though, when it got close to game time, many UConn fans were exchanging words with the displeased UMass protestors. Some charges of "sour grapes" and "sore sports" were shouted from throngs of what appeared to be UConn backers.

The protestors were showing their displeasure with the Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conferences' choice of Holy Cross, University of Connecticut, Boston College, and Providence College as the tournament participants. The winner of this playoff gets a berth in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) tournament.

Russ Small, organizer of the rally said that he was a little unhappy with the showing. "Sure, I'm somewhat displeased with the turnout," said Small, "I had hoped for more people coming down."

1st NIT bids

The NIT selection committee yesterday invited four teams to compete in this year's tournament. UMass was not one of those selected.

The committee issued bids to Princeton, the second place team in the Ivy League, Oregon, who finished fourth in the Pacific Eight, and two independents, Oral Roberts and Southern Illinois.

"I'm not worried," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "There are sixteen berths and some of them have to go to teams from New England. We should be one of the first teams chosen."

The NIT will continue to issue invitations over the next few days, and the 16-team field will be complete by Sunday.

The NCAA rounded out its 32-team field yesterday by inviting seven conference runners-up and five independents. The independent teams that received bids were Marquette, Notre Dame, Cincinnati, Creighton, and Utah State.

A cowardly majority

It's too bad that this campus is full of apathy.

Why if we could turn apathy into dollars, we'd have a hockey rink, a new basketball facility, and maybe we'd be known in the media. But sadly, most of the students, and most of the administration on this campus, are more interested in appearances than action.

That's one of the reasons only fifty to sixty UMass students made the trek to Springfield last night to make their voices heard.

It's a puzzle where everybody was.

WMUA awarded UPI prize for documentary excellence

By SAMUEL HASSAN
Staff Reporter

A tape recorded documentary made by UMass radio station WMUA has won United Press International's (UPI) first prize for broadcasting excellence in small station documentaries, according to Station Manager Marc Berman.

The documentary, "Breadbasket," is a thirty-five minute recording about the life of the grain belt farmer focusing on Lyndon, Kansas. It was initially aired on WMUA two days before Thanksgiving and rebroadcasted February 4 of this year.

The prize winning documentary was written and produced by Station Manager Marc Berman and Program Director Scott Bacherman. Narration is by Charles Pellett with special narrative assistance from Nancy Amons.

Berman and Bacherman spent ten days last August talking with farmers and ranchers in Lyndon, Kansas, a drought-stricken agricultural community that suffered massive production losses, upwards of 50 per cent in corn, milo and soybean.

When asked about his intentions Berman said, "We felt people back east weren't getting a full and complete picture of the food situation. The major media outlets were neglecting the plight of the farmer."

At that time last summer some ranchers shot small calfs in desperation rather than face losses because of high feed costs. The drought also stopped any grazing that might alleviate feed shortages.

Berman and Bacherman concluded their interview in Lyndon on August 28 and went to Washington D.C. to further discuss the situation.

In Washington they managed to attend a press conference and later interview Department of Agriculture officials, "a lot of biggies," according to Berman.

The interviews are a part of the tape that includes music, folktales and poems.

WMUA mailed the tape to UPI whereupon it was judged in Syracuse and later Boston. The station was notified of the first prize by telephone and is awaiting formal notification by mail.

UPI defines a small station as any that has four or less full-time newsmen on payroll.

RSO group loses charter

Senate Treasurer Jack Margossian issued an order Friday freezing the account of Rainbow Film Productions, an RSO group, and denying the group further use of RSO services.

Rainbow Productions incurred a [illegible] deficit in a dispute with a film company when they showed a film four times last Tuesday night after renting the film for one showing, according to Margossian.

However, Rainbow Productions will be allowed to show a film Tuesday night which the group had ordered prior to the account freeze to cover the deficit, said Margossian.

Craft shop suits needs of teacher, students

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

A new job for a technical illustrator followed idle chatter with a hitchhiker.

A new career and a new craft shop for UMass became a realization through the chatter of a hitchhiker.

Four years ago, Penny Worman, supervisor of the UMass craftshop, was driving to Hampshire College and in the back seat there were leather strips to instruct students in her free time on the art of belt making.

She stopped to pick up a hitchhiker, who then began to talk about belt making and the new guild in a room in the student union building.

The hitchhiker explained that a craft shop, funded by student money channeled through the Campus Center, was being opened at UMass through student demand. He told her UMass was looking for a supervisor who could teach students without any knowledge of crafts how to work with their hands.

Worman applied and was hired, and has been working at the craft shop ever since it opened in 1971. In an interview with the Collegian, Worman who specializes in silver, said, "the job ideally suited my needs and I suited their needs". She added crafts had always been fun for her.

According to Worman, the craft shop "basically hasn't changed", the same things are being given but more students are using it, better quality crafts are being made, and a different type of instruction is being offered.

There are five major crafts at the shop: silver, jewelry, leather, pottery, photography, and woodworking. Numerous miscellaneous things are being done such as silver screening, copper, enameling, block printing, and repairs. "Repairs are a big thing," said Worman, "people come in to use the hand tools to repair there glasses, motor cycle gears and whatever."

Worman said the craft shop had reached its "saturation point". "There's just no point in expanding, we don't have the space or help, the facilities are adequate but we do need more help," she said. When it gets busier during Christmas season, Worman said they opened a room upstairs and hired two more people. "Everybody in Massachusetts must have at least two belts," she said "2000 belts were made last Christmas." She added belts are popular because they are "easy to make and you can't fail."

The craft shop, which developed out of students interested in working with crafts whenever they felt like it without any obligation, is utilized by 90 per cent of the students who are not craftsmen but just interested in wanting to make something, according to Worman. She said, "this year, the quality of things being made were a lot better but I don't know why."

The first year the craft shop was opened, there were general instructions but it has been changed to specialized seminars, Worman said. She explained during posted hours, students with proficiency in silver, leather, pottery are paid to instruct individual students, give tips and answer any questions. "This way has worked better," Worman said. She added if a group of students are interested in something not given, like batik, they can ask for it and someone will be hired to instruct.

Besides Worman there are four students and one professional who staff the craft shop to instruct and sell materials. Worman said no money is made on materials, items are sold a little above cost to cover other materials such as rivets, dye, sawder and flux, which are used freely. Instructions are free.

The craft shop also just bought a new drill press. Other equipment includes hand tools, lance, saw, drill, lave, sander, power tools,

Anthony Newman awes audience with keyboard classics at Bowker

By BARBARA HOFFMAN
Staff Reporter

Anthony Newman, the harpsichordist lauded by many for his "staggering facility" at the keyboard, enthralled yet another audience at Bowker Auditorium last Friday night.

The 33-year-old musician performed on both harpsichord and pipe organ in a program of Bach and Couperin, opening with several successive preludes and fugues from Book II of Bach's "Well-Tempered Clavier." These short exercises displayed in their simplicity Newman's virtuosity both as technician and stylist. Unlike other keyboard instrumentalists, the harpsichordist must rely on freedom of tempo rather than nuance for expression, and Newman gave a sensitive performance without benefit of dynamics.

The "Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue in D minor" followed, and the inspired improvisations of Bach again meshed with the awesome technique of Newman for an exhilirating musical experience.

The second half of the program featured the "Huitieme Ordre in B minor" by Bach contemporary Francois Couperin, a suite of eight dance pieces for harpsichord. Concluding the program was Bach's "Italian Concerto," after which Newman was called back to offer two encores selected by the audience.

One of the highlights of Friday night's performance was the intermission. During that period, Newman casually dressed in a navy blue turtleneck, remained on stage to answer questions and give demonstrations to the audience who left their seats to surge around him. Reminding them that the organ provided for him was "very, very small," Newman nevertheless satisfied one fan's request for the Bach "Passacaglia and Fugue."

Earlier that afternoon, Newman staged an open and refreshingly informal rehearsal in Bowker Auditorium. The small but enthusiastic group plied him with questions about technique and theory as well as musical requests. Much curiosity centered around the harpsichord itself, which is the musician's own.

Special committee discusses Ed School future

By P.J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Members of a special Blue Ribbon committee studying the School of Education and UMass administrators and faculty met yesterday in Boston to organize and discuss their feelings about the past and present directions of the School.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said the meeting was "primarily organizational", but said he and Provost Robert L. Gluckstern briefly discussed their views of the School of Education since 1968 and 1969, when Oswald Tippo was Chancellor. Bromery said the School has undergone "tremendous changes" in the last few years. Former School of Ed Dean Dwight Allen created an environment of "planned tension and dynamic movement" in the School, in order to stimulate students, Bromery added.

The five member visiting committee, which was formed last week, includes Dr. K. Patricia Cross, president of the American Association of Higher Education, Dr. John I. Goodlad, dean of the UCLA Graduate School of Education, Dr. Maxine Greene, professor of education at Columbia University, Dr. Harold C. Parking garage may install tire slasher

By JULIE SMITH
Staff Reporter

Don Wakowski, accomodations manager for the campus center, said Friday that the parking garage has considered installing a device that would slash car tires on vehicles that try to run out without paying.

Action is being considered because of the damage of the garage as a result of the increase of people trying to leaving the garage without paying.

Wakowski said, "In the past, the garage was set up more complex with the entrance and exit at different locations making it easy to leave through the entrance. The problem now is people "running the booth," he said.

People approached the [illegible] booth and then rushed by the guard without paying — we were taking down license plate numbers and then bringing the people back to pay, said Wakowski.

"The real problem is that this is dangerous for the guard as he is nearly run over when someone tries to run the booth," he said.

"The reason students are not paying is that they have negative feelings about parking fees. They don't want to pay for parking as they consider this a rural area.

"The only reason letters have been sent out to companies is for prices in the event that there is a time these devices might have to be used," he said.

Means, Marshall arraigned today

RAPID CITY, South Dakota — Russell Means, one of the co-founders and leaders of the American Indian Movement (AIM) and AIM member Dick Marshall, today will be arraigned for first degree murder in Rapid City, South Dakota.

These charges arose out of an incident in a Scenic, South Dakota bar on Saturday, March 1, in which Russell Means allegedly shot Martin Montileaux, a Bureau of Indian Affairs deputy. Montileaux died Friday morning, March 7, of a gunshot wound.

A third person arrested with Means and Marshall has been charged with being an accessory after the fact in the alleged murder.

Means, who is presently incarcerated in lieu of [illegible] bond, stated in a press release, "This is another vengeful attempt by the government to take me out of circulation."

Local observers believe that the present bail on Means will be substantially raised or denied altogether by the state district court in Rapid City, which is handling the case.

UMass officials, town selectmen refuse offer to buy Hadley water

By JUNE VALLIERE
Staff Reporter

University of Massachusetts officials and Amherst selectmen decided last week not to presently purchase water from Hadley.

Amherst selectmen, at the request of the Planning Board postponed the vote on Amherst's proposed new zoning by-law to the annual town meeting May 5.

UMass officials declined Thursday Hadley's offer to sell large quantities of water to UMass. The need for cost studies and chemical tests were the reasons given for the rejection. Members of the Planning Board said they would forego a special Town Meeting and add the zoning article to the annual Town Meeting warrant when members will vote on the Town Meeting By-laws.

Amherst selectmen said that they hope their refusal to buy water at this time will not prevent them from reaching an agreement with Hadley in the future. They said they hoped Hadley would assist the town in an emergency situation.

The university is Amherst's largest water consumer.

Hadley officials offered to sell Amherst water at a price of [illegible] per million gallons with a minimum purchase of [illegible] million gallons per year. According to Allen Torrey, Amherst town manager, [illegible] million gallons is more water than what Amherst needs.

The Planning Board said it needed additional time to consider citizen's revisions to the proposed zoning by-laws, the selectmen agreed last Monday to postpone the special town meeting on zoning from March 17 to April 28.

The Planning Board decided to request the postponement of the vote at the special town meeting on the zoning by-law to the annual town meeting, after Susan Lowance, chairman of the Planning Board, announced that the auditorium of the Regional Junior High was not available on April 28.

Lowance said the auditorium was the only appropriate area to accommodate all the people who will be voting on the proposed zoning by-laws.

The planning board's article will be first or second on the warrant, said Michael Sullivan, chairperson board of selectmen.

The planning board's new zoning proposal is an attempt to shape the future growth of Amherst outlined by the Select Committee on Goals (SCOG) report.

Vet school costs termed 'too high'

By PAUL [illegible]
Special Correspondent

The executive director of the New England Board of Higher Education (NEBHE) said the price for contractual agreements with veterinary schools is "unreasonable" and may increase in the future.

The NEBHE is negotiating with UPenn and Cornell University for contracting spaces for New England students.

Alan Ferguson said the "prices are too high" compared with the present agreements for medical and related fields of [illegible] per seat at UPenn.

"Cornell is asking for funding in the same ballpark and these agreements if contracted would increase asking prices of these present biomedical agreements," said Ferguson.

Federal funding is available in the amount of 80 per cent and estimates of 10 per cent grant funds from private industrial sources are available for construction of the [illegible] million school. Therefore, only 10 per cent of annual costs would be paid by the agreeing New England States, according to Ferguson.

Before approximately 40 pre-vet students at a recent meeting in the Campus Center, Ferguson said [illegible] would be adequate for first year planning for covering the costs of architectural planning and to hire a dean and his staff. At present, Massachusetts has authorized [illegible] with the stipulation that three other New England States participate. Present plans for state appropriation are to be based on the populations of those respective states.

If all states participate, Massachusetts' share would be 48 per cent ([illegible]), Connecticut 25.6 ([illegible]), Maine 8.4 ([illegible]), Rhode Island 8 ([illegible]), New Hampshire 6.2 ([illegible]), and Vermont 3.8 ([illegible]).

Plans must be submitted by February 15, 1976 with a decision later in April. "Additional allocation of funds by the other New England states is mandatory if a school is to be established in the near future," said Ferguson.

Veterinary schools accept students on 4 priorities — instate — states with regional agreements — out of states without agreements — students with contracts with other states. Last year 23 students were accepted to veterinary schools and by acceptance of contracts, only six more students per year would be allowed to attend school, at an additional cost of [illegible] to the states, said Ferguson.

"Furthermore," said Ferguson, "the medical school at Worcester needs access to large animal facilities and a vet school would complement that school, as well as allow a much need biomedical research and communicable disease station."

If there were, in fact, 400 seats and more tickets than seats were sold, profits should have been close to [illegible].

King and Wayne said in their report that while they could not document the discrepancies, they were seeking an investigation "to protect the integrity of Butterfield dorm."

Corsin admitted that there were probably more people there than the figures would indicate but again could not account for the discrepancy.

"We were asked to believe that only 645 people saw the film, when we all observed that the house was packed," said Thompson.

"Dave Gerber and I became suspicious of the pattern we saw. The movies were playing well but we weren't making any money," he said.

Members of Butterfield Productions agreed that Corsin was asked to resign as treasurer. Steven Leed, who became president of the group after Fitzschen graduated in January, became secretary of Butterfield Productions, said Carter.

Corsin then petitioned the SGA for RSO standing for a new group, Rainbow Productions. Paula Leed is listed with the RSO office as president of Rainbow Productions but was unavailable for comment.

Steven Leed, when contacted by the Collegian, said that he was a member of Rainbow Productions but didn't know whether his sister, Paula, was president of the group. When asked about the other members of Butterfield Productions, Leed could not name any.

An RSO group is required to have 10 members in order to be eligible for student funding.

Nuclear chairman vows public safety first

New agency designed to regulate plants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even if it means closing the nation's nuclear power plants in the face of serious energy shortages, the chairman of the new Nuclear Regulatory Commission vows public health and safety will come first.

"I'm impressed with the margin of safety built into nuclear power plants," NRC chairman William Anders said in an interview.

"But our job is to insure public health and safety and we're going to take whatever action is necessary to do that," Anders said, repeatedly stressing his determination to mold an independent regulatory agency.

The NRC succeeded the now defunct Atomic Energy Commission, which often was accused of lax regulation because of preoccupation with promoting nuclear energy.

The country now has more than 50 nuclear reactors licensed to generate electricity. They account for less than 10 per cent of the total generating capacity.

But projections are there will be more than 200 nuclear plants by the mid-1980's, supplying about a third of the nation's electricity.

Nuclear power critics who continue to challenge the plants' safety and reliability contend that government officials someday may have to choose between energy and public safety.

Anders said if a serious safety problem were discovered in nuclear reactors requiring their shutdown, they would be closed.

He serves as NRC chairman at the pleasure of the president, but the possibility of being demoted in a confrontation over reactor safety versus energy needs "doesn't bother me one bit," Anders said.

The former astronaut, who was a member of the Apollo 8 crew that circled the moon in 1968, said he and his fellow commissioners have President Ford's personal assurances that NRC will be autonomous as it regulates the growing nuclear power industry.

The NRC was created last Jan. 19 in a government reorganization that abolished the Atomic Energy Commission and created the Energy Research and Development Administration. Anders had served as one of the five AEC commissioners since mid-1973. Ford named him NRC chairman in December.

Anders had been in office only nine days when small cracks were discovered in key safety piping in a nuclear power reactor at Morris, Ill. Cracks at that reactor and others first detected last September and then again in December already had alerted nuclear reactor safety experts.

"The commission's staff thought that their understanding of the cracks was less than they originally had supposed," Anders said.

So the NRC took the unprecedented action of ordering 23 of the country's reactors to shut down within 20 days in inspect piping. The order cost the eletrical utilities involved several million dollars.

All but one of the plants now have been inspected and no additional cracks were found other than those in the Illinois plant.

"That order could have caused any number of people a lot of heartburn," Anders said. The NRC informed Congress' Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and the White House only after the order had gone out, he said.

"They backed us all the way," he said.

Critics of the AEC in recent years deplored the agency's dual responsibilities to promote nuclear energy through research and development programs and to regulate its use.

Anders is sensitive to establishing the NRC's reputation as a no-nonsense regulator of an industry its predecessor was accused of shamelessly boosting.

Myron Cherry, a Chicago attorney who often fights nuclear reactor projects in court, wrote Anders questioning the legal basis for the NRC's complex set of regulations. Cherry said the regulations might unnecessarily reflect pro-nuclear energy viewpoints because they were formulated when the old AEC had its dual promotional and regulatory role.

In months ahead the NRC will face some tough questions.

For example, it must decide whether to allow reprocessing of reactor spent fuel rods to extract plutonium for manufacture into new fuel rods.

Approval would signal the beginning of what some environmentalists have called a "plutonium economy" that eventually will see thousands of tons of plutonium transported about the country.

The NRC must wrestle with the tough problem of what to do with nuclear wastes. It also must consider licensing of the first breeder reactor, whose boosters see it as the forerunner of a new generation of massive reactors dotting the country.

Boston schools may be forced to close early, warns McDonough

BOSTON (AP) — Integration of Boston schools has cost so much that they may run out of money and have to close early this spring, the school committee chairman said.

Unless they get money from other sources, the schools will have used up their budget by May 1, said Chairman John J. McDonough.

The school budget for the year ending June 30 is $126 million. McDonough said that so far, the school committee has spent $8 million on integration, and it will have to spend an estimated $9 million more by the end of the school year.

"With other budget requirements, the school committee will have exhausted its $126 million budget by May 1 unless an additional $17 million is received to pay for desegregation expenses from some other source, either federal, state or city," he said.

If the system runs out of money, the committee will have to stop paying the 7,000 school employes, McDonough said.

"When that happens, they may choose not to work, and we will be forced to close the schools," he said.

He said that under law, the committee cannot operate on a deficit budget.

The current integration program covers only part of the city. A plan to integrate all the city's schools is being drawn up in U.S. District Court.

On Saturday, Charles V. Barry, the state public safety commissioner, said National Guardsmen have "geared their training" in recent weeks for possible crowd control duty when the schools open under the broader desegregation program next fall.

About 2,000 guardsmen are being trained to handle crowds with no weapons except nightsticks.

Edelin gets hate mail

BOSTON (AP) — Dr. Kenneth C. Edelin said yesterday he has received thousands of letters, including hate mail, since his manslaughter conviction in the death of a fetus he aborted in a legal operation.

The Boston City Hospital doctor said most of the mail was supportive, but a small minority of it was abusive. All of the hate mail was anti-abortion, he said, but often ended saying something like, "It's too bad your mother didn't abort you."

Speaking at a gathering of the Community Church of Boston held at Boston University, Edelin said the hate mail shows the mentality of the people who oppose his views.

Edelin criticized the trial prosecutor and other public officials he said used public office to promote their personal beliefs.

Closeup: The Ski Team

By DENNIS CONLON

The day starts at 7:30 a.m. Larry Peck scrambles the eggs while Dick Whitcomb mixes the juice. The question is raised, "Do you guys do all the cooking?" Larry is quick to reply, "I do all the cooking." By 7:30 seven skiers and coach Bill MacConnell are sitting down to a great American breakfast of eggs, toast and o.j. After breakfast Jim Hawkins and Andy Smith dig into the dishes. Steve Tonelli hands skis up to Don Maynard and Bill makes a final check on the rack. At 8:00 the UMass ski team bus is heading for the hill.

There are not too many spectators at collegiate skiing competitions partly because they take place a hundred or more miles from campus. Those who do make it get to see some of the finest non-professionals performing with speed and precision. Downhill racers generally exceed 50 and 60 miles per hour. The UMass team is close to, if not, the finest team in the East (to see how good, see photo and caption, pg. 19) and has one of, if not, the best record among athletic teams at UMass.

It is now 11:30 a.m. Steve Tonelli is at the top of Mt. [illegible] in N.H. making a final study of the slalom course perfecting the picture of the course in his mind. "Number 8 in the starting gate. Skier ready ... go!" The first UMass racer is out of sight in 5 seconds.

For over 130 years we've been using the word "quality" in our advertising. Once again, we'd like to tell you what we mean by it.

Our brewery in 1844.

Blue Ribbon quality means the best tasting beer you can get. A quality achieved only by using the finest ingredients and by adhering to the most rigid of brewing standards.

In Milwaukee, the beer capital of the world, Pabst Blue Ribbon continues to be the overwhelming best seller year after year. Blue Ribbon outsells its nearest competitor nearly five to one. That's why we feel we've earned the right to challenge any beer.

So here's the Pabst challenge: Taste and compare the flavor of Blue Ribbon with the beer you're drinking and learn what Pabst quality in beer is all about. But don't take our word for it. Taste our word for it.

Pabst. Since 1844.
The quality has always come through.

Eating out

As if it wasn't enough that students must pay for the low quality meals provided by Food Services, it was reported Friday that they are also paying for the right of state employees to eat at the Dining Commons.

Under a twenty year old state law, certain state employees are entitled to eat at the Dining Commons at a charge of "not more than thirty cents per meal."

The Campus Police have been the only known users of the law, although not all of them have chosen to take advantage of this "bargain." Those that do, however, pay thirty cents for the same meal for which a student pays about $1.80. The food cost of a DC meal is about 80 cents, and according to Arthur Warren, Director of Food Services, the remaining 50 cents, in addition to the fixed costs per meal, is paid for by the students.

Though not all state employees eligible for the privilege have used it, the fact remains that the law is on the books.

The state at present gives no subsidies to the Dining Commons system, yet state employees have the use of Food Services as a contractual fringe benefit. Students pay for it.

The increases in board costs over the past twenty years have been fairly proportionate to costs, yet an increase in costs to employees has been overlooked. Why?

The additional financial burden is placed on the student with nothing in return. If the state is unwilling to pay for its share of the costs, the policy should be stopped. While the Legislature has our budget on the chopping block, maybe it should look to itself and its policies regarding the University. State employees have the Dining Commons fringe benefit at our expense - let the state pay for it!

Press perverts perspective

To the Editor:

In my years of professional employment and business relationships on various levels, I have found it most difficult to deal with the press and how it can misinterpret or misrepresent one's meaning or perspective. I have yet to meet a reporter who could present through the written word the full import of what one wants to get across.

Without being present on any of the occasions in which I addressed a body of students, Ms. Gallagher chose to use words I had not stated. Upon meeting Gallagher on Sunday, March 2nd, I asked that she not interview me, for I feared in advance that she might be less than accurate. The statement she attributes to me 'a case of living in sheer filth' in my estimation leads one to feel that I am a brash individual with something less than an intelligent view of the total situation — a person with no empathy at all for those who live and function in close proximity to me. This is by no means the case.

My feelings for the conditions in the dorm are much deeper. I am sensitive to both the students who live in Baker and the dilemma the present janitorial staff is in.

We are caught in a vicious cycle and the blame cannot be placed altogether with those whose lives directly revolve around it. What we need to break the cycle is adequate custodial services and secondly though not less important, cooperation and consideration of those tho are housed here. Obviously, no administrative officer or union official could openly state that three individuals — no matter how diligent could maintain a building of 350 residents at an adequate sanitary level.

Admittedly, I've come to know those factors which hinder the aquisition of personnel that would satisfy the needs of the dorm; but I also feel it behoves those administrators and-or union officials who can effect change to do so; knowing that their specific charge is to provide quality services to those who contribute to the very fact of their employ. I firmly believe that there can be no insurmountable obstacles when a student is required and does in fact place funds in the hands of an institution which should above all else provide basic services that the student was lead to believe would exist — and parents to expect without examining.

As Head of Residence, I also am acutely aware of how the students of Baker feel about their living environment. When one feels unable to make changes occur for the better, then one naturally becomes either accepting or rebellious. Either extreme is not commendable; but nevertheless human nature. The majority of the students here do care but to date have been frustrated in their attempts to make their lot better.

The seemingly hysterical articles which have appeared in the Collegian concerning Baker and its environmental problems are not necessarily hysterical actions. We are involved in trying to achieve a climate which is tolerable on all levels to those of us who live here and at the same time build a viable community. We have engaged ourselves in many intelligent discussions and are utilizing legitimate routes to achieve our goals.

Bureaucracy bash

To the Editor:

In its own fumbling way, the university continues its efforts to bring us all together. The most recent step in this direction, the new course change forms, realized a success surpassing the wildest dreams of its designers.

Where else on this campus can you go to escape the humdrum existence of daily classes, and find all of your friends there too? Admittedly, the atmosphere left something to be desired, and they must have run out of beer before I got there, but that first step has been taken.

Attendance at these events can, and will be, increased. But these measures are simple, and Whitmore is already on the right path. Such responses as "I am sorry but on page 72C of the blue form you have neglected to obtain the signature of your advisor's daughter-in-law and we cannot allow you to take a course pass-fail without her vital approval..." insure a large number of regular customers. I see a day when classes may be replaced by a dynamic five month tour of duty in the Whitmore lines.

There are always a few who will bitch about anything. I, for one, take the opportunity to offer a hearty "Well done!" to the men and women responsible for it all.

An adumbration on our part

To the Editor:

I should like the opportunity to correct what may have a slightly inaccurate impression caused by your adumbration, in an article in a recent Collegian, of the argumentation backing certain proposals I made in a letter to Chancellor Bromery. By merely stating my suggestions, and deleting my reasons for making them, you made them sound either hopelessly idealistic or unpleasantly selfish, or both.

In my letter, I was criticising the Administration's continuing tendency to class together graduate and undergraduate students as apart from both faculty and staff employees on campus. Thus, although the need for a Universal Resource Fee is occasioned only by the fear of an imminent rush off campus on the part of undergraduates, and although the advantages which will be purchased with the funds gained by imposition of a URF will accrue almost exclusively to the benefit of undergraduates, Whitmore officials resolutely insist on classing the student population as one body. Thus they propose to tax the whole for the benefit of only one part.

In his reply to my letter, which you quoted in your article, Chancellor Bromery interestingly perpetuates this tendency. He states that 'the final decision on the fee should represent all the constituencies involved'. What he fails, in my view, to admit, is that graduate students as a constituency are considered for revenue purposes, but their interests with regard to the benefits accruing from the URF, if it is indeed imposed, are never evaluated. The only way in which 'all the constituencies involved' benefit from the proposed plan is in the maintaining of the campus as a solvent, and independent entity, relatively immune from state interference. If this is the ground on which the Chancellor proposes to fight, then the constituencies should surely be extended to include the equally affected staff and faculty bodies dependent on this campus for their very livelihood.

It is my hope that it will be possible for discussion of this matter to be included in the meeting tonight [Monday] of the Graduate Student Senate, and I urge senators, and others interested in this issue, to attend.

What's at the end of the Rainbow

To the Editor:

Anyone who went to the 7:00 p.m. showing of the "Eyes of Hell", a Rainbow Production Presentation, was victim of a movie rip-off. The price was never printed on the bills of advertisement and the price did not appear in the newspaper. Admission was a dollar, which in itself was ridiculous when one thinks of the good movies shown lately for the same price and less. The problem really wasn't the price of admission — it was what one got for the dollar. What we got was a faulty soundtrack, a picture that was on and off the screen over a period of 10 minutes, and ushers that took our 3-D glasses from us, when the ad in the Collegian promised us "Free 3-D glasses at the door." The ticket collector and usher were rude and on top of it all — no refunds — not even a quarter. [Gee, the glasses would have been something!!] Well, we went — we got ripoffed — and evidently we'll regret wasting our time and money, but we think Rainbow Productions from now on ought to tell the students the truth and quit the false advertising. In fact, we wished we had seen "Pink Flamingos." Watching someone eat dog-shit would have been just as good. What do you expect from the "Pornographic Kings on Campus?" Nothing approaching quality, anyway.

Rip-off breaks all records!

To the listening public:

This letter is prompted by a bad experience my friend John and I had last Saturday afternoon, March 1. We each bought an album on sale at "For the Record" in Amherst. When we got back to campus we found both albums to be defective. Mine was packaged improperly, [missing a paper slipcover], and sounded like a bowl of "Rice Krispies". My friend's record had loud background hiss throughout.

When we tried to return them we were met by a quite irritable young salesman. I pointed out that my album was mispackaged and sounded very poor, and was grudgingly given another copy [which has the same defects as the first] along with the advice that as long as I looked for flaws in things, I would find them. I answered that I hadn't been looking for defects, but couldn't help noticing them when the record so clearly presented them to me. The salesman then told me, "You're an obnoxious person." I disagreed and was asked to leave the store.

As I was leaving, my friend presented his album to the salesman and explained the record's defect, offering to let him [the salesman] listen to it. The salesman did and told my friend that the record had been recorded that way. He then refused to replace the album and made clear that he expected my friend to accept the defective record although it had been sold as a first quality album. When my friend argued the decision, the salesman asked him for his name and address. My friend asked what for, and was told that he [the salesman] wanted to mail a letter to my friend telling him never to set foot in, "My store," again. The salesman also said that this letter would be legally binding because it would be on record with the police.

This whole occurrence was probably caused by one of two possibilities. The sale albums could have been sold cheaply to the store, as known defective records, and then misrepresented when offered for retail sale, or these sale albums were just coincidentally defective. In either case, the albums were sold as first quality material and should have been exchanged without argument. This incident has assured that we won't set foot in "For the Record" again, and has made us feel that "For the Record" is far from the most pleasant record store in the area. We hope that, along with us, you will decide to patronize a more agreeable shop.

Bookings for the booked

There is a new twist to the old American success story.

It begins as it always has, those who work hard still gain success. However, after they have made it to the top of the ladder they have another option. They can be exposed as criminals in a career ruining scandal such as Watergate. This may seem like a bleak moment, but all is not lost. There is a whole new world open to them, and it begins by publishing their memoirs and going on the lecture circuits.

For all those who sympathize with the Watergate Vets and wonder how they will make ends meet, there is no need to worry anymore. Most of them are doing better now than they ever have. Because of royalties and lecture bookings have brought in a whole new income for them, they are making Watergate the most written about subject of the century.

Jail wasn't a very harrowing experience, either. With tennis courts, golf courses and wall to wall rugs, it doesn't sound like a bad place to spend one's summer vacation. Of course, all the Vets were out in time to make their lecture bookings.

There are those like John Dean who aren't satisfied by just writting their own memoirs. His wife is writting hers, also. Considering that with book advances and lecture bookings Dean will net over $400,000, Watergate may be the biggest financial break he ever had.

While writing one's memoirs has become the latest American pastime, Richard Nixon may go one step further. There are a few erratic rumors that he might take the opposite route that Ronald Reagan did. Somehow, the thought of Richard Nixon in wide screen and Technicolor delivering such lines as, "But it would be wrong," is rather unappealing.

It seems that everyone can make a financial killing when the skeletons are let out of their closets. Jeb Magruder is taking the lecture route and chances are that there will soon be a book out by the first man to point a finger at high White House officials. Everyone was amused by Spiro Agnew's first attempts to write a novel, but few were still laughing when they heard that he was on his way to becoming a millionaire with his real estate firm. It's hard to resist a chuckle, when one thinks of all the politicians who have been working so hard and diligently all these years to cover up their corruptions.

The humor fades when one considers it appears, that one way or another corruption does pay, and the big wigs gain much more than the small fish. No wonder, it seems that the quickest way to financial success is to bug the Watergate. The theory that the rich and powerful never pay for their crimes is beginning to have a ring of truth to it.

The only positive actions taken to prevent Watergate vets from benefiting from their own corruption was taken by Boston University, when students their withdrew their invitation to Ronald Ziegler to speak on campus. Since cries of free speech have caused the maneuver to loose some of its effect, it would be fair to extend the invitation but with no more pay than expenses. We will then see if the cry for a free speech is a genuine one.

There is not much that can be done about the "anything for a buck" attitude of publishers. So far the only pleas to take action have come from ex-McGovern supporters who feel slightly duped by the situation. The most tragic aspect of Watergate is probably the unfairness in our "justice" system. Though, nothing can be done at a legal level, individuals are free to do their part by refusing to purchase these most likely colored accounts of Watergate.

Mobilize on busing

Since the Boston school system opened last fall, the city has witnessed a lynch-mob atmosphere of violence aimed against black students. The all-white Boston School Committee is determined to violate a court ordered school de-segregation plan. The near lynching of a black man in South Boston and the appearance there of the KKK and the American Nazi Party are merely symptomatic of the concerted campaign against the black civil rights movement.

The struggle to desegregate Boston schools is of national importance. A victory to the foes of desegregation in Boston will inspire other racist forces around the country to beat back the hard won gains of the civil rights movement, and escalate already existing racist campaigns as in Pasadena, Detroit, New York's District One and elsewhere. Already the leaders of ROAR and the so-called "anti-busing" drive have planned a national march on Washington, DC May 18 and 19.

This racist offensive can be stopped. On the weekend of Feb. 14, a National Conference Against Racism convened to extend the growing movement to defend the black students of Boston. The conference was attended by over 2000 students from over 18 states, and from as far away as Houston and St. Louis. On the first day of the conference, Thomas Atkins of the Boston NAACP, called for a national demonstration to take place in Boston on May 17. The NAACP alone has over 1800 chapters around the country and is able to mobilize thousands of its members of the march. May 17 marks the anniversary of the 1975 court decision to desegregate schools. The demonstration was overwhelmingly endorsed by those attending the conference.

Students in this area are forming the Five College Committee Against Racism. We understand the need to fight against racism through concrete actions such as the May 17 demonstration. We know too that racism is not confined to the streets of South Boston, but extend through the halls of our universities. Students in general, and black students in particular, are victims of current educational cut-backs. In 1974, college enrollment of black people decreased for the first time in 14 years. Affirmative action programs are being challenged. Black teachers are the first to be fired as part of these cutbacks. We see the struggle against racism in Boston intimately related to the ongoing struggle here in our own communities. We are calling for your active support for the Five College Committee Against Racism and its activities. ON MONDAY, MARCH 10, AT 7:30 IN CC 904-908 THERE WILL BE A MEETING TO HEAR SPEAKERS FROM THE NATIONAL COALITION AND TO PLAN FOR ACTIVITIES LEADING UP TO THE NATIONAL MARCH IN BOSTON ON MAY 17.

Most of Southwest crimes attributed to unlocked doors

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

Despite an extensive advertising campaign to check the high rate of crime in Southwest, 95 per cent of all Southwest larcenies occur because of unlocked room doors, according to Larry Holmes, UMass Dept. of Public Safety technical specialist.

Over the past year, 379 criminal incidents were reported in Southwest, 205 were larcenies.

Moore House and George Washington tower had the highest number of criminal incidents sharing 34 crimes apiece. According to Holmes, private property theft "by far exceeded state property theft simply because students do not lock their doors when they leave the room." Campus wide, there was a [illegible] per cent increase in private property theft, [illegible] per cent decrease in state property theft.

"We find the criminal element is not only from outside the campus but from on campus as well," Holmes said.

"In some cases, we find the thieves are dorm residents who know when somebody has left the room." According to Holmes, a theft takes only [illegible] seconds to complete if the thief knows what he's looking for. Some thieves enter an unlocked room when someone is sleeping inside. "They just walk in, take a wallet and leave," Holmes said.

Two hundred and forty four thousand dollars worth of private property has been lost, an [illegible] increase over the previous year. State property theft value has decreased from [illegible] to [illegible].

"I don't like giving a bunch of figures for publication without mentioning what the department is doing to help prevent these incidents," Holmes said.

"Our outlook on law enforcement is not to take punitive action but to take preventative action," Holmes said. Holmes said to discourage crime in Southwest, the students have to eliminate the desire and the opportunity.

"The only way to accomplish this," Holmes said, "is to lock doors and identify property with an electric engraving pencil."

A special department owned electric engraving pencil is lent to dorms to mark property and thereby register the property with the police.

"Thieves won't touch any property which is registered with us," Holmes said.

When asked how he could explain the high rate of crime in Southwest, Holmes said, "Southwest is by far the most highly concentrated area on campus. There are 11,000 residential students on campus and [illegible] live in Southwest."

Education is the only way to prevent crime in Southwest, Holmes said. "Once the students learn they have to lock their doors all the time, I guarantee a decrease in criminal incidents," Holmes said.

"[illegible] per cent of all campus vandalism occurs in Southwest."

Commuter Assembly seeks student input to help spend funds

By MIKE [illegible]
Staff Reporter

So, you don't have any spending money right now? You already gave at the office — the Bursar's Office — when you paid the Student Activities Fee included in your semester bill.

This semester, the Commuter Assembly was allocated [illegible] from the aforementioned fee by the Student Government Association (SGA) and commuter input is needed to help find plans to spend the money. According to Karen Mangan, chairperson of the ways and means committee of the executive council, the plans would include daycare facilities and tenant's organizations as well as a food co-op.

Presently, the Assembly funds the outreach bus service, a daycare program and a car pooling project. Recently, it has also funded the Wounded Knee Symposium and the Norfolk Prison Program.

Working with the Assembly, the Pioneer Valley Tenant's Association (PVTA) has been active in trying to equalize the landlord-tenant relationship by making information available on the subject of tenant unions; and the Veteran's Coalition has been working in the areas of rent control and voter registration.

John O'Keefe, acting spokesperson for the Assembly, estimates that there may be as many as 2000 more commuters next semester — if they are able to find housing and at a reasonable rate. "Rents are going to go through the ceiling," O'Keefe said, "and put the real pressure on the elderly and the veterans who live on fixed incomes."

He also feels that the administration's "lack of creativity" in the areas of expanded facilities in the dorms and increased student control has added to the oncoming housing dilemma. Said O'Keefe, "The administration is too bogged down with systems analyses, and student ID's. There just isn't enough available housing in the Pioneer Valley; an environmental impact study should have been done first."

Commuter Assembly election results

The Commuter Assembly held their elections to fill four vacancies on the executive council on March 4 and 5. Only two nomination papers were submitted for the four vacancies. The assembly encouraged write-ins during the two days of voting and the results are as follows:

Ann Emery (nominated) 110 Brittany Manor, Amherst, Class of '78 — 56 votes

Doris Harris (nominated) Puffton Village, Amherst, Class of '77 — 40 votes

Write-ins:
Paul Atwood — 8 votes
[illegible] — 3 votes

The Commuter Assembly Executive Council has appointed [illegible] to the Campus Center Board of Governors effective March 6.

Amherst College prepares facilities for women students

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Amherst College — traditionally an all-male liberal arts college — is currently setting into motion changes in the college's facilities and staff for the preparation of women students this September.

According to Dean Edward Wall of the Admissions Office, some of the changes include renovating the gymnasium and dormitory facilities to accomodate women. The College is planning on renovating a floor in one of the dorms for this fall, but will need more dorms for women in the future.

There is also a possibility of the fraternities integrating immediately, according to Wall. No new dining facilities are needed, although they may have to stay open longer hours, he said.

Other changes include the hiring of more women faculty and staff members. The College plans to hire two women professionals for September, one in the dean of students office and one in admissions, said Wall.

The College expects to go through a seven-year transition period. The first transition year, starting this September, will only accept women transfer students.

"So far, we have received 109 applications from women transfers, out of a total of 270 transfer applications," says Wall, "and we are expecting 250 to 300 by April first." The College will probably accept between 50 and 75 women and is looking for the "best variety of able young women, who are both strong persons and strong students," said Wall.

"Women are not new to Amherst College — students of the area colleges may take courses there — but there will be a greater atmosphere of 'coeducation'" with women being part of the college, said Wall.

The majority of faculty and students favor the decision to go coed. "It's harder to tell how the alumni feel about it, although we hear most of the negative reactions. Many of these people remember how the school was when they attended it, and are opposed to change," said Wall. They are also concerned with cutbacks in the number of male students.

One reason for the decision, according to Wall, is that "we now get a crack at the whole population, instead of just half."

To help prepare for women, the college has checked with other institutions that have gone coed. Recommendations concerning necessary changes were explained in "Casebook on Coeducation", compiled before the November decision. Recommendations came from faculty, students, and administration members of various committees.

Amherst College has many long range plans to be carried out over the next seven years. They may have to do some building in terms of housing, according to Wall, and are also considering allowing more students to live off campus. The number of male students is being reduced, although the over-all number of students will be going up. The college now has 300 freshmen students. In 1976, they expect to have 375, but only 250 of this number will be men. By 1980 the college expects to have [illegible] women, with the number of men reduced from 1,300 to [illegible].

"We would like to have 50/50 ratio of men to women," said Wall, "although [illegible] (men/women) is probably a more accurate reflection of applicants."

For the next four years, however, the ratio of men to women will be two-to-one.

Outing Club to offer week in Alleghenies

The UMass Outing Club is offering a week of backpacking, white-water canoeing, caving and rock-climbing to the Allegheny Mountains of West Virginia, during the Spring break, March 22-30.

"To find Spring for a short time", is the intention of the expedition, said the group leader Al Howcroft. Restriction is not limited to Outing Club members and no experience is necessary.

Traveling by car is limiting the enrollment, according to Howcroft. "Already," he said, "I'll have to cut off a few people, having only three definite drivers."

He did say that he is interested, however, in more students who have vehicles and are willing to take riders. The destination is approximately an 18 hour drive.

A fee of $55 to each rider will cover gas and camping needs. Students will be supplied with camping gear and the facilities of Monongila State Park.

"Last year," Howcroft added, "the trip went so well, that the park caretaker personally called to ask if we are returning this year."

"This section of West Virginia," he added, "has the biggest and finest caves in the country, including excellent mountain trails, rivers and even black bears. The people are the friendliest."

Anyone interested in joining should attend a pre-trip meeting on March 18 at [illegible] P.M. in Rm. 904 in the Campus Center. Be sure to bring a $15 deposit.

A gathering for all drivers who wish to participate will be held on March 19 at 7:00 P.M. in the Outing Club Office located in the upstairs of the Student Union.

Human Interaction course offered to undergraduates

The Division of Humanistic Application of Social and Behavioral Science in Education at the School of Education is offering a course in human-interaction for undergraduates.

The course, titled "Human Interaction and Group Dynamics," is primarily intended to be a laboratory training experience which will focus on personal growth and group development.

The major part of the classroom time will be devoted to T-Group sessions which will provide an opportunity for each participant to develop a greater insight into himself-herself and his-her personal effect on others, increase his-her sensitivity to the feelings of others and his-her understanding of the behavior of others, examine and experience the forces that operate in a group as well as his-her own effectiveness in assuming roles that are needed in building and maintaining a group.

Outside reading and theory-skill sessions in class, hopefully will contribute to an understanding of group dynamics theory and practice as well as to individual development.

The training for the laboratory is done by advanced doctoral students under the supervision of Donald Carew, Jack Rosenblum, and Scott Bristol.

The course meets from March 20 through May 15 on Thursday 7-11 p.m. A number of openings are available and can be registered for in Room 368, Hill's South, School of Education. The course is listed as EDU 368 (Lec 300). It carries [illegible] modular credits (2 university credits). The first meeting will be held in the first floor lobby, Hill's South on March 20, Thursday 7 p.m.

Infirmary forms new counseling program

A new patients' counseling group, the Infirmary Visitation Program, has been formed by campus minister Pete Sabey to service infirmary patients with emotional problems. The program is sponsored by the United Christian Foundation, although it is ecumenical in nature.

The purpose of the program is to get trained students and lay people to lend an ear to sick students, some of whom are sick because of loneliness, Sabey said. These students sometimes need a sympathetic listener more than medical attention, he added.

Sabey said that while ministry is the motivation behind the program, a religious angle is not stressed unless the patient requests it. "The program seeks to help in personal growth," he said.

Training consists of three pre-service sessions. Sabey first instructs the group of the kinds of problems to be expected; then the group hears professionals from the Health Service discuss problems surrounding the infirmary context. Finally, they participate in role-playing before tackling the real thing.

Assignments are on a one-to-one basis, and absolute confidentiality is demanded, Sabey said.

Anyone interested in forming another group should contact Reverend Sabey at Rm. 320 in Hampshire House.

Outstanding women scholars eligible for Mortar Board

Ambitious Junior women, who have attained a cumulative average of 3.20, are eligible to join Mortar Board, the National Women's Senior Honorary Society.

Mortar Board recognizes outstanding scholarship, leadership and service qualities in distinguished University women. Each year, members of the chapter define their own goals. This year's chapter is planning to sponsor a Career Day in April.

Applications and reference forms may be obtained from 239 Whitmore. The deadline is March 14, 1975.

If there are any questions concerning Mortar Board, contact Barbara Honan, President, at 253-[illegible].

Possible dorm living for few during vacation

Although the University would like to house every student who wishes to be housed during Spring Vacation, due to problems of dormitory security this is not possible. However due to the special situation of the following students, these students will be housed in their own residence areas from March 22nd through March 30th.

1. Foreign Students, 2. Student Teachers, 3. Domestic Exchange Students, 4. Students involved in approved Academic Programs (verification needed).

Those students who fall within the above stated categories and-or have questions should contact their Head of Residence by 5:00 P.M., Wednesday, March 12th, 1975.

Collins continues weekly office hours

Representative James G. Collins (Dem.-Amherst) will continue to sponsor regular weekly office hours for constituents in Amherst and South Hadley. These hours are in addition to his regular personal office hours on the first Saturday of each month.

Douglas M. McGarrah, an aide to Rep. Collins, will be at the Amherst Town Hall each Monday morning from 10:00 A.M. to 12:00 noon, and each Wednesday morning at the South Hadley Police Station, also from 10:00 A.M. to 12:00 noon.

Representative Collins may be reached at any time during the week, either at his home phone ([illegible]) where a message may be left, or at the State House in Boston (617) 727-[illegible].

Small Claims Court works but still unused by those it's designed to protect

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

You've just given your car a paint job only to have it peeled and clawed by a rampaging automatic car wash?

If you have been billed, short-changed, deceived, or rooked for $400 or less and have been unable to collect from the responsible person, find out about small claims courts, (SCC).

The 54 year old Massachusetts small claims courts system, established to protect people from exploitative business practices and shoddy services, is forgotten, unknown, and unused by most people, according to a recent survey.

Although the courts are overlooked by consumers, they are overrun with claims from department stores, utilities, and other creditors who employ the courts as collection agencies. According to a fall survey conducted by two Hampshire College students, in 79 per cent of 327 SCC cases heard in Northampton District Court the plaintiffs were business corporations.

In order to reclaim these "people's courts", consumer advocates MassPIRG and Western Mass. Legal Services are providing conselling services and informing the public that the courts exist for their convenience.

Most people who use the courts find that the procedure is surprisingly simple. No lawyer is needed.

File your suit with the district court clerk of the defendant's municipality. Have on hand the correct legal name or title of the defendant, the exact amount you wish to sue for, and $3.65 for a fee (refunded at the defendant's expense if you win). Upon signing the docket the clerk has prepared, you receive a court date.

The court date is usually within a month of the filing date. This is the time to prepare your case.

Put all of the bills, papers, and other pertinent documents together and review your testimony. This is important because the defendant may arrive in court armed with an experienced lawyer who may cross examine you.

Bringing along an expert witness to corroborate your testimony, such as an auto mechanic in the case of an overpriced brake job, will facilitate the outcome of your suit.

Your day in court may never arrive; often, the defendant makes restitution at the mere sight of the official summons. If this occurs notify [illegible] of the settlement.

When your court date does arrive, get to the court early. Organize your evidence and review your testimony.

There is no need to become nervous. The entire court scene is very informal. There is no jury.

When your case is called, approach the bench ready to tell your story completely and accurately. It is recommended to abstain from any thespian antics in the courtroom; the judge is concerned only with the facts relevant to the case.

When the judge feels that he has all the necessary information to reach a decision, he informs both parties that his ruling will arrive in the mail. Most receive it within a week of the hearing.

If you are notified that the ruling is in your favor, it is up to you to take the initiative to collect the money owed you.

You obtain what is rightfully yours. Justice in motion. Democracy in action. However, only three courts hold Saturday sessions. This makes the courts inaccessible to those who can't take time off during weekday business hours.

To alleviate this, MassPIRG has initiated a bill (Senate 812 — introduced by Sen. William Bulger of Boston) which would require each district court to hold at least one small claims court session on Saturday or in the evening every month.

Many who have used the courts find it exciting and enjoyable — seeing all the things they discussed in junior high government class come to life.

SCC are for the people. Use them.

Coalition Against Racism meeting tonite in CC

Join the struggle against racism! Come to a meeting of the Five College Students Coalition Against Racism today, March 10th, at 7:30 in the Campus Center. A speaker from the National staff from National Students Coalition Against Racism will describe the situation in Boston. Come bring your ideas. We will be building for the demonstration against Boston on May 17th and for an action on campus. The attack on our rights must be stopped. Work with the Coalition.

Brandon, pioneer film distributor, at Amherst tonite

Pioneer film distributer Thomas Brandon will be at Amherst College today to talk about his 40 year involvement with film and to present a program of rare social and political films from the 1930's and 1940's. The program will begin at 8 p.m. in Lecture Room I of the College's Merrill Center.

Brandon is a well-known pioneer of independent film distribution in the U.S., and was active in the documentary film movement of the 1930's. He founded Brandon Films, long a major source of foreign films and American documentaries in this country.

As early as 1931, he was working to form the Film and Photo League and the National Film and Photo League.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

Monday, March 10 — Born today, since earliest childhood you have rebelled against having to work out the details of any given activity. You far prefer giving over your talent — plus your interest, energy, and time — to the broader, more tangible aspects of a project or endeavor. This does not mean, however, that you would refuse to take on at least your share of the responsibilities for the detail work; for you fully realize the importance of small matters to large, of minor aims to major ones, and you would not knowingly risk distant goals for near ones.

You are by nature a leader — but you are also by nature somewhat hampered by a basic timidity that will not allow you easily to take over a position of authority unless it is specifically offered to you. Time should do much to provide you with the self-confidence necessary for aggressive action — but until it does you may well lose out on a number of opportunities for gain simply because you will not grasp them without a special invitation to do so.

Because of the warmth of your personality, people will be drawn to you for companionship if not for guidance. You could — if you would — build up a considerable following of supporters for any kind of activity you might wish to involve yourself in; whether you will do so or not is up to you and the degree to which you are able to overcome a hesitancy to maneuver people into the ways you wish them to go.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Tuesday, March 11

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Unless you can act with forethought, you would do well not to act at all at this time. Take your time making up your mind about a new project.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — This is a day of high risks for the Aries who is careless about personal appearance. Good grooming can lead the way to extraordinary success.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Don't mistake a benefit for a loss. This is a good time to look a gift horse in the mouth — and to be happy about what you find there, no matter what!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Much is offered today — but much is of little value. Look things over carefully before coming to a decision for change in your social life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — It is doubtful that this is the day for financial investments. You might do well to reconsider a decision for change in your social life.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Try to be happy with what the day brings — especially in those areas where children are involved. Don't be too demanding of the young.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — New beginnings are ill advised today. Make an effort to revise your schedule in such a way that there is room for the unexpected.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Don't expect another's promise to be as reliable as his actual efforts in your behalf. Begin at once to take a few steps forward on your own.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This is day when a bird in the hand is worth even more than two in the bush. Be grateful for whatever gains are made in the morning.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — This is a difficult time for the Sagittarian who refuses to be liberated by another's pardon. Make an effort to stop blaming yourself for losses.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You can make — or break — your own good fortune today, depending on the degree to which you are willing to put yourself out for the sake of a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Bear in mind the possible reactions of loved ones and you will not be tempted to act impulsively. Move ahead only if you really want to.

Celtic captain John Havlicek (R) doesn't stand a chance of getting this rebound as four Warriors go for the ball in yesterday's 102-101 Golden State victory.

B's douse Flames; Warriors edge C's

BOSTON (UPI) — Bobby Orr broke his own single season record for goals by a defenseman Sunday night, scoring his 38th as the Boston Bruins slipped by the Atlanta Flames, 5-2, for their sixth straight National Hockey League victory.

Orr also assisted on Boston's first two goals, by Carol Vadnais and Ken Hodge in the first period and on an empty net goal by Greg Sheppard.

Orr's four points gave him a three-point lead over teammate Phil Esposito, 118-115, in the NHL scoring race.

BOSTON (AP) — Rick Barry came to life with 13 of his 31 points in the third period, as the Golden State Warriors fought back from a 16-point second period deficit to defeat the Boston Celtics 102-101 Sunday in a nationally-televised National Basketball Association game.

Barry and Keith Wilkes scored all eight of their team's baskets in the last five minutes to overhaul a game — long Boston lead and reverse a four-game Warrior losing streak on the road.

Swimwomen show depth despite losing, 61-60

By [illegible]

Although the UMass women's swim team was defeated 61-60, they showed that firsts aren't everything as they squeezed Central Connecticut's victory [illegible] to a slim 1 point. Without the benefit of five of their top competitors the UMass women really showed their depth by capturing almost all [illegible] place points throughout the meet.

The only UMass swimming firsts were won by Jane Walsh in the 200 and 400 freestyles. Walsh showed controlled pacing and definite improvement, winning the 200 in 2:18 [illegible] and breaking the 5-minute mark to win the 400. Jane also placed third in the 50 free.

Junior Carol Canterbury contributed the only other UMass first by winning the 1 meter diving. It was one of Canterbury's best performances, and one in which she included her newly-perfected [illegible] double somersault [illegible]. Freshman diver Linda Schold chipped in second place points in the same event.

UMass came back with seconds by Doreen Walsh — 50 fly, 100 fly; Diane Reno — 50 and 100 breast; Rosanna Balducci — 100 back, and Laurie White — 50, 100 free, 200 IM. Third place points were accumulated by: Debbie Rossi — 100 free (with her best time by 5 seconds); Carol Leahy — 100 fly; Lee Hart — 50 and 100 breast; Jane Loudermilch — 100 back; Doreen Walsh — 200 IM and Rosanna Balducci — 50 back.

Rosanne Lacoste, a graduating senior competing in her last meet, captured third places in the 200 and 400 frees and the 50 fly. Lacoste has been a member of the Women's swim team for 4 years, improving steadily in the long distance free styles, ending her career with her best time ever in the 400 free Thursday night.

The UMass 200 free relay of Loudermilch, Balducci, L. Whiting and Walsh closed the meet with an easy first.

Record-breaking swimmers finish at New Englands

By BILL EDELSTEIN

A frustrating season came to a frustrating finish for the UMass swimmen last Thursday through Saturday at the New Englands.

The Minutemen took eight competitors to Providence (Harry Blyden, Dave and Ron Boucher, Ben Crooker, Joe Hebert, Duncan Lomas, Earl McAllister and Russ Yarworth), set a bevy of school records and still managed not to place anybody in the finals of any event. "How can a thing like that happen?", you demand incredulously.

"I'll get to that in a moment," say I, surprised at your sudden outburst.

UMass came away from the New Englands with 21 points — one more than last year — and placed five notches higher than the previous annum. (Brown was the runaway champ, totaling over twice as many points as unchallenged second place Springfield.

Now to the meet. The 800 free relay team of Hebert, Lomas, Crooker and Ron Boucher started the whole thing off poorly by breaking the school record in that event with a time of 7:38.8 (trimming one second off the old mark). "From what I saw in practice, we should have broken the record by eight to ten seconds," coach Bey Melamed projected.

Dave Boucher, the good guys' leading point-getter with seven, took a couple of sixths in the 200 and 100 breaststroke. Dave broke university records in each event with times of 1:03.3 in the 100 (a 1.8 second cut) and 2:17.5 in the 200 (an axing of 4.5 seconds). Boucher, however, swam his record-breaking 200' stroke in the consolation round; if he had swum it in the qualifying round, he would have been a finalist.

Crooker, second in points for UMass (3) placed eleventh in the 1650 yard (that's a lotta water) freestyle and twelfth in the 500 free, with times of 17:58.4 and 5:01.8 respectively, and machettied (isn't it amazing the number of synonyms one can find for the word "cut" when one is hard pressed) a total of 13 seconds off the UMass records in those events. Harry Blyden finished well behind Crooker in both events, but fared well, considering it was the first time he had attempted the 1650 marathon. Merely finishing the event gives Harry the right to swim to the Russian fishing trawlers off the Massachusetts coast, and back.

The 400 medley relay was swum "quite badly" in the words of Coach Melamed. Of the team of Hebert, Yarworth and the Boucher brothers, only Dave broke a record for his part of the medley.

Hebert (200 butterfly) and Lomas (200 individual medley) swam times that kept the record books intact and McAllister fell victim to overconfidence: in the one meter diving competition, Earl saved his best dives for after the qualifying round and, as a result, failed to qualify. When the plank rose to three meters, McAllister changed strategy and qualified for the second round by rippling the water with his best dives first. Even so, his favorite plunge, the inward one and one half, betrayed him and the second round turned out to be Earl's last.

WRAPPING IT UP — Melamed deemed the season a "frustrating" one, citing the improvement made by his team as "not enough." "I think we should have broken all the (university) records at the New Englands," added the disgruntled coach...there's just no pleasing some people...

Skinner, Erving star for Nets

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (UPI) — Former UMass stars Al Skinner and Julius Erving combined for 44 points to lead the New York Nets to a 112-82 ABA win Sunday over the Virginia Squires.

Both players scored 22 points as the Nets rolled to their 10th straight win over Virginia.

New York played without Mike Gale and Wendell Ladner and Coach Kevin Loughery started Skinner for the first time since the opening month of the season.

Defending champs NC State denied NCAA tourney bid

By United Press International

The new NCAA tournament structure that allows conference also-rans to compete for the national championship was bound to produce some controversy, and it did.

"We were bitterly disappointed," said coach Norm Sloan of North Carolina State after learning that Maryland had been selected over his team to receive the second ACC berth in the tournament. "I'm proud of the season we had. Beyond that I don't have anything to say."

The Wolfpack, national champions in 1974, defeated Maryland in the semifinals of the ACC tournament, 87-85. But on Saturday night, freshman Phil Ford scored 24 points to help North Carolina defeat the Wolfpack 70-66 in the title game.

Maryland, the nation's second-ranked team, got the second bid over N.C. State because the Terps were the ACC's regular season champion.

Besides North Carolina, NCAA berths were earned in tournaments Saturday by Middle Tennessee, LaSalle, Boston College, Georgetown, Syracuse and Rutgers.

Indiana, the nation's top-ranked team, completed a perfect regular season at 29-0 and stretched its overall winning streak to 32 to tie the big 10 record in its 94-79 victory over Michigan State. Steve Green scored 25 points for the Hoosiers.

Bill Nebeski is leaning hard as he carves a turn on a slalom course at Mt. Whittier in New Hampshire Saturday. The ski team placed first out of twelve teams in the three-day NIAT tournament. The full story will appear tomorrow.

CLOSE TO THE EDGE — UMass gymnast Dave Kalakoff hangs on to the end of the parallel bars in Saturday's final dual meet of the season against Syracuse.

Gymnasts victorious

The 154.75 total was the second best score recorded by UMass this season, edging the 154.25 scored against Springfield.

Jack [illegible], who said that he is definitely out for the rest of the season because of a hyper-extended knee suffered in practice last week, stated that UMass won Saturday on experience.

Whether Paul Marks will be able to return to the line-up for the Easterns still isn't known Dunn said, as Marks' bad back is still bothering him.

Coming through with good performances for UMass were Steve Marks, who scored an 8.75 on side horse and received a 9.20 for his front hand spring front vault; Peter Lusk, who again missed his dismount off the rings but still scored a 8.05; Bill [illegible], who scored a 9.2 for his round-off back vault and who won the all-around with a 52.20 total; Roy Johnson, who took second in the all-rounds with a 51.65 total and who scored his best p-bar average with an 8.55 and won the high bar with an 8.85; and Andy Hammond, who averaged his second best p-bar score with an 8.50.

UMass outscored Syracuse in every event and only one Orangeman, Frank [illegible], took a first as he scored an 8.85 on side horse. Greg Cole performed a compulsory routine on the side horse for Syracuse, as the gymnast called the E.I.G.L.'s best on pommel horse for Dunn only scored a 7.65.

Before the meet Dunn said that the last spot in the floor exercise in the Easterns was still open. Chuck Hall scored a 7.85 in an exhibition routine on the floor for UMass while Tim [illegible] averaged a 7.8. Only one of the two will go, Dunn said.

The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League championships begin this Thursday at 7 p.m. at Springfield College.

The wait is over.

For the third straight season and the fifth time in six years, the University of Massachusetts will be competing in the National Invitational Tournament in New York.

The invitation was received and accepted by Associate Athletic Director Robert O'Connell, on Saturday. Coach Jack Leaman was away on a recruiting trip at the time.

In a telephone interview yesterday, Leaman said he was pleased that his team had been invited, but admitted that he had become apprehensive by the delay. "When they started naming teams Thursday and Friday and we weren't picked, I started to get worried."

The tournament opens this weekend in Madison Square Garden. First round pairings will be announced today.

Several of the nation's top teams turned down NIT invitations yesterday. North Carolina State, upset by North Carolina in the finals of the ACC tournament and bypassed in favor of Maryland for the conference's second place berth, voted not to accept the bid. Said All-American David Thompson "It just seems like such a losers' tournament."

Tennessee and Purdue also turned down NIT invitations in favor of competing in the second annual Conference Commissioners Tournament, to be held this year in Louisville, Kentucky.

But, despite the presence of only one nationally ranked team, Leaman is impressed by the field. "South Carolina is really tough and Clemson (number 14 in the country) is good from the ACC, so I think it's a really strong field."

The Minutemen will be joined in New York by three other New England schools, all losers in this weekend's ECAC qualifying tournament. Holy Cross, which bowed to Boston College in Saturday's championship game, received a bid that same day while Connecticut and Providence, losers in the preliminary round, were notified on Sunday.

The NIT will have a strong local flavor this year, as Manhattan, St. Peter's, and St. John's are all located in the Metropolitan area, and schools like UMass, UConn, Holy Cross, Princeton, and Lafayette can be expected to bring large numbers of followers with them.

The NIT, which suffered when the CCA tournament was initiated last season, was again hurt this season, as the NCAA tournament was expended to include 32 teams, instead of the previous 26. The NCAA, for the first time, now allows second place conference finishers to compete. Many schools in this situation were previously invited to the NIT.

This year's NIT gets underway with afternoon and evening doubleheaders on Saturday and Sunday. Winners advance to the quarterfinals on either Tuesday or Thursday night, and the semi-finals will be played on Saturday, March 22. The tournament championship and consolation will be played one day later, Sunday, March 23.

In alphabetical order, the teams to compete in the 1975 NIT are: Clemson, Connecticut, Holy Cross, Lafayette, Manhattan, Massachusetts, Memphis State, Oral Roberts, Oregon, Pittsburgh, Princeton, Providence, St. John's, St. Peter's, South Carolina, and Southern Illinois.

UMass: five times in NIT

in six years

Murphy voted top player in Yan Con

John Murphy, who led UMass in scoring and rebounding, has been named Yankee Conference player of the year.

The 6'8 forward from Clinton, Mass. averaged 17.4 points and 9.4 rebounds per game in leading the Minutemen to their third consecutive conference championship.

The award was announced yesterday and was chosen through a poll of all conference coaches.

Joining Murphy on the All-Yankee Conference team were Bob Warner of Maine, Tony Hanson of Connecticut, Kerry Walker of Boston University, and Ron Gottschelk of Vermont.

Named to the second team were Bill Endicott of UMass, Jim Williamson of Rhose Island, Neil Burns and Curtis [illegible] of Boston University, and Wayne Morrison of New Hampshire.

Williamson was also chosen as the conference's rookie of the year.

Bob Carrington, from Boston College, headed the All-New England team, being named college basketball player of the year for New England.

Murphy was the only UMass representative of the ten all-stars on the New England squad.

Gymwomen beat Westchester; finish year with 7-1 mark

By BILL DOYLE

Led by three strong performances by Jeannine Burger, the UMass women gymnasts defeated Westchester State [illegible], Saturday night before an overflow crowd in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym to end the season with a 7-1 record.

Burger, who along with Gail Hannan, Marian Kulick, and Ann Olson, performed in her last dual meet for UMass, took the all-around honors with a 26.25 total. Except for a costly fall on her mount of the balance beam, Burger performed her routines with a minimum of breaks. She scored her highest scores of the season in vaulting with a 9.1 and floor with a 8.75. Her 8.15 on uneven bars just fell short of her season's best of 9.2 scored last week against Southern Connecticut.

Burger had trouble on the beam, losing a point because of a fall which caused her to get only a 7.85. By winning the all-arounds, Burger beat teammate Susan Carnwell for the first time. Carnwell had trouble with her vault, scoring only an 8.4 and didn't score her usual high average on beam or bars. Her 9.2 on the floor did help her to total 26.2 overall.

Despite UMass' relatively low total in the meet, Coach Virginia Evans said she was pleased with the team's showing.

"Except for beam, we had one of our best efforts," she explained. "We had good, tough vaulting and just about the best bar and floor totals of the season. The judges scored a little low, too."

The Minutewomen did have their troubles on the beam, as Pam Stockman, Margie Magraw, Cheryl Smith, and Burger all had one-point falls. Carnwell had a little trouble with her best event also, as she suffered a few breaks but still managed an 8.6.

UMass' vaulting totaled 25.95, less than the total scored last week against Southern Connecticut that Coach Evans labeled disappointing.

UMass took at least the top five places in every event, as the Westchester State women proved no match for the Minutewomen. The highest score in any event by a gymnast from the Pennsylvania school was an 8.1 in vaulting by Bernie Armstrong.

Pam Stockman averaged her best floor exercise score with an 8.6.

The women now have until March 21 to practice for the Eastern regionals which will be held at Princeton.

In the pre-game Senior night activities, Burger, Hannan, Kulick, Olson, and manager Donna McKay were presented roses by Coach Evans.

Gymnasts outclass Syracuse in final dual encounter

By BILL DOYLE

In what could possibly be the final strong dual meet showing ever by a UMass gymnastics team, the Minutemen, fought off the symptoms of a letdown and outclassed Syracuse, [illegible], Saturday afternoon at Boyden to wrap up sole possession of second place in the EIGL and finish with the best record, [illegible], in the team's existence.

Nothing short of a miracle would keep Coach Tom Dunn here as gymnastics coach, he said, as after this season the athletic department is reportedly only hiring a part time coach for the men's team. Dunn's absence, along with those of graduating seniors [illegible], Roy Johnson, Jack [illegible], and Tim [illegible] could signal the end of the high caliber of gymnastics at UMass.

Recruiting has suffered immensely because of the clouds hanging over the future of the gymnastics program at UMass, Dunn said, as only two out of ten recruits came to UMass last year ([illegible] and Dave [illegible]) and future recruiting looks even bleaker.

Plus, at least five top gymnasts on the current team are considering transferring to schools with healthier programs, Dunn said.

There is a movement on the team to keep everyone together here at UMass next year which is headed by John [illegible], Dunn revealed, "but if one of the guys transfers then probably most of them considering leaving would transfer."

Getting back to Saturday's meet, the Minutemen appeared a little sloppy and lazy from the onset, possibly suffering from a letdown after last week's big win over Temple and in anticipation of the Eastern regionals which will begin on Thursday of this week. The Minutemen straightened themselves out as the meet went on, as they came up with their best p-bar total of the season, 24.4.

Illness, starvation plague Cambodian refugees

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Every day a few more trickle in, mostly the very old and the very young, held up or carried along by relatives or friends.

Mostly poor and unemployed, they have spent the recent months of their lives on the run from once lush lands, living off the dole of foreign aid in the fetid squalor of slums and packed refugee camps around Phnom Penh.

Related Story, Page 4

They are sick with dysentery, bronchial pneumonia, tuberculosis, malaria and other tropical diseases.

Combined with a poor diet deficient in vitamins, proteins and carbohydrates, illness gives these peasants the unmistakable signs of malnutrition. Their bodies are dehydrated and emaciated, their skins' normal elasticity is gone and their glassy eyes are half-closed in anticipation of death.

"These people are already in the terminal stages," a doctor said, pointing to the already overcrowded ward of a newly reopened malnutrition center in Phnom Penh. "It's all we can do just to stabilize them and then slowly begin the job of building them up again."

The doctor's patients are just a few of the thousands of Cambodians suffering from malnutrition, a phenomenon which has been rapidly increasing in the past month.

They are the first to feel the slow economic strangulation of the Cambodian capital by the Khmer Rouge insurgent's nearly 2½ month old offensive. Malnutrition has struck hardest at those who have fled most recently from the fighting around Phnom Penh.

Officials estimate about 50,000 persons fled their homes in January, the first month of the dry season offensive, further burdening the work loads of a handful of Western voluntary agencies who care for refugees. More than half a million refugees in the Phnom Penh area now are directly dependent on these agencies' handouts for survival.

Voluntary agency officials were the first to point out the growing problem of malnutrition in recent weeks. While government officials claimed there was still 45 days of rice on hand for the capital's estimated two million residents, the voluntary agencies were complaining there just was not enough rice to help the refugees.

The United States kicked off a one-month-long $5.5 million airlift of rice 10 days ago. Hauling in between 530 and 565 tons per day, the airlift is aimed at keeping up with daily consumption in the capital until the Cambodian government can organize an operation to reopen the Mekong River to supply convoys. The shipping channel has been closed since Jan. 30.

During a visit last week by Asst. Secretary of State Philip Habib, which coincided with that of a congressional delegation, the administration official promised an outright grant of 20,000 tons of rice to the voluntary agencies for refugees and "other needy persons."

Senate issues fee alternative

By DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporter

Members of the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee yesterday proposed an alternative to the Universal Resource Fee which would restructure the dormitories into four different living options.

The committee proposed the alternative at a joint meeting with members of the administration, who have been working for the past few months on various alternatives, said Tony Armelin, chairman of the Student Senate Communications Committee.

"The proposal" Armelin said, "is still in the embryonic stages, but the committee considers it a viable alternative to the URF."

It includes:

— cooperative dorms in which all services would be provided by the students who live in them. This option would also employ a system for evaluation and control by the administration to prevent abuses.

— dorms with janitorial service and furniture with a "building manager" rather than a head of residence that counsels students.

— dorms with a head of residence, minimal counseling, janitorial services and furniture.

— full service dorms providing everything that is now supplied.

Armelin said there are four costs that have to be met with any alternative; the debt service, utilities, maintenance and administrative costs.

He emphasized this is still a skeletal idea. "We're not in the process of evaluating area by area, the costs of the debt service, janitorial services, maintenance, utilities, and counselors. We're trying to see if the accrued savings of this alternative will be enough to facilitate financial stability."

"In addition we have to take inflation into consideration," said Armelin.

"There may still be a reduction in services with this proposal but hopefully this will bring about a minimal URF," he added.

Daniel Fitzpatrick, associate dean of students said last night "the proposal has merit under the right circumstances."

He said some members of the administration working on the problem, "are very favorably inclined, others are more cautious."

"Under this proposal we would probably experiment with the dorm fee. We could have everyone pay a set fee and refund unused revenue according to how much money the dorms saved," Fitzpatrick said.

"But," he said, "the support from this proposal must come from the commitment of the residents."

Douglas Forsyth, assistant to the Chancellor foresees "no serious problems" and called yesterday's session "very productive." He said "I'm [illegible] pleased "we're looking at these proposals together."

Members of both the administration and Rents and Fees now hope for feedback from the students. According to Armelin "we want to know what students think about this proposal. Rents and Fees will be having a meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, to provide for this feedback."

"The proposal could be worked out," said [illegible], director of Residential Life. "It all comes down to what the students want and what are they willing to pay for."

AAUP fails to agree on collective bargaining stance

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Members of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) reached no agreement about opposing a pro-collective bargaining faculty group.

It was decided at last night's AAUP meeting that the AAUP executive board would poll its members by mail to discover their preferences regarding the position AAUP should take in the upcoming battle for collective bargaining.

In a "sense of the meeting" passed by AAUP members, it was decided that "the chapter of AAUP approves of the principle of collective bargaining."

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) decided last week to forge ahead to gain faculty support in its effort to become the collective bargaining agent on campus.

Among the alternatives discussed by AAUP members, three drew the most support:

For AAUP to present itself as a possible collective bargaining agent in opposition to MSP.

For AAUP to suggest a coalition with MSP.

For AAUP to support collective bargaining but play no role in the election.

AAUP President Loren Beth described the meeting as "chaotic" but said he was pleased with the final decision to poll AAUP members about their feelings.

According to Beth, a coalition with MSP is not a feasible alternative because of the dues restrictions placed on both AAUP and MSP by the national associations with which both groups are affiliated.

AAUP is a member of the National American Association of University Professors. MSP is currently negotiating its affiliation with the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) which is affiliated with the National Education Association (NEA).

Those members voted to approve the principle of collective bargaining, debate centered around the question of whether AAUP should stand on the ballot as a collective bargaining agent or not be on the ballot at all.

Beth said he thought that if AAUP does not become the bargaining agent on campus, there is a good possibility that AAUP will lose members. "If one thing you want," he told members, "it is to keep a fairly strong AAUP chapter."

Grad senate retains SBA consultants

By AL COLARUSSO
Staff Reporter

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) unanimously approved an expenditure of $250 last night to retain SBA Inc., a student-run consulting firm, to evaluate and recommend alternatives to the administration's proposal for a Universal Resource Fee.

"I think we'll get a comprehensive report with a lot of input from a lot of people," said Senate President Jim Lindsey. Lindsey took no definite stand on the fee issue and is open for more information and discussion.

The Universal Resource Fee is the administration's proposed solution to the financial deficit that would result should the mandatory dormitory requirement be lifted.

The administration is currently fighting a law suit questioning the legality of their policy requiring all students to live in residence halls.

If the Universal Resource Fee plan is finalized by the administration, an increase of $75 or less per year would appear on each student's fee bill, according to the administration's alternative proposal.

In other business, the GSS approved an expenditure of [illegible] to help start a UMass student credit union.

The credit union would make small loans available to its members. From the interest the union will pay a dividend of approximately 6 per cent. According to Credit Union President Peter Birnbaum, the successful establishment of a student credit union would make it easier for students to receive loans as opposed to a bank.

Finally, the GSS voted to fund the UMass Student Aquacultural Society [illegible] to help defray the cost of attending conferences related to the relatively young field.

The Aquacultural Society is concerned with the possibility of harvesting protein and other nutrients from the ocean.

Southwest leads campus in damage incidents

By WILLIAM MILLS
Staff Reporter

One hundred and forty-three incidents of student-levied damage were reported in Southwest last month, a figure which supercedes the total incidents reported at the other residential colleges, according to a report released yesterday to the Collegian from the Office of Residential Life (ORL).

John Finley, director of ORL, said Central area recorded 30 student-levied damage incidents; Northeast 36; Sylvan and Orchard Hill 23 each. About $2,600 worth of damages was reported in Southwest. Value losses at the other residential areas did not exceed $400 last month.

Jim Buonomo, graduate assistant of Southwest services, said an average of $25,000 worth of damage is reported every academic year in Southwest. Buonomo said much of the damage is not reported. "I can't begin to estimate the amount of actual loss," he said.

Finley said value loss at the other residential areas compared with Southwest "evens out. Overall, we have about $25,000 worth of damages per year in the east side of the campus (all residential areas excluding Southwest)." According to Finley, the number of incidents in Southwest is "normally higher" because Southwest has about the same amount of students living there as do the four other residential colleges.

During February, in Southwest, Kennedy middle recorded the most value damage done with $336 lost. Buonomo said there is a slight increase in damage this year compared over the same period last year. "Last February about $200 less was lost than this February," he said.

Working in the Southwest Services for two and a half years, Buonomo said, "the University is lacking a solid damage policy. Unless we get together and pick one up, these figures aren't going to decrease any," he said.

"People are beginning to realize things have to be done here like instituting damage policies and inventory programs," Buonomo said.

Student Security Coordinator, Ben Clancy, said it is not the duty of the student security guards to protect property. "Our priority is to protect personal safety," Clancy said.

Clancy said he wants to prevent assault and battery offenses in dorms. Last semester, assault and battery exceeded all other dorm incidents significantly, including such offenses as vandalism, trespassing and disturbing the peace, according to a report issued by Clancy's office.

"My gripe is that the administration is too lenient with the offenders committing these incidents," Clancy said.

Meal ticket owners get raw deal

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

The Student Organizing Project's (SOP) Dining Commons Project and the soon to be released report from the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) have documented proof of disproportionately high food prices, poor nutrition, lack of student and affirmative action employees among other aspects of Dining Commons operations.

In comparision to what the other schools in the five college area are paying, UMass meal ticket holders aren't getting the same deal, according to the report.

At Hampshire College, where the students pay only 2-3 of what a five day plan costs here, students receive meals, seven days a week, unlimited seconds, steak every Saturday night and eggs made to order.

For the same price UMass charges for a five day plan, women at Mt. Holyoke are provided with waitress service, and meals seven days a week.

Smith provides its students with table cloths, candlelight, unlimited seconds and meals seven days a week at a cost equal to what the UMass student pays for a five day plan.

Also at the same cost, Amherst College students get both steak and roast beef once a week and meals seven days a week.

Locally, students in Butterfield, where their DC is student run, get seven meals a week with unlimited seconds for the same cost of the regular five day plan. There has been considerable speculation by employees of the Butterfield DC that the facility will be permanently closed during the dorm's renovation. The report states this is proving too much of an embarrassment to the University Food Services.

SCER has also found Butterfield food is generally better than UMass DC's.

Only [illegible] per cent of UMass DC eaters are satisfied with the way that DC food is prepared, and only 28 per cent approved of the food's flavor, according to a University Food Services Food Services Governing Board survey.

Research by the DC's nutritionists has disclosed the average daily DC diet provides twice the recommended daily amount of fat for males and 160 per cent of that for females. Also, according to a former official of the Food Services Governing Board, the DC's diet gives students three times the recommended daily amount of carbohydrates.

Acting Director of Food Services Arthur Warren, when asked why DC food is so greasy, said "Some people like greasy food and some people don't. We can't please everyone."

The report also shows that 12 per cent of the cost of a meal plan goes to retire bonds that paid for the construction of the DC's. That figure was taken from the DC's most recent budget. One DC, Worcester, will be paid for by the students as of this December and will revert to state ownership according to the report.

Warren said, "One third of the budget (not 12 per cent as the budget indicates) is spent to pay off the bonds, and this is money that otherwise would be spent on better food."

The Munchies and snack bars were intended to generate profits that would be used to lower the price of the meal ticket. However, all of the Munchies and snack bars, except Whitmore which has the lowest prices, lose money, stated in the report. The report also states these deficits are paid for by the students.

The reports state that greater efficiency of large, centrally located DC's should result in savings for students, partly as compensation for the impersonal atmosphere. An atmosphere which former Food Services Director Joel Storsham described as "as close to an army mess hall as you can get."

The reports by SOP and SCER conclude that the DC's are trying to improve things. However, no specifics were mentioned in the budget as to improving the food. In the past two years the DC's have put up a series of wall hangings and have a recorded menu telephone number to better inform students as to what they are going to eat.

SCER urges students to comment and/or criticize to Warren about DC food and conditions so that he can take their feelings into account.

To aid in high-rise blazes

Fire truck purchase top priority

By ROBERTA MARTONE
Staff Reporter

An elevating platform truck that will aid in combatting fires in the high-rise dorms on campus, is high on the list of budget priorities, said Chief John Doherty, of the Amherst Fire Department.

When asked if the purchase of the truck was in the UMass budget, Doherty replied, "I have it from President Wood that we have top priority on the list."

Doherty also said UMass President Wood confirmed the statement in January.

Doherty said the truck wouldn't arrive for two years after it is ordered. "The cost will depend on who gets the bid," he said.

In the meantime, Doherty said, the department would "do the best we can and deal as adequately as possible with the fires in high-rises."

He added that the department is in the process of building a new fire station at the intersection of East Pleasant St. and Eastman Lane, near Tillson Farms.

"We're building the station bigger so we can fit the new truck inside. If we weren't getting the truck, we'd have to close off a lot of unused space," he said.

UMTA appeals for cooperative housing

By PETER MUELLO
Staff Reporter

Close to 40 tenants from Lincoln, University, and North Village apartments voted unanimously for the UMass Tenants Association (UMTA) to continue negotiating with the administration for the initiation of co-operative housing by September 1975. The vote followed Sunday's presentation by UMTA members of a preliminary plan for co-operative self-management of the three Married Student Housing complexes.

The co-operative model described by UMTA representatives is based on the Commonwealth Terrace Co-operative, now in operation at the University of Minnesota. If and when co-operative management is adopted at UMass, the co-operative would enter into a management contract with the University.

Reliance on the Physical Plant and other University services would decrease in proportion to tenant involvement and support, according to UMTA representatives.

Through co-operative management, Married Student Housing tenants at the University of Minnesota have been able to reduce rents by 15 per cent or more.

UMTA members claim the management contract would benefit both tenants and the University. Tenants participating in the Co-operative would obtain lower rents and build a sense of community. The University would then be freed from most responsibility for the buildings, with the assurance that expenses, utilities, debt service, and management fees will be paid, UMTA members added.

They stressed that the model they presented was not a final proposal, but only "a first step toward that proposal," according to UMTA spokesperson, [illegible].

"Before we can proceed further, we must have greater tenant involvement to decide if and how the co-operative idea could develop in these complexes," she added.

Students vie for town meeting membership

By [illegible]
Progressive News Service

Approximately forty-five candidates from the UMass community will be running for Amherst town meeting member positions.

"We have the four UMass precincts covered with full slates," said [illegible], co-ordinator of the Progressive Candidate Pool. There are a total of seven precincts in the town of Amherst.

The pool is running on a general platform which includes a strong rent control proposal, a recommendation to ban "nukes" in the area, a proposal for the development of an effective mass transit system, as well as the non-enforcement of victimless crimes, according to [illegible].

"The Progressive Candidate Pool is not an attempt by students to take over the town of Amherst," said [illegible] Doyle, the voter registration coordinator for the group. "Rather, it is an attempt to attain proportionate representation for students, a body of citizens which has been not represented in town politics up to this point," he added.

The election of students as members of the Town Meeting is dependent on a large number of students registering to vote, and then their voting in the election. Traditionally, students have not turned out in large numbers in town elections.

"We hope the large number of student candidates will be an incentive for all students to become involved. It's an easy process, and in this election it could have an important impact," Doyle said.

Thursday, voter registration tables will be set up in [illegible] Dining Commons, from 11:30 - 2:00. Also on Tuesday, March 18th in the concourse of the Campus Center, tables will be set up.

Anyone can register at the Town Clerk's office from 9:00 to 5:00 in the Town Hall in the center of Amherst, according to Doyle.

"Students spend nine months out of the year in the town, he said, and it's important that we become involved in the decision making process that effects us at the town level."

Clark allies with Daniels' defense

Ramsey Clark has agreed to serve on a national committee to aid the Russell Daniels Legal Defense Fund. The case has been ordered a retrial by the State Supreme Court after a Springfield jury convicted Daniels of murder on the sole evidence of a "confession."

Daniels, a mentally retarded black man, 14 year resident of Belchertown State School, can neither read nor understand his "confession." The Supreme Court unanimously decided that the defense on his behalf was inadequate, the jury was unaware of his degree of retardation, no experts were called as witnesses to speak on retardation and its effects on behavior, and Daniels records at Belchertown was never presented.

Ramsey Clark has stated "the difficulties of interrogation of the mentally retarded are well known.... They often do not understand and can be led by suggestive questions to say or do things they do not understand."

Other members of the committee, which is still in formation are: [illegible], Robert F. Drinan, [illegible], Julian Bond, [illegible] Jones, [illegible], Mrs. Malcolm Peabody, Sr. and Mrs. Benjamin [illegible], [illegible] Rodriguez, and Jane Yolen Stemple.

Warren says DC no bids policy is legal

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
Staff Reporter

Purchasing Dining Commons products without first inviting bids is legal, according to Arthur Warren, Director of Food Services.

Daniel Melley, Director of Public Affairs, explained the Massachusetts Law that requires all state agencies to open up purchases above $500, allows an exception in the case of such items as library books and perishables.

The University, according to Melley, is "fiscally autonomous."

"We do our own purchasing," Melley said. "However we still have to follow state procedures, such as the bidding process."

Melley said the agreement with Lowell Brothers and Bailey was a year-long experiment which Food Services tried.

The old process of opening up bids on a week to week basis presented a "real problem," said Melley. This was evident by the poor quality of food received, he added.

Warren is satisfied with the "cost-plus" system and said it will be used next year.

"We'll invite bids next year," Melley said, "probably for a six month contract."

According to Melley, the Boston market price for a particular day would be the base price. What would be bid upon would be the mark-up, the amount of profit that the supplier would make, he added.

Phone-a-thon nets alumni $$

Successful in its first week, the alumni phone-a-thon netted $[illegible] in pledges.

According to Stephen Sadler, chairman of the phone-a-thon, the response was "above what we expected at this point."

Sadler added that a higher percentage of people were reached, and about half of those reached gave pledges.

Sadler said in spite of the economical and current UMass administrative problems, it's encouraging that people are responding positively.

Last week's participants included Crabtree, who is leading the dorm volunteers, with pledges totaling $[illegible]. McNamara, the Chadbourne and Veterans also participated last week. This week the Greek Area mans the phones at Memorial Hall.

Volunteer response has been very good, according to Sadler. Volunteers have been sent home the last few nights due to a lack of phones. Sadler feels badly about turning away volunteers, but encourages them to return by giving them first priority at the phones on following nights.

He explained the number of phones can't be increased due to the physical layout of the headquarters.

A pattern seems to have been set, with totals of pledges running high at the beginning of the night, according to Sadler. As volunteers gain confidence in requesting pledges, donations increase, he added.

Volunteers are provided with free dinner and beer. Crabtree is leading beer consumption with eight cases.

Interested people can come down to Alumni Hall or contact Sadler or his assistants, [illegible], or Martha Creegan at 5-2342.

Rebels fire rockets into Phnom Penh airport

Fails to stop US airlift of supplies

Compiled from Wires

PHNOM PENH — Rebel gunners pounded Phnom Penh's Pochentong airport with a barrage of heavy rocket and artillery fire yesterday, destroying a Cambodian transport plane but failing to halt the American airlift of food, fuel and ammunition.

Some 30 rocket and artillery rounds slammed into the vital airport and a neighboring village in a single five-minute period, killing one person and wounding six, military officials said.

A direct rocket hit destroyed an old Cambodian DC3 twin-engine transport plane.

But the U.S.-financed emergency airlift continued flying, bringing in 708 tons of rice, the biggest amount since the operation was curtailed last Wednesday, officials said.

In Washington, Democratic and Republican Senate leaders yesterday called for the removal of the government of Cambodian president Lon Nol. Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott said Lon Nol should resign in favor of a transitional regime that could then negotiate a truce and a new government with the Communist forces.

He made it clear he was speaking only for himself and not the Administration. He said he doubted that Congress would approve all the $200 million in additional aid for Cambodia proposed by President Ford.

"Let the leaders leave and I think peace will be forthcoming," Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said in a floor speech.

Scott said provision should be made for resettling several thousand Cambodians. "Slaughter can be anticipated if we don't get them out," he told reporters.

Scott made his statement to reporters shortly before the Senate passes a unanimous resolution asking the Ford administration to assure that at least half the rice being sent to Cambodia be made available for free, humanitarian distribution.

The resolution was sponsored by Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore., who said the rice being sent to Cambodia by the United States was going only to those who still have the means to buy it, while the poor starve and suffer malnutrition.

Members of a House subcommittee quoted CIA Director William E. Colby as telling them the situation in Cambodia is bad but said Colby gave no estimate of how long the Cambodian government could survive.

Colby testified before the House Foreign Affairs investigations subcommittee, which is to report to the full committee Wednesday on whether to recommend more military aid for Cambodia.

Ten Communist rockets struck in and around Phnom Penh itself during the day, killing three civilians and wounding nine others. Four of the rockets missed the city and exploded harmlessly in the Mekong River.

Vietnam Communists seize capital city

SAIGON (UPI) — Government defenders outnumbered two-to-one clung to rooftop positions and one remaining command post yesterday to fight off attacking Communist troops that seized most of the provincial capital of Ban Me Thuot in a tank-led predawn assault.

North Vietnamese troops also overran Hau Duc and Tien Phuoc district capitals in Quang Tin province near Da Nang, 380 miles north of Saigon, military sources said.

Government militia and 25,000 civilians fled the two towns after offering little resistance, the sources said.

Military sources said the tank-led North Vietnamese assault backed by heavy artillery all but captured Ban Me Thuot, a city of 70,000 in the Central Highlands about 160 miles north of Saigon.

Sirica dismisses all charges from coverup against Strachan

WASHINGTON (UPI) — At the prosecution's request, U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica yesterday dismissed all Watergate cover-up charges against former White House aide Gordon C. Strachan.

Prosecutor Gerald Goldman, asking that the charges be dropped, said Monday the immunization given Strachan for his testimony at the 1973 Senate Watergate hearings raised "substantial issues of law on which Mr. Strachan might have ultimately prevailed."

"I certainly concur," John M. Bray, Strachan's lawyer, said during the five-minute hearing. "We're very gratified."

In Salt Lake City, Utah, Strachan said he was "delighted" with dismissal of the charges. Recalling his comment to the Senate Watergate Committee that he would counsel young people to "stay away" from government service, Strachan said he still sticks with that advice.

"Young people just don't have the experience necessary to deal with such a [illegible] business," he said.

Strachan was indicted along with six former top aides of President Richard M. Nixon a year ago in the concealment of high-level involvement in the 1972 break-in at the Democratic National Committee in the Watergate complex. Strachan was charged with three counts of conspiracy, obstruction of justice, and lying to the grand jury.

Strachan contended that he had been given an informal promise of immunity by the original prosecutors, and that as a result of the formal immunity voted him by the Senate Watergate committee, he gave self-incriminating testimony. He said the testimony tainted the evidence later used to indict him.

In order to avoid a delay in the cover-up trial last fall until the issues could be settled, Sirica severed Strachan's case from that of the others.

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, former Assistant Attorney General Robert C. Mardian and former White House aides H.R. Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman — who were convicted in the cover-up trial — were not given immunity for their Senate testimony and did not give self-incriminating evidence.

Goldman said "the balanced and considered judgment" of the prosecution was that it would be "in the interest of justice" to dismiss the case.

Two RFK aides bare Castro plot

High UMass official recalls events

NEW YORK (UPI) — Two former aides of the late Robert F. Kennedy in a story in The New York Times yesterday linked the Central Intelligence Agency with the Mafia and a plot to assassinate Cuban Premier Fidel Castro.

The newspaper said that Kennedy told two of his aides, Adam Walinsky and Peter B. Edelman, in 1967 that agents of the CIA had contracted with the Mafia in an aborted plot to assassinate Castro before the Bay of Pigs invasion of 1961.

Edleman issued a statement yesterday in Boston in which he stated that he remembered the senator saying he stopped an abortive plot involving organized crime or the Mafia to assassinate Castro, but he (Edleman) didn't know if the CIA was involved.

"I recall Sen. Kennedy also said something like 'I found out that some people were going to try an attempt on Castro's life and I turned it off,' " Edelman, now vice president for policy at the University of Massachusetts, said.

The New York Times report said that Walinsky and Edelman, assistants to Kennedy when he was attorney general and U.S. senator, talked of the assassination plot in interviews last week.

"He (Kennedy) told us that he had discovered that the CIA had made a contract with the Mafia to hit Castro," the Times quoted Walinsky as saying.

Both said Kennedy told them he had played a role in stopping the assassination plot, the Times said.

In an explanation of how Kennedy's remarks were made, Edelman said that "In March 1967, Jack Anderson wrote a column suggesting that Sen. Kennedy may have blamed himself in part for the death of President Kennedy.

"Anderson said this because he said Robert Kennedy 'may have approved' an abortive CIA plot to assassinate Premier Fidel Castro. I remember Sen. Kennedy remarking, probably on the day the column appeared, words to the effect, 'Blame myself? I didn't start it. I stopped it.'

"That is the totality of my recollection of the conversation. I do not know when the events to which Sen. Kennedy referred took place, nor do I know any further detail of any kind respecting those events," Edelman said.

Walinsky also referred to a 1967 newspaper column and said Kennedy was outraged by it and "revealed to members of his staff that far from approving any plot to assassinate Premier Castro, he had, in fact, stopped such a plot when he discovered it."

State Senate panel votes to hire workers

BOSTON (AP) — The Senate Ways and Means Committee formulated a plan yesterday to hire the 255 social workers required by a federal court order, but without appropriating any new money.

The plan involves the transfer of $432,500 from the welfare salary reserve account and $213,000 from the state's emergency fund.

The first amount will pay for 186 welfare workers for whom money was available in a previous budget. The workers never were hired, however. The second will create [illegible] new temporary jobs.

The state has until Friday to hire the 266 new employes under a court order by U.S. District Court Judge Franklin Freedman, who has threatened to cut off federal aid.

The Ways and Means proposal, expected to come before the Senate and House today, would provide that all 266 jobs be filled on a temporary basis through the end of the fiscal year this June.

Kissinger seeks pact for divided Cyprus

ANKARA (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arrived here yesterday from Israel to try to arrange new talks between Turkey and Greece on the future of Cyprus. He left his latest Middle East peace mission for a day so that Israel can decide its next move in negotiations with Egypt.

Kissinger said he remained hopeful that an Israeli-Egyptian agreement over a second stage Israeli withdrawal in Sinai can be reached. He said there were "no unanticipated problems," but refused to discuss any details of his first round of separate talks over the past three days with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin.

"We need a time of quiet diplomacy," he told reporters. "You can expect no daily progress report during this stage of general exploration."

In Turkey, Kissinger has two aims: to get agreement on resumption of talks with Greece over Cyprus — broken off last month when Turkish Cypriots declared the northern third of the island a separate state — and where they might be held. The United Nations has been suggested as a possibility.

Turkey agreed that Kissinger could come here in a surprise move in the wake of talks he had in Brussels Friday with Greek Foreign Minister Dimitrios Bitsios.

Turkey had been refusing to meet American government leaders since Congress cut off military aid Feb. 5 on grounds American arms were used during the Turkish invasion of Cyprus last summer.

Sadat optimistic

By United Press International

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat said yesterday his betting was about four to one that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger will bring about a second stage agreement on a further Israel troop withdrawal on the Egyptian front.

Sadat confided his estimate at a meeting with top political aides and newspaper editors at his Aswan rest house on the Nile, where he talked with Kissinger Saturday before the Secretary traveled on to Syria and Israel.

School claim probed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Secretary Caspar Weinberger of health, education and welfare told Congress yesterday that health insurance for the jobless would be too expensive, unfair to working taxpayers and a bureaucratic headache.

Labor unions, health insurers, hospitals and organized medicine in a rare alliance have called for providing health benefits through the unemployment insurance system for unemployed workers.

Abortion ban sought

WASHINGTON (UPI) Two Republican senators yesterday called for a constitutional amendment banning abortion and possibly prohibiting some birth control methods.

Sens. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., and James Buckley, R-N.Y., outlined their proposed amendments before a Judiciary subcommittee headed by Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind.

Buckley's proposal would extend Fifth and Fourteenth Amendment protections of due process and equal protection to unborn children "at every stage of their biological development."

Health plan attacked

BOSTON (UPI) — An aide to Mayor Kevin H. White said yesterday the city was investigating School Committee Chairman John McDonough's claim the schools may be forced to close early this spring due to a lack of funds.

"We are studying it, but we have no position yet on the advisability of closing the schools early," White aide Frank [illegible] said when asked what the city's reaction was to McDonough's remarks.

Boltwood project to hire supervisors

Institutions were designed to segregate and maintain groups of individuals deemed exceptional with respect to social norms. Belchertown State School is such a place, where many individuals labeled "mentally retarded" or physically handicapped, live. Essentially, no persons are grouped within the institution according to their abilities to potentially live in the community and according to age, with each group forming wards or cottages, which are then grouped into units.

The Boltwood-Belchertown Project is a five-college program which is involved in structuring volunteer programs to serve some of the many needs of individuals residing at Belchertown state School.

The Boltwood Project is in the process of hiring persons for supervisory positions, which entails a year's commitment coupled with a two month summer orientation, involving workshops in developing skills and experiences within the institutional setting. Previous related experience is essential for the job, as is the ability to closely deal with a group of people.

Anyone interested in learning more about the position or securing an application, please contact Donald Fletcher at 323-6311 ext. 296. Leave your name, address and telephone number. The deadline for applications is Sunday, March 16.

Interns to enter primary care

Over 90 per cent of the 1975 graduating medical students at the University of Massachusetts Medical School at Worcester will intern in primary care according to information released by Dr. Reginald W. Butcher, Acting Dean of the Medical School.

"The results of the national assignment process for interns which we have just received are extremely gratifying," Butcher said, "not only because they indicate the high quality of our students but also because they reflect the emphasis we are placing on preparing primary care practitioners for Massachusetts."

Of the twenty-two internship assignments, seven are in family practice, twelve in internal medicine, and one in obstetrics and gynecology. According to Butcher, "As many as twenty of the twenty-two graduates may become primary care physicians."

Sixteen of the twenty-two, about three-fourths will intern in the northeast; nine will intern in Massachusetts. Butcher indicated that three of the graduating medical students have military assignments, and could well return to the Commonwealth when those are completed.

Butcher said "additional primary care physicians for the Commonwealth are being trained in local hospitals and family health centers in a family practice residency program sponsored by the UMass Medical School. There are fourteen residents in the program, and 12 additional residents will be joining the program on July 1."

The Community and Family Medicine Department of the Medical School has been at the forefront in the development of programs to improve health care delivery to the citizens of the Commonwealth. Butcher stated that "The Department has been influential in the decision of a high percentage of 1974 and 1975 University of Massachusetts Medical School graduates to enter the primary care field."

Public power pressures

By GREGG WILSON

Last week a report by the Governor's Commission studying the public power question reported that consumers would save 2.1 per cent on their electric bills under a Public Power Authority. Yet every year for the past decade a bill calling for the creation of a publicly owned power utility has met defeat in the Great and General Court of Massachusetts. Each year the private power companies, fearful of losing control over their profitable enterprises, have succeeded in insuring that the bill would die in a legislative committee. Thus they prevented action on the proposed by either the full House or Senate membership.

The opponents argue that while the stage would make an initial savings in investment in the long run, it would not be beneficial because of decreased revenues at the state and local levels. The public authorities would not pay taxes. More philosophically they point to the inability of the state to manage its present bureaucracies.

Yet the real problem with rising rates is not at the power producing level but in the prices utilities are forced to pay for the oil to generate electricity. It has increased four times over its 1972 level. Last year Northeast Utilities reported a profit of 7 per cent while the nation's oil companies enjoyed profits in excess of 100 per cent.

This year the situation promises to be quite different. [illegible]

Secondly, a citizens' group led by U.S. Representative Michael Harrington, has succeeded in obtaining the signatures of [illegible] Massachusetts residents in favor of the legislation. [illegible]

Question: What kind of a return do you expect to gain from your initial investment here at school? Also: What redeeming qualities have you gained from this institution?

Aaron Boykin

Aaron Boykin — Senior BDIC major living at Pufton Village.

"School helped me to get a direction: concretizing my particular ideas. I don't think my investment of money and time will ever be returned. I redeemed a sense of not doing traditional things, making my own patterns in life."

Fred Burns

Fred Burns — Senior Business major from Haverhill, living in Amherst.

"This type of institution shows you how to maneuver in a bureaucratic situation, similar to the armed forces. The situation here at school is equal to others."

Brenda Ginsberg

Brenda Ginsberg — Freshman History major from Lynnfield.

"I don't know if I can hope for a career since jobs are so tight. The best thing I could learn is to know how to meet people and find out the good in them. Every experience teaches you, whether good or bad. I hope to redeem better judgement of people."

Terry England

Terry England — Freshman from Cohasset, living in Van Meter.

"I hope to get a good academic education, but so far I haven't been satisfied with my courses. Socially I have made a lot of friends and met a lot of different people. I hope by the end of the term I will find something interesting to continue my education."

Robt. Besset

Robert Besset — Junior English major from Springfield.

Appropriately enough, President Ford held his eleventh press conference in the White House Bargain Basement last week. Reporters thronged into the nationally televised sale hoping to get some good buys on news stories, or at least cash in on some presidential reflections — the meat of any good journalistic sandwich. But instead they were hosted to a glorified soup line with the President dishing out the meager portions to all. And everytime one of the journalists got out of line and asked for more, his-her food stamps were immediately revoked. The text of the conference went on something like this:

Reporter: "Could you comment on what the imminent fall of Cambodia could do to your Domino Theory of Communist World Wide Conquest?"

Ford: "I don't find it appropriate to answer that at present. I haven't played dominoes with Henry for a couple of weeks and I don't know exactly what effect the fall of Cambodia will have on our game. I'm not too worried to be honest with you since I've got a 30 cents lead on 'em and Cambodia isn't worth a damn nickel anyway."

Media and injustice

By SALLY HOLMES

Last Saturday, March 1st, 82 people were arrested in Washington, D.C. for refusing to leave the White House grounds. About a hundred people, protesting the continuing U.S.-funded murder in Indochina and the lack of a universal, unconditional amnesty for war resisters, entered the White House grounds through the regular Saturday morning tour line, went through the White House and lined up along the driveway in front. There they could be seen by over 300 supporters demonstrating outside the White House fence.

Their message to Ford was that they would not leave until he came out and spoke with them; they were willing to wait for him to come back from Camp David. They placed in the center of the circle symbols of their resistance to the continuing war and the personal affront of Ford's "clemency". These symbols of U.S. oppression included letters of invitation to participate in Ford's insulting clemency program. The people there included long-time resisters, [illegible], old people and young.

Leader of team

Burke likes defense, work

By TOM CROWLEY

Imagine someone guarding Bob Carrington and liking it. Or covering Tony Hanson and enjoying it. Jim Burke did.

"I like playing defense. It gives me a personal satisfaction," the senior tri-captain from Needham said. "It's work."

"It's good, until your man goes wild," the 6'3" guard added with a grin.

Prior to this year, Jim was noted for his defense. Now he's known for another quality: leadership.

The bearded senior has become the acknowledged leader through his spirited floor play, not just his defense. Also because he took charge.

"I called a team meeting. It lasted for two hours," Jim said. "We were just hanging back and letting it happen. There was a lot of [illegible] going on. Bill and I weren't playing the way we should be. I was shooting about [illegible] per cent. I looked around and said, 'Hey, let's play basketball.'"

And they did. Shortly after that, the team went on a tear and won thirteen of their last fifteen games and got a bid to the NIT. But not to the ECAC.

"I was disappointed not going to the ECAC," Jim said.

"We were the best recently."

But Jim Burke was always a leader, and not only recently.

"When we were recruiting him," Coach Jack Leaman said, "I saw Jim win four or five games at the buzzer with a basket or a foul shot."

In high school in Needham, Jim led his team and the league in scoring. "They always ask me about that, (being a defensive player in high school but I led the league in scoring."

"I was invited to play for the state all-star team, but I wasn't going to play. My coach convinced me to go anyway, and I ended up starting," said the senior tri-captain.

"I had the same attitude when I came here. I wish I had the same attitude as Murph; he came to play."

Jim then joined with Murph and Bill Endicott as part of a 18-1 JV team. The next two years were spent on the varsity bench. He didn't expect to play much his sophmore year, and his junior year wasn't quite what it should have been.

"I came back out of shape. My attitude wasn't that good," Jim recalled.

"Jim was not in condition last year. Besides that, he was in the infirmary two or three times last year," Coach Leaman said.

"I did plan on starting Jim this year but it was my mistake to use him as a forward. He gave away too much height underneath."

UMass was Jim's choice. "I was recruited by Detroit and Georgia Tech, but UMass was my first choice. I had some friends coming here from Needham."

Jim won't be graduating from UMass this semester.

"I don't have any plans after this. I got a form from the Dallas Cowboys. If nothing comes up this summer, I'll come back and finish up. Why go through all this trouble for nothing?" shrugged Jim.

But this is Jim's last year of basketball and Madison Square Garden is the stage where Jim Burke will set picks, box out, and rebound for the last time. Jim led the team there and now it's up to all of them to take advantage of it.

Astros hand Sox first spring loss

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) – Bob Watson keyed a fourth-inning rally with a two-run double and J.R. Richard and Paul Siebert pitched three strong innings each Monday as the Houston Astros handed the Boston Red Sox their first exhibition loss 7-3.

Boston rookies Steve Barr and Mark Bomback each were called for a balk, helping the Astros to two decisive innings. After a call on a pickoff attempt by Bomback, Red Sox Manager Darrell Johnson was ejected for protesting too strenuously.

Barr hurled three hitless innings before issuing a walk to start the fourth. Then came the balk on an attempted pickoff. An infield hit and Watson's double to left were good for two runs and Milt May followed with a run-producing single.

The second of three singles by Jose Cruz, the balk, a double by Doug Rader, a sacrifice and Siebert's suicide squeeze bunt made it 6-0 in the sixth.

The Astros, 2-1 in preseason play, added two runs, one unearned, off rookie Jim Wright.

Richard pitched three hitless innings and Siebert blanked Boston on two hits in the next three. Ramon de los Santos was nicked for three runs, all unearned, in the seventh.

Women skiers finish, take second place

By [illegible]

The Women's ski team finished its regular season on a high note at Mittersill, in Franconia, N.H. The skiers placed second in the slalom Saturday and captured first place in the giant slalom on Sunday.

Light snow fell which made the course more difficult than usual. Those who slipped out of the main groove found themselves losing valuable seconds in the thick powder.

Martha Moran, the leading skier all season, had equipment problems and lost a ski on the first gate and was unable to finish. Jean Hayden also had her problems and couldn't finish. However, the others were up to the challenge and UMass placed four skiers in the top fifteen to capture second place.

On Sunday the results were even better. The skiers beat second place B.U. by 17 seconds.

Chris Pease, a promising freshwoman, captured third place. Martha Moran, regaining her form, finished right behind Chris with a fourth. Cathy Donovan, Jean Hayden, and Ann Delaney finished 5th, 11th, and 13th respectively.

B.U. was named overall winner of the season Sunday night. The Terriers had won a majority of the races and the announcement was no surprise. The UMass women were named runner up which was a recognition well deserved. They rallied from a mediocre start and won several races near the end of the season.

The individual standings were also announced. Martha Moran finished 3rd and Chris Pease 6th for the season. Kathy Donovan got 11th place. Jean Hayden and Ann Delaney placed 14th and 15th respectively.

With four freshwomen finishing in the top fifteen next year looks very promising.

Next weekend they wind up the season with the Can-Am at Sunday River, Me. There will be eleven teams racing in the womens division and the competition should be just as fierce as the regular season's competition.

Notice

There will be a sports staff meeting this Thursday night at 6:30 in the Collegian office. Assignments for the Spring Season and beat assignments will be handed out. All people, new and old, are urged to attend.

Jaspers have weakest record

Manhattan NIT foe

By [illegible]

UMass will kick off the 1975 NIT with a Saturday afternoon encounter with Manhattan, it was announced yesterday.

The one o'clock tipoff between the Minutemen and Jaspers will officially open the first round festivities, which will include eight games in a two-day span.

Another New England team, Providence College, will meet one of the tourney favorites, Clemson, in the second game of the Saturday afternoon twin bill.

Manhattan holds the dubious distinction of being the tournament's weakest team record-wise. The Jaspers completed their season with an overall mark of 13-11.

"They're not as bad as they seem," said UMass assistant coach Ray Wilson. "They were hurt by a lot of injuries this year, and played a lot of games without some key people."

A projected Eastern powerhouse in pre-season figuring, the Jaspers were listed in UPI's top twenty before the campaign opened.

One of the reasons the promise was never realized was a nagging back injury to Bill Campion. Great things were predicted for the 6'10 junior, but he was forced to spend a good part of the season on the sidelines.

Another 'key' performer for the Jaspers is 6'7 swingman George Bucci. Also a junior, Bucci has the ballhandling skills to handle a guard spot and the quickness and jumping ability to help out up front.

Others who have seen a lot of action throughout the season are guards Charlie Mahoney and Mark Carrington, and forwards Mike Young and Tom Kelly.

The winner of the UMass-Manhattan contest will advance to the second round of play, facing the winner of Saturday night's game between St. John's and Lafayette.

From there, the winner will advance to the semi-finals, to be played on Saturday, March 22, and the finals and consolation game, to be played one day later.

Tickets for the UMass-Manhattan game are also good for the Providence-Clemson match. They are currently available at the ticket office in Boyden. Tickets can be purchased by students for [illegible].

The pairings, as announced yesterday:

Saturday, March 15 — UMass-Manhattan, 1:00; Providence-Clemson, 3:00.

Southern Illinois-Pittsburgh, 7:00; St. John's-Lafayette, 9:00.

Sunday, March 16 — South Carolina-Connecticut, 1:00; Holy Cross-Princeton, 3:00.

Memphis State-Oral Roberts, 7:00; Oregon-St. Peter's, 9:00.

Bill Endicott shoots while John Murphy and Maine's Steve Gavitt look on. The Minutemen will face Manhattan, 13-11 in the first round of the NIT tournament on Saturday.

UMass credit union gets federal charter

By P.J. [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Members of the Board of Directors of the University of Massachusetts Student Federal Credit Union announced yesterday that they have been granted a charter by the National Credit Union Administration, an agency of the Federal Government.

The credit union will be opening for business on Monday, March 31, 1975. They will be providing savings and loan opportunities as well as financial counseling services to members. They will also be selling food stamps to the community at large.

Antonio C. [illegible], Field Executive Administrator of the National Credit Union, said the UMass Credit Union is the only student run union in the northeast, and the second in the country, the other being at the University of Florida in Gainesville, Florida.

"There is a trend on college campuses where students want credit union services and students are more interested in borrowing and savings," he said. The major problems with these credit unions is the turnover of students, he said. [illegible] added that he was impressed with the students he worked with at UMass, and believes the credit union will be a success. He said he hopes the credit union will serve the needs of the 25,000 students at UMass.

According to Peter Birnbaum, President of the Credit Union, the Principle Administrative Offices at Whitmore will change the computer program allowing student payroll deductions to be made automatically to the credit union on an optional basis. This would mean that money from a student's paycheck would be deposited in the savings account weekly.

The credit union has an advantage over area banks and loan companies in that the interest rate will be comparably high (targeted at 6 per cent) and interest rate on loans will be one per cent a month on unpaid balances, according to Birnbaum.

Members of the credit union hope it will be fully computerized by September 1975.

The credit union will not only provide services to students but will also offer experience to students working with the union, Birnbaum added. There will be approximately 30 students working in the credit union on a volunteer basis, he added.

The only paid position is that of the Consulting Manager, Richard M. [illegible], who will be working on a part-time basis. "He's been invaluable to us," said Birnbaum of [illegible].

"The success of the credit union is up to the students," said Birnbaum. "I feel there's a need for short term loans, especially book loans and the like," he added.

There is a possibility that the credit union will have a checking service within a year; the more things members want, the more we'll try to get, Birnbaum said.

Paul [illegible], Vice President of the Credit Union said all monies a student deposits is insured by the Federal Government, so there is no chance of a student losing money.

Corwin may be accused of falsifying documents

Charges possible in Rainbow case

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Bruce Corwin, treasurer of Rainbow Productions may be charged with falsifying official documents and representing improperly and not by error the identity of a member of the University community, according to [illegible], student attorney general.

If convicted of these charges, Corwin would be liable for separation from the University, said [illegible], [illegible] will act as prosecutor for the Student Senate if the case is brought before the Student Judiciary.

Possible financial violations and misuses of RSO funds are being investigated at the request by Rod [illegible], business manager for RSO, she said.

"All the activities of Rainbow Productions are being analyzed from the date of its inception to the present," said [illegible]. "This will include a total audit of all deposits and purchase orders but I'm not drawing any conclusions — that will be up to the Student Government," he said.

Portugal quells rebellion by rightist troops

Rebel leaders flee after attack

LISBON (UPI) — Right-wing rebel forces bombed an army barracks and pratroops seized Lisbon's civilian airport yesterday in a short-lived revolt against the leftist government. The rebel leaders fled the country and the government suggested that the U.S. Ambassador leave too.

Angry mobs of left-wing extremists poured into the streets of Lisbon and other Portuguese cities last night shouting "death to the Fascists!" Heavily armed troops rushed to the U.S. Embassy and sealed off all streets leading to it.

Brig. Otelo Saravio de Carvalho, head of the military security forces, indicated that the government could no longer guarantee the the safety of U.S. Ambassador Frank Carlucci.

"Our government should explain to him that for his own safety he should leave the country," Carvalho told newsmen. He said that since Carlucci's arrival the economic and political situation of Portugal has deteriorated.

The government announced it had crushed the revolt, apparently led by former President Antonio de Spinola, and said Spinola had fled to Spain and that other leaders of the revolt were in hiding.

The national television called on the people to round up the government opponents and broadcast the locations of all prominent moderate and right-wing military officers and politicians.

The right-wing paratroops occupied Lisbon airport for several hours and bombed an artillery unit stationed nearby ip what President Francisco da Costa Gomes described as "a counter revolutionary adventure." The rebellion fizzled as the paratroops failed to receive support from other units.

Official reports said 14 soldiers were injured in the attack. No deaths were reported.

Portuguese army troops and civilians take to the trenches in front of the army barracks yesterday after this army site was bombed by the air force to counter the rebellion by sections of the armed forces.

American airlift is curtailed by attacks

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — The American-sponsored airlift of food and supplies into besieged Phnom Penh was curtailed yesterday because of heavy and increasingly accurate rebel rocket and artillery fire on Pochentong airport.

The government of President Lon Nol fired its top military commander, replacing him with a former associate of rebel leader Prince Norodom Sihanouk, government sources said.

About 30 British and commonwealth citizens were evacuated from Phnom Penh Tuesday aboard a Royal Air Force C130 Hercules flight to Singapore.

Turboprop C130s, bringing in ammunition and fuel from bases in Thailand, kept on flying after the more vulnerable DC8 jets flying food and other supplies from Saigon halted operations at 3 p.m., two hours earlier than usual.

The U.S.-chartered DC8s lifted 519 tons of rice and 46 tons of kerosene into Pochentong before the early suspension cancelled six other flights.

More than 20 rockets and artillery rounds hit the airport before noon and one round exploded within 50 yards of a C130.

Lt. Gen. Sosthene Fernandez, army chief since September 1972, will step down Wednesday and be replaced by Lt. Gen. Sak Sutsakhan.

Sutsakhan, recalled to duty after three years as a counselor on foreign affairs, previously served as minister for security for Sihanouk, exiled titular leader of the Communist-led rebels.

Vietnam Communists launch full offensive, says Army spokesman

SAIGON (UPI) — Communist forces yesterday launched a nationwide offensive that forced South Vietnamese troops to fall back before coordinated tank and infantry assaults stretching from Saigon to northernmost Quang Tri province, the military command said.

The Saigon command announced the loss of three district capitals — the equivalent of U.S. county seats — and reported street fighting in a besieged fourth.

Fresh North Vietnamese forces were hurled into the street fighting at Ban Me Thuot provincial capital, where nine Americans including a 5-year-old girl remained safe but pinned down, spokesmen said.

Military sources said yesterday's coordinated assaults were the heaviest since the 1972 Communist offensive, which overran wide swaths of South Vietnam.

"As we see it, this is the beginning of a nationwide offensive by the Communists," said South Vietnamese Lt. Col. Le Trung Hien, spokesman for the military command.

Communist troops Monday overran Duc Lap, [illegible] miles north of Saigon, and adjacent Tan Phuoc and Hau Duc, [illegible] miles north of the capital, Hien reported.

Tank-backed Communist infantry early Tuesday attacked Dau Tieng district capital, 35 miles northwest of Saigon, and street fighting continued throughout the day, the spokesman said. Government defenders blew up a key bridge about one mile northeast of Dau Tieng, preventing the North Vietnamese tanks from getting inside the town, he said.

At Ban Me Thuot, "government officers had to call in airstrikes right on the streets of the city," Hien said.

Maine nuclear plant gets endorsement

Opposition group may block project

SEAPORT, Maine (AP) — While supporters of nuclear power hailed local endorsement of a proposed $800 million Sears Island atomic plant, an opposition group hinted yesterday that attempts would be made to block the project in the Maine legislature.

Cali Hollander of Stockton Springs, president of a citizens group called Safe Power for Maine, said two antinuclear bills would be offered to the state legislature.

Mrs. Hollander refused, however, to discuss the nature of the proposals or identify their prospective sponsors.

"I'm not prepared to comment on them at this time," she said. "Just wait until they're introduced."

The Central Maine Power Co. proposal to build a 1,200 megawatt nuclear station on the uninhabited Penobscot Bay island won solid local backing Monday at the ballot box.

The voting was watched closely throughout Maine as a test of local feeling on a project which has stirred extensive controversy around the state.

"We couldn't have asked for more of a clear mandate than a 3-1 vote in favor of the project," said Town Mgr. Peter A. Garland, who called on Searsport's 2,000 residents to abandon their differences and unite behind the development.

"It's my hope that now the town will lick its wounds and become friends again with those who opposed the project," said the former congressman.

Describing the voter turnout as the largest in the town's history, Garland said the referendum campaign had sparked considerable interest.

He also said it was marred by bitter feelings, and identified himself as a target of "character assassination" by the antinuclear forces.

A CMP spokesman in Augusta said the utility was pleased at the outcome of the vote.

Turkey, Greece agree to resume talks soon

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger helped Greece and Turkey agree on an early resumption of talks on the future of Cyprus and then flew back to Israel yesterday to resume his shuttle diplomacy between Israel and Egypt.

Turkish Foreign Minister Melih Esenbel said before Kissinger left Ankara that the Cyprus talks between the leaders of the Greek and Turkish communities there would be resumed "very shortly."

The Greek Cypriot delegation to the United Nations in New York, however, denied any agreement to resume the talks had been reached.

Kissinger said on leaving Turkey there had been "good progress." A senior official aboard his plane flying back to Israel said he believed that a framework could be found that could lead to a solution once the two countries agreed on a forum for the talks.

He said he expected that procedural agreement may come in the U.N. Security Council but even if not, he expected it soon.

State Senate passes bill to hire workers

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate quickly approved and sent to the House yesterday a bill to hire [illegible] new welfare workers and avoid a cutoff of $[illegible] million a year in federal funds threatened for Friday.

The House was expected to act on the measure on Wednesday.

U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman issued a court order last month requiring the additional hiring to meet federal standards. He warned that he would cut off all federal welfare aid if the deadline was not met.

The new employees would bring the social worker force to about [illegible].

The Senate bill, proposed Monday by Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, was intended to pay for the social workers without any new appropriations.

It involves the transfer of $[illegible] from the welfare salary reserve account to pay for [illegible] welfare workers who were provided for in a previous budget, but were never hired.

Rabin, Peres differ

(UPI) — A split over peace terms between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Defense Minister Shimon Peres was reported yesterday in an Israeli cabinet meeting called to draft Israel's response to Egyptian proposals for a second-stage troop withdrawal accord.

The Jerusalem Post said the special cabinet session brought to the surface differences between Rabin and Peres.

Peres has denied he and Rabin have split on the issue of a second stage agreement. "No differences," he has said but adding ominously, "just now."

Following the nearly three-hour session in Jerusalem the government issued a brief communique saying only that the cabinet had been briefed by the Israeli team conducting the negotiations with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Tariff veto stands

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress decided yesterday to let President Ford's veto of the oil tariff delay bill stand for the time being while the House pushed toward a compromise with Ford on an overall energy program before March 20.

The House voted [illegible] to 57 to refer the vetoed bill to the Ways and Means Committee, which drafted the measure, and Chairman Al Ullman of Oregon said it would be held in abeyance as long as Ford's voluntary suspension of oil tariff fees remains in effect.

Gurney trial begins

By ORVAL JACKSON

TAMPA, Fla. (UPI) — Testimony got underway yesterday in the bribery-conspiracy trial of former U.S. Sen. Edward J. Gurney — the first senator to be indicted while in office in 50 years.

Opening arguments began after a jury of 12, plus 6 alternates, was seated with the prosecution vowing to prove that Gurney wrung political donations from Florida builders in exchange for government favors.

Panel advances aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Senate subcommittee yesterday voted 4 to 3 to provide $[illegible] million in emergency military aid to Cambodia.

The vote came as Defense Secretary James Schlesinger said the military situation in Cambodia is grim, but hope still exists and "the fall of Phnom Penh is not imminent."

With a House subcommittee apparently deadlocked over Cambodian aid, the Senate foreign assistance subcommittee rejected President Ford's request for an additional $[illegible] million in military aid for Cambodia, but accepted an administration compromise proposal for less than half that amount.

FIVE-COLLEGE STUDENT COALITION AGAINST RACISM

Staff Photo by Ed Cohen

Marcia Coddling, national coordinator of the National Student Coalition Against Racism addresses the Monday night meeting. Earlier in the evening, Lisa Hickler and Paul Mishler, members of the 5 college committee against racism, conducted a discussion.

Student committee to end racism

Monday night, March 10, the newly formed 5 College Student Committee Against Racism began its effort to mobilize students for the May 17 demonstration in Boston to demand desegragation of schools.

Marcia Coddling, national coordinator of the National Student Coalition Against Racism, explained that the NAACP has thrown its weight into the May 17th action and is mobilizing its chapters throughout the country in support of the black students of Boston.

Since the court order to desegregate the Boston schools, the attacks on Black citizens of Boston have intensified to the point that the repression represents the heaviest conserted effort to decrease the rights won by Black people in the last 20 years of the civil rights and Black liberation movements.

In the 60's, the Black student movement made advances such as increased Black enrollment on campuses, Black studies programs, and more Black professors. With the increase of racist repression and an ever-tightening economic crisis, the gains made during the 60's are being cut back drastically today.

The meeting of over 40 people, have planned a Tribunal-Teach in here in Amherst on April 4th to begin a campaign against incidents of racism, including as the wave of current tuitional cut-backs; and the reversal of affirmative action programs, as well as for the demonstration in May.

April 4th is the anniversary of the death of Martin Luther King, he died to end racism.

The Five College Committee Against Racism has received endorsement from a number of political groups on campus, and its next meeting will be held Sunday, March 16th, 5 p.m., in the Campus Center. For information call 253-2565.

Peer sex education

By MELVYN BAULKMAN
Black News Service

This article is the first of a series of articles which will appear on a weekly basis. The articles will be dealing with health and sexual issues. Future articles will include current issues on human sexuality, question and answer discussions and interviews with interesting people in the area of human sexuality.

This article introduces the Peer Sex Education Program and specifically focuses on the Third World Peer Sex Education Team (3rd World P.S.E. Team).

The Peer Sex Education Program is sponsored by the Division of Health Education of the University Health Services. This program is based on the premise that in certain situations students can be empathetic and effective in helping other students. The PSE person after one academic semester of pre-service training, then participates for one year in in service training. It is during the in-service training period whereby PSE'ers actually function as resource persons to their fellow students as well as establish and coordinate various educational programs and colloquia. The PSE program is specifically designed to serve not only the dormitory students, but students in fraternities and sororities, and the entire Third World Community.

The 3rd World Team was made possible by the efforts of many and its continued existence represents the support of both the PSE 3rd World staff and students. Dr. June D. Butts (Div. of Public Health), Ron Mazur (Health Ed. Dept.), Winifred Noel (Grad. Asst.) and Mary Gould (Grad. Asst.) have functioned as staff personnel for the team.

The purpose of the 3rd World P.S.E. Team is to provide a service of sex education to the 3rd World community. To raise the awareness of the 3rd World community about human sexuality and how various aspects of human sexuality affect our daily lives is a goal for the team. The team has outlined the following objectives:

1. General consciousness raising through radio, news media, workshops and informal discussion groups.

2. Referral resource to fellow students who request information and referral to various campus services which can assist students with their particular concerns.

3. To provide factual knowledge about various aspects of human sexuality.

4. To learn from each other by the sharing of and the examination of attitudes and values.

I particularly stress the last objective, as I feel that one of the most important things that we should do is share information as a collective body.

The 3rd World team has been in existence for about two years. During the last semester the team sponsored three workshops which were well attended by members of the 3rd World Community. The workshops presented were: Love and Lovemaking, Blackman-Blackwoman Relationship, and Sexual Themes in Black Films.

The 3rd World Team will offer workshop and discussion groups this semester on request from member of the 3rd World Community. For further information, please feel free to contact one of the team members mentioned below or continue to check out this column. Keeping you informed of Peer Sex Education Programs sponsored by the 3rd World Team is one of the functions of this column.

End deportation of Vietnamese students

The U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service is trying to deport seven Vietnamese students for "overstaying their visas". The seven students have been active in the anti-war movement in this country. The students applied for political asylum before the I.N.S. started proceedings to deport them.

One of the students in Nguyen Huu AN who originally came to this country on an A.I.D. (Aid to International Development) scholarship; since the scholarship has been revoked, they have been accepted at M.I.T. as a graduate student.

Under South Vietnam's Decree Law 93-SL-Ct, An could be punished for his advocacy of peace or neutrality. His fate would not be pleasant since the Senate Appropriations Committee supports the students' statements: "The existence of political prisoners is beyond reasonable dispute....(and) substantiated accounts of cases of mistreatment and torture of prisoners has been authoritatively reported." (Report on FY1974 Foreign Aid Bill)

There is a legal basis for political asylum; Article 243 (h) of the Immigration and Naturalization Act gives the Attorney General the authority to "...withhold deportation of any alien to any country which in his opinion the alien would be subject to persecution on account of...political opinion." Also, the United Nations explicitly states, "No contracting state shall expel or return a refugee where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of...political opinion." (Article 33 of the United Nations Convention on Refugees)

MassPIRG scores student records law

MassPIRG has criticized federal enforcement of recently enacted federal legislation concerning student records and called for state action to protect students rights.

In testimony before the Commonwealth's Legislative Committee on Education, MassPIRG attorney David G. Burwell said: "We should not assume that because a federal law has been passed the state is relieved of its responsibility to protect the privacy rights of students. The federal law is poorly drafted and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) regulations implementing the act are totally inadequate. HEW has created a maze of appeals that must be followed before any sanctions can be imposed against defaulting schools. The entire act depends on the good faith of school officials for enforcement."

The Commonwealth's Committee on Education is presently considering H.4011. The bill filed by Rep. Lois Pines (D. Newton) would insure post-secondary students greater access to their school records and increased control over who is allowed to see those records. While the proposed state legislation is similar to the federal law (the Educational Rights and Privacy Act, better known as the "Buckley Amendment") the Pines bill would impose fines against officials who violate the Act. There is no similar provision in the federal legislation; the only federal sanction is the termination of federal funding received by violating schools.

In his testimony Burwell stated that MassPIRG has submitted formal comments on the proposed federal regulations to HEW. Among its criticisms, MassPIRG charges that sections of the proposed rules are illegal. For example, a proposed rule that would delay enforcement of the Act in states where state law conflicts with the federal statute is contrary to the supremacy clause of the U.S. Constitution and is therefore unconstitutional.

Resource Network hearing

On Thursday, March 13, at 7 p.m., in the Campus Center, the Resource Network will hold a public hearing on the value of programs and services in the Residence Halls. Asked to attend for the purpose of "hearing" the testimony will be those administrators who are now in the process of making major budget decisions which will effect the future of such programs.

In order that they understand the value of the services presently being delivered, and the potential consequences of eliminating those services, the administrators will be hearing directly both from those who deliver services and from students who receive them.

Members of the Network committee are now in the process of contacting as wide a spectrum of potential speakers as possible. Testimony is being solicited from students, agency and residence hall staff, faculty and other concerned groups and individuals.

Anyone who is interested in testifying is asked to contact the Resource Network (545-0851 or 5-0333) for more information and a place on the speakers' list. Each testifier will be asked to limit her-his presentation to no more than five minutes, be prepared to answer questions relating to their testimony, and to submit, if possible, a copy of the prepared text. The compilation of these statements along with a collection of additional data will be distributed, shortly after the hearing, to appropriate campus administrators. The entire evening will be taped and broadcasted on WMUA as soon after Thursday as possible.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM...two headlines in the Feb. 27 edition of the Indiana Daily Student carried these messages on page one: "I.U. salaries keep sliding behind other universities"; and on page five: "Half of I.U.'s faculty signs bargaining petition."

Tells the whole story, doesn't it?

IMPEACHMENT action was initiated against almost half the student senate body of Western Conn. College, recently, when less than a quorum of the legislators appeared for regular weekly meetings.

According to a page one story in The Echo, student newspaper, the senators who were present initiated the impeachment action on the basis of three consecutive absences which "in the eyes of the senate was considered as non-fulfillment of duties...under the Constitution."

A do-nothing congress, eh?

EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK appears to be the rule being considered by legislators in Indiana, where prostitution is illegal.

According to a report in the Indiana Daily Student, the lawmakers are considering a law that will equalize the penalties a prostitute may receive with those on her "clients."

The head on the piece reads, "Prostitution bill would trick tricks."

Woman's libbers, take note.

ALCOHOLISM IS A PROBLEM at UWis-Stevens Point, according to The Pointer newspaper, which quotes a Health center physician as estimating six per cent of the students are alcoholics.

And "Of the drugs that cause hospitalization," he says, "93 per cent are caused by alcohol."

The next question: how high is the curve?

Letters to the editor

A note of appreciation

To the Editor:

To all dining commons administrators and personnel, this is a letter of thanks to all of you!

This is my second semester on campus and I feel this qualifies me to honestly rate your services. Last semester I was on the regular fifteen meal plan, presently I belong to the new kosher plan. As evidenced in "The Collegian" you people and all service-rendering personnel in general receive far more than your fair share of criticism. This is not to say that constructive criticism is not good, it is, but too often we students dwell on the negative without giving credit where it is due. As for the dining commons themselves, I must record my overall satisfaction. I am most happy to say that I actually look forward to the meals and usually am quite pleased with what is served. Let me add that I speak for what I believe to be a substantial number of students.

The Kosher meal plan itself, is in its first semester and it especially deserves the praise of all who benefit from it. It isn't the easiest thing in the world to 'kosherize' an entire kitchen and serve strictly kosher food, but thanks to a dedicated group of students with much support from encouraging advisors and dining common administrators the plan got off the ground and now, in its second month, can be labelled a complete success. The waiting lines are non-existent, the food better than expected, the workers are friendly (as in nearly all the D.C.'s), and the dining area is pleasant. Already, we in the kosher plan have been visited by a food service representative, Marie Cappadonna, and Hillel Rabbi, Saul Perlmutter, soliciting our views on the plan. A most deserved thank you must also be given to Rabbi Israel Deren, the overseer of the whole thing.

Criticism certainly has its place, yet there's nothing like a good old pat on the back. Again, thank you to all, a vast number of us appreciate your efforts.

Sequestering senseless "Security"

To the Editor:

A contented, happy worker is usually a good worker. Students who can relax are much more easily taught. Think about this a little - it should make us realize that students at UMass are often harassed by our so-called "Security Guards". Don't think of it as being only the students - the same holds true for staff, and faculty. I know for a fact, when I am content, my presentation of material to my class, or a class I might visit elsewhere, is far better, and the students get much more from such a class. It would seem, if we actually do need a Security Department, we who make up the University should decide what we need. It is not in our interest or the interest of the University to have a small, select group pushing down our throats that which we don't want, and, more certainly, don't need. Certainly we do not need grown men wasting their time and everyone else's writing tickets and having cars towed while theft runs rampant and University property is damaged or destroyed, to say nothing of students who can't feel safe in or around their dormitories.

I would like to plead, beg, if necessary, that students, staff and faculty band together and see what we can do to make the security situation on this campus a better one. We could do this democratically, as things ought to be done, by presenting a petition showing what we desire in the way of security and also those things we absolutely do not want.

I am anxious to hear from people - so that we can organize and determine how we can best protest and proceed. Once we have a petition with many signatures, as a group we can present it to the proper authorities and anticipate initial results. If satisfactory results are not forthcoming within a reasonable time, we then can proceed to plan other ways to resolve this deplorable situation.

The Security System we are protesting is allowed to run rampant because of the great turn over - no sooner do we get something started than a sizable portion of the students and other personnel leave the campus, either as graduates or for a long summer recess, in the case of full-time personnel, a natural turn-over. Change in policy, Security Policies for example, is frequently established during these basically "in-active" periods of the University year. The returning student, the new staff and faculty is faced with a fact accomplished - these are the rules! We must not permit this academically normal transient personnel status to deter us from accomplishing what must be done to remedy this undemocratic - in fact, at times tyrannical situation. I need your names and addresses and-or telephone numbers to aid me in the initial organizational of a meeting.

When I suggested doing something to change the present Security System, I was told I was wasting my time - no one would show any interest. Please prove this wrong by dropping a note in my mail box in the Botany Department, room 221 on the second floor of the Morrill Science Building near the Science Library. Thank you.

Harry E. Ahles

Try 'n' tow this!

To the Editor:

For those of you who want to actively want to protest against Amherst Towing and the Campus Center Parking Garage, here is a suggestion: Obtain an automobile that's ready for the junk yard and get it up to the top of the parking garage. Take the wheels off. Let them try and tow it! I'll bet you didn't know the wreckers are too high to fit into the garage. The physical Plant will be forced to use their helicopter reserved for President Wood's shuttling between Amherst and Boston.

Commentary

Nothing's new under the $un

By JOHN FISHER

The 1960's were a boom period for postsecondary education. Starting with the launching of the first artificial satellite by you-know-which Godless totalitarian communist country in October 1957, the United States had decided that it needed more scientists, more engineers, more basic research, and, as long as were at it, even more people trained in the humanities.

Scene two. Fade back a decade and a half. Joe has just come home from the war. He has spent four years or so visiting Europe or the Pacific under less than ideal conditions. Now he is home to an economy that is better off than it was when he left. (The Waltons wasn't so much fun at the time, you know.) And then there's Jane who kept the home fires burning. (The women's movement could say quite a bit about what went on here, but for the moment we are talking about the universal fee).

Anyhow, Joe and Jane get married, put a down payment on a split level, and start producing kids. A whole lot of kids.

Cut back to the 1960's. The offspring of all those Joes and Janes are now 18 or so and want into college. Shift to an ivory-towered pre-Whitmore office in which sit two or more administrators, men of great learning and erudition. We've got all these kids and where do we put them? After all, the legislators aren't likely to give us a shiny new administration building and bucks for dorms, too.

Know what? Let's issue a lot of bonds and let the kids pay off the buildings as part of their board. There shouldn't be any problem since the Chronicle of Higher Education says that college is a limitless growth industry.

And so, dear UMies, the giants that went before decided to finance a whole lot of dormitories with bonds, something that a state university should never have done.

And we have to house them where we can keep an eye on them, otherwise they'll all screw or something. Also note that there were two problems the wise fathers overlooked. Problem one was that some of the dorms were modeled on that great invention of American urban planning, the low-income high-rise. Problem two was the fact that about 1950 or so Joe and Jane bought a television set and stopped having babies.

If the administrators in question had bothered to consult basic demographic data, they might have taken into consideration the effects of Ed Sullivan on the reproductive habits of America during the 1950's and the resulting decline in potential students; but no such luck.

Of course, there were a few other little problems that they couldn't have foreseen like the Vietnam war and the fact that the American economy would be able to prove my introductory economics instructor wrong by coming up with a combination of a depression and and inflation at the same time. Anyway, by the start of the 70's we find an administration stuck with more dormitory rooms than there are students who want them.

Now, we enter the second half of the seventies with the administration talking about dropping the mandatory dormitory residency requirement because a group of students finally figured out what the administration claimed it knew all the time: that it may well be unconstitutional to force people to live in dorms to cover the debts your predecessors ran up.

How does the administration handle things this time around? They certainly didn't get much student input when they floated the bonds, but this time they know better. Right?

Wrong. So far they have started out by blaming the victims. Tell commuters and area residents that it's too bad that your rents may go up, but blame those troublemakers on campus. And for seconds, how about a "universal fee"? Rather than sticking 60 per cent of the population with someone else's bad planning, let's shaft everyone. And be sure to blame those people who want to get off campus.

In fact there are several real alternatives that should be considered. Money is undeniably tight now. But must it be absolutely taken for granted that bond holders must come before students? Maybe we just shouldn't pay. Massachusetts wouldn't be the first government to default on bonds.

At least one attorney has suggested that a universal fee may be illegal. If students are no longer taking mandatory dorm residence as a given, don't count on a universal fee being taken quietly.

Money is undeniably tight now. But must it be absolutely taken for granted that bond holders must come before students?

There are ways such as cooperatives, renovations, and opening dorms to non-students that dorms, even with bond debt, could be converted from a liability to an asset. How thoroughly are these ways being investigated?

The only real "student input" that Whitmore has obtained is from meeting with some highly over worked student government people. Why not appoint a blue-ribbon commission of representatives from all student groups, townspeople, and some token administrators and give it real power to investigate the effects of any change in residential policy. Perhaps a moratorium on any action outside of legitimate court proceedings would be acceptable to students until a thorough study is done on the impact of the administration's proposed actions.

If a universal fee is indeed necessary, it should be students who determine what that fee is, because it will be students who will pay for it. To assume that the administration will act with greater wisdom than students is as foolish as saying that the Campus Center was a wise investment. The impact of the decisions made in the coming months will be great. It should be the people who must live with these decisions, students and non-students alike, who must have the major share in making these decisions. Until this is done, accepting any universal fee is premature to say the least.

AMHERST VOTER REGISTRATION
WELL, WE'RE NOT EXACTLY MIDDLE AMERICA-- BUT HOO-HAH DO WE GET RESULTS!
MOYLE

From our perspective

No representation without registration

One favorite pastime is complaining without action to alleviate the causes of complaint. The extent of action for some people is to write a letter to the Editor and forget about it. But as residents of UMass and the town of Amherst, we have the right and an equal responsibility to use whatever options are open for bettering the community. The frustrations we feel may be a result of non-action on our own part. The apathy of newly registered voters substantiates this inaction.

One of our many options is to vote. Due to relaxed residency requirements, students at UMass are now eligible to register and vote in Amherst. But turnout has been remarkably low among students. If we are to head off the future frustrations of high rent and environmental problems, we need representation in town government. And to have representation, students must register.

Amherst is a beautiful town; many of us consider it home, more than merely a place to attend school. It is up to us to work with the community in keeping it this way.

The more obvious issue of rent control is only the beginning in terms of improvements we can institute in Amherst. Day care centers and transportation may also come into focus as positive steps toward improving the community.

We live in Amherst, we abide by its rules; we support its businesses. Why not have an input into how it is governed? This year, over forty student candidates are running for town offices, and they need student support.

The final date for registering to vote is March 19. It is a simple procedure, and will be made even simpler for on campus students within the next few days.

Tomorrow a registration table will be set up from 11-2 at Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest. Saturday, the Amherst Town Hall will be open until 10 p.m.

Tuesday, another table will be set up from 10-4 on the CC Concourse.

Wednesday, March 19, the Town Hall is open until 10 p.m.

The Town Clerk's office is open on weekdays from 8:30-4:30. The office is located at the Town Hall, on the Belchertown Road Busline in Amherst Center.

Town elections will be held April 8; the time to register is now.

Essay / Prometheus Unleashed

By JOHN EISENHART

The wind was terrible. The wind is always terrible outside the library. Is it because our library is a vast and affirmative gesture, challenging the winds to a test of strength? Or is it perhaps, the object or source of some gross, interminable fart, unsmellable to our earthly noses, but still potent in its disregard for our dignity and our hats? Who knows? Who cares?

I had been studying something for the past few hours under the buzzing hum of blinking fluorescent lights that are screwed? nailed? glued? to the dull white unfinished ceiling of the Reading Room. Why don't they finish anything here? Who stole the interior of the Campus Center? and when in hell are all the holes and pipes and trucks and shit gonna plant themselves over with grass and stick it? I remember I lived in a place that had a huge hole where the street should've been, more mud than in the last election, and was filled occasionally with dirty men and loud, early trucks. They called it "Sylvan", believe it or not. Now, nobody calls it at all, unless forced into it. It's still up there on the hill. The hole's gone, but Sylvan's there during the week. I notice that the walls are dirty and scribbled with ribald and Sooth.

Take a look at those walls, UMies. Find some little message, maybe a nice vulgar epithet, and try to picture, in that imaginative mind of yours, the UMie who wrote it. Then, do the same with the Collegian, this article, your books. What does it all mean? Well, Spunky, it means that there's a very large possibility that someone is trying to talk to you, to make an impression upon your eager Being. But in order to do that, that someone has to speak your language, your own intimate language from which you build your fantasies. Watch out! They may think they know something about you and the way you are. They may be relating to you all wrong, seeing you in a different light and sending you meaningless and disturbing messages you don't want to hear, and probably shouldn't. Trust 'em, and you'll be sticking your neck out too far. Better just lie low and scramble your grey matter. Better not read. Throw this away...

Oh, when you're by the library, check and see if the wind is fresh. And let me know; I'll be studying something up on the 19th.

Tall tales of UMie

We used to slide down the middle of the escalator in the Campus Center. That was before someone stuck those metal bumps in the way and tacked down the cushions on the benches.

We used to lie out on the horseshoe in Southwest on warm spring afternoons to catch some rays, dope, and gossip. That was before someone hard topped it and made a basketball court out of it.

We used to concoct devious means of entry into the Bluewall at night. That was before someone lowered the drinking age and didn't account for the crowds that would change the place.

There are lots of things that we used to do on Campus. Sometimes, when I'm feeling reminiscent and nostalgic, I tell some crazy stories to my pals. We laugh and then we think of how things use to be in relation to how things are now.

About a hundred years ago, when I was a freshman, I heard stories of the infamous strike, Eric the Rat, the little Hatch, Southwest sinking, and how big the pond used to be.

We gawked at the skeleton of the Fine Arts Center and imagined what it would be like swinging from the crane on top of the library. We'd chastise the short haired guys with brief cases and chase after the long haired ones with knapsacks. We could tell how cool someone was by the number of patches on their dungarees.

But now, when I stare into the faces that don't yet shave, with their schedules that say the class of 1979, and at fingers that point to all 105 pounds of me and say "she's one of the big kids," I freak. They know nothing of the Traffic concert that almost ended all concerts at UMie. They know nothing of the big dope bust that supposedly "cleaned up" Southwest. They know nothing of the School of Education being taken over by Third World persons. Just as I knew nothing of a bowling alley in the back of the Hatch, mandatory freshman beanies, Oswald Tippo as Chancellor, and American History as a core requirement.

Which is too bad. Which also brings me to the point of this shpiel. ("About time you said something relevant," yell Linda and MaryLou. "Shut up," says I, "I'm getting to the moral of the story.") To understand American politics you have to know a basic history of American politics. To understand Chinese philosophy, you have to know a basic history of Chinese philosophy. But, there is no basic understanding of UMass. Why? Because no one knows the basic history of UMass. ("Big deal," says Linda and MaryLou, "The Bluewall just opened.")

Even in the most primitive of societies there is one person designated to be the historian of that culture. But in an area as transient as this, it's hard to find a person who remembers Poor Richard's magazine (Gary does but he won't talk about it.)

So maybe UMass should have a history of itself. ("History is like a river," says MaryLou, "But don't quote me.") In four years people won't remember the School of Ed. scandal, "Layla" on the jukebox, or an attempt by the administration to rip the students off with a universal fee.

So until there is some sort of history of UMie, I guess it's the responsibility of the people who've been here for a while to hand down these priceless gems of antiquity.

And if you happen to bump into me, I just might have some stories to tell you.

Enlistment: Not what it seems

Freedom of Speech
Army Style

To the Editor:

The present ad campaign conducted by the armed services for recruitment purposes has touched upon a subject which was hotly debated only a few years ago.

Granted, times are hard and jobs are scarce, but if enlisting in the armed services is used as a last resort to escape the current recession, then the person making that decision should take a long hard look at the side of the military that the recruiters don't talk about.

The armed services will tell you anything, but when it comes to living up to those promises, then it becomes a different story. The military has an escape clause in all contracts made by them which states that if the military sees fit to place you in a particular MOS (job) rating, even if it is not the one of your choice, then they will and there is nothing you can do about it. Why? Because once you're in, you're military property.

The military will tell you that you will retain all the rights you have as a civilian. What they don't tell you is that you will be subject to military regulations which will wipe out all your civilian rights. Sound conflicting? Sure is.

Again, once you're in, you're military property and you are treated as such. You are "indoctrinated," you are totally stripped of your identity, and you are rebuilt into the character that they want to see. Any type of resistance is not tolerated and you are punished accordingly. Even if you speak out on a perfectly legal (by civilian standards) subject and your superior doesn't like it, you are quashed, fined, confined and realigned into the "proper" way of thinking.

If a superior does not like you, your personality or your attitude, he has the means of reflecting this on your military records in the form of SPN numbers (supposedly they have been outlawed, but I wouldn't put it past the services to sit still and not find a way around this). Many veterans today have been falsely and maliciously labeled as subversive, undesirable, etc. for the rest of their lives, simply because they have at one time or another come across a superior who they "rubbed the wrong way." Many men who received even honorable discharges and applied for jobs were rejected because of their SPN classification. How tragic for someone's future to be ruined, all because of one man's opinion. SPN is just another form of spreading ugly rumors that have created even uglier results.

Now what's the sorriest part of all this? That the uniformed services see fit to conduct themselves in this fashion? No, sales ploys have been used profusely by all factions of our society, especially government agencies.

The sorriest part is the fact that the unsuspecting rabbit who gets his-her head filled with promises of free medical, free dental, free this, free that, guaranteed employment, steady income, and a uniform does not see fit to find out why (if the service is so great) have countless millions chosen to get out. What makes them leave? What is it really like on the inside? Why do people count the days until their "hitch" is up? Why do people choose to find out the hard way that there are two sides in telling about the military way of life?

Today the great job squeeze is on and the services can be more selective about who goes in and who doesn't. In a way, that's good. Maybe the military will then be forced to place more mature and intelligent people in responsible positions, instead of the blindly loyal morons I ran into many times too often while I was in. But the person going in, or entertaining thoughts about going in, should find out everything about the service. Let's face it, if you were going to buy an expensive item, like a sterer, an automobile or a house, you'd make damn sure this item was "right for you." With the military, you're paying the most important price - years of your life - and you'd better make damn sure the military is "right for you," because years of your life can't be refunded!!

UCF and the real story

To the Editor:

Your report on the new Infirmary Visitation program contains several unfortunate distortions. To begin with your headline, the program was offered to the Infirmary (not formed by them) and worked out cooperatively with Infirmary staff, U.C.F. staff, and interested students.

Most distressing is your statement that this is to "service infirmary patients with emotional problems." That is precisely the emphasis we are trying to avoid! Of course, being sick or injured is emotionally distressing to just about everyone. Our visitation program is intended as an extension of the excellent health care already being given by Health Services staff. It intends to add to the quality of caring. The implication of your article is that we are an adjunct of Mental Health. We are not, although the friendly visitation we are offering might brighten someone's outlook and to that degree improve their "mental health."

We are not assuming that anyone is "sick because of loneliness (sic)." On the contrary, we assume that loneliness is almost synonymous with life at UMass (or any similar large institution). Insofar as a helping hand or a visit diminishes that loneliness for some members of the community we will feel that we have in a small way improved the quality of life.

All persons connected with University Health Services are committed to protecting the privacy, physical and emotional, of patients in the Infirmary. I very much regret that my explicitly off-the-record comments found their way into print in distorted form and thus suggest that this privacy and confidentiality may be violated.

Beware of Bemben's Gulf

To the Editor:

A few weeks ago, I bought a 1965 Mustang at Bemben's Gulf Station on Rt. 9 in Hadley. Mr. Bemben and I had made an agreement for the price of $500 prior to the purchase.

I showed up at his Gulf station with Dick, the fellow who had bought my old car. Bemben informed me that he had been to see his business partner and that the partner had insisted that he get $550 for the car. I explained that we had made an oral agreement for the price of $500. Bemben said that he hadn't talked with his partner when he had quoted that price. I asked Bemben if he'd split the difference and take $525, leaving me enough to pay the registry expenses. He refused. I asked for his partner's name so that I could talk to him. Bemben gave me the name reluctantly, and I gave him the $550. As I was putting my plates on my $550 mustang, Bemben approached me and asked me not to call his partner, saying that the partner was a mean bastard and would probably punch him in the nose if I called him and gave him a hard time. I suspected that he was lying about his conversation with his partner, but I went into the station and finished the paper work.

When I got home, I phoned Bemben's "partner" and told him the whole story. Bemben had in fact, lied to me. The man I telephoned was not Bemben's business partner, but merely an acquaintance. He had not insisted that Bemben get $550 for the car and couldn't understand why Bemben was dragging him into the situation. I called Bemben and told him that I knew that he had lied and cheated me and that I wanted my $50 back. He said that he wouldn't give it back to me. I don't have any legal recourse because nobody witnessed the $500 agreement that Bemben and I made. It is my opinion that Frank Bemben is an unethical business dealer and I urge anyone reading this letter to boycott Bemben's Gulf Station and tell other people to beware. It's on Rt. 9, about a quarter mile before the lights in Hadley.

A call for faculty bargaining

To the Editor:

I support the efforts now being made on campus to achieve collective bargaining for the faculty. I am convinced that this will be in the interests of both faculty, students, and eventually the administration.

I hope the Faculty Senate, at its meeting Thurs. afternoon, March 13, will give serious consideration to the two motions concerning proposed changes in the Academic Personnel Policies document. Professor David Booth, Secretary of the Faculty Senate, will be presenting these motions.

I urge concerned faculty members to attend the meeting in order to listen to and-or participate in the discussion of the document which could have significant effects on our lives at the University.

A deal for Dean Allen

To the Editor:

The front page of the Collegian for Wednesday, March 5, 1975 cites an interview with former Dean Allen stating that "The cost of educating an average School of Education student is $600, compared to $1,400 in Business and $2,500 in Engineering for an equivalent period on campus.

Since the School of Business has 70.5 full-time faculty for 2,000 students, and Education has over 110 faculty for 2,100 students, the accounting calculations behind Dean Allen's conclusion escapes us.

Since we produce Certified Public Accountants (CPA's) in the School of Business, we would advise caution in relying on such cost figures.

We would like, however, to make a deal. If Dean Allen will agree not to teach accounting, we will agree not to teach education.

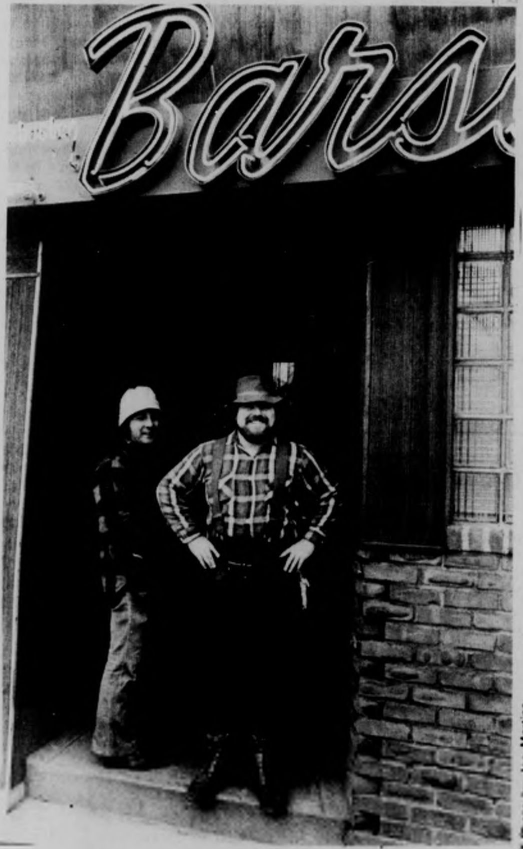
Student explores Amherst bars

Where can you go, how much do you get, how much does it cost?

By WALTER HAMILTON
Staff Reporter

Before I could nudge the receiver to my ear, the voice of G. Gladstone, world traveler, UMass student, and affectionado of the amber bubbling brew howled his greetings.

"I want to have a cocktail," he announced. "At every club, establishment, lounge, gin mill, and beer joint in town. And you're my guest."



Staff Photo by Joe Martins

That was an offer I couldn't refuse. Gladstone fired my enthusiasm for adventure while I edged my dilapidated Chevy through Amherst Center traffic to Route 9. Down gentle slopes and around easy curves we coasted to the first stop on my companion's itinerary, The Rusty Scupper.

Couples and groups in their twenties lounged in captain's chairs and sofas surrounding low tables. They sipped drinks and chatted easily above the strains of a man singing and strumming tunes at one end of the hayloft. From our lofty perch we watched waiters tending tables lined with diners on the first floor of this magnificent old barn. Our moderately priced drafts (60 cents for 10 oz.) slid down quickly, and we soon retraced our course back down Route 9.

"Time to shift to second gear," decided Gladstone. "We're heading for the Village Inn." So downstairs at the Drake Hotel we plunge, or more appropriately, dive. What manner of creature inhabits this windowless den? Low ceilings, exposed pipes and rock foundation walls surrounded police probing pushers while pirates plotted and pool sharks pumped their prey in smoky cavern corners. Tube groovers stared at the fare blaring from three color screens. Something for everybody. Cheapies for us (35 cents for 12 oz.) in paper cups, we gulped them furiously while embroiled in a frantic fussball contest. It was time to escape the underworld. Upward we struggled against the force of an eager stream of arrivals to the inferno.

We clambered finally to the serene stratum of the Drake's upstairs lounge. Ensconced in cushioned swivel chairs we sipped golden nectar (65 cents for 12 oz.) from stem glasses and shared our sublime concerns.

Uproar was in the air. Forgotten tomes lay open and squashed face down flat on dormitory beds while half finished papers languished in the jaws of idle typewriters.

"Yeee...Haw. We want Merle, and Charlie Pride, and Tex, and Tammy." Squeezed between the pinball machine and bowling game, bottled beer in hand (55 cents for 12 oz.) we were shitkicking it at The Rustic Roost.

It was only a few steps from that establishment to the next. We entered Barselotti's and for a moment I was blinded by the light and choked by the smoke. We edged to the fringe of a group watching the action at the pool table when the all male patrons of the bar roared their approval. Bobby Orr had scored on screens at each end of the crowded bar. We guzzled our inexpensive drafts (30 cents for 10 oz.).

"Let's get out of this gin mill," said Gladstone. "I'm a Ranger's fan."

Again we had only to trudge a few yards and pay a $1.00 cover to enter the cramped quarters of Quicksilver. A crasty beer joint it was, but the sounds were loud and addicts of the silver ball played on their choice of machines. We slurped our drafts from paper cups (40 cents for 10 oz.) and studied the bar's unique collage before pushing along to The Pub.

The man at the door collected a dollar from each of us.

"I guess he couldn't tell old G. Gladstone was rollin'. Third gear," he announced. Before the waitress could return with our steins (65 cents for 10 oz.) my rollin' companion was moving in on a group of unsuspecting females. "Don't have to worry girls," he said, "I've already drank fifteen or twenty birth control pills tonight." One of them chose to ignore his sexist babble and accompanied him to the dance floor. The Pub offers entertainment almost every night, assorted happy hours, and serves complete meals as well as sandwiches and snacks.

"Why leave all this for the Campus Center?" I asked.

"Because it is there," he answered.

Dumba, dumba, dumba, dumba, the Bluewall rhythm boomed like thunder. A student ID and a TOC card (costs 50 cents) was the ticket to the deafening din. In a purple haze I stumbled and squeezed past tangles of the hopping, shuffling, shouting, burping, weaving student population. Gladstone, cruising in overdrive by now, jammed a pitcher of beer ($2.50 for 80 oz.) into my clutches.

"Hold onto this and don't lose it," he said before he melted back into the crowd. I had no trouble finding friends to help me consume the contents of the giant foamy flagon.

From the Top of the Campus our gaze extended over the jumble of campus buildings, past the lights of the dormitory towers to the bluish ridge of the Holyoke Range. It had been quite an adventure. Glasses aloft (40 cents for 11 oz.) we toasted to Saturday night in Amherst. America drinks and goes home.

Renovations brighten Student Union

By SUE KIERAS
Staff Reporter

"Students can actually see their Campus Center fee ($34.00 per semester) in action," remarked coordinator Ed Kelly, the Asst. Manager of Building Operations in the Maintenance Dept. He was commenting on the student Union Building renovation that was done during intersession.

Major activities achieved by the Maintenance crew with the aid of Physical Plant men include:

—repainting and wallpapering of Student Union halls

—Pool room - new paneling and the painting of pool tables and walls

—Ladies' room (upstairs in S.U.) - new lighting, wallpapering and painting

—the addition of 200 square feet of billboard space in both the S.U. and the C.C.

—conclusion of repainting of Hatch walls

"The project was a success," claimed David Pira, a work study student for Maintenance, "if and only if it holds up." Past abuse of the building in the simple forms of pencil marks, graffiti and the tearing off of wallpaper were the build-up of past problems which prompted the recent action.

Co-work-study employee, Russ Goddard agreed, "The main problem is the immature student, especially the one who is turned away from the Hatch or the Bluewall."

Pira resolved, "Hopefully students will see where their money is going to, and not destroy it."

An entire sweep of the Student Union has not been attempted since the building was built in 1957, according to Kelly.

The replacement of the steel grey-blue atmosphere by reds, yellows and oranges gives the Union a "warm effect" and wipes out the "institutional look," Kelly said.

Some complaints have risen concerning the stress on the atmosphere rather than the efficiency of the ladies' room facilities. In reference to the Tampax machine, one girl remarked, "They ought to put a sign up; that hasn't worked since '67." Incidentally, the ten soap machines are empty.

According to two Physical Plant painters, Bob de Forge and Walter "Bunny" Knightly, most students have commented favorably about the projects' results. Both men said they really put their heart into the job, totalling nearly 200 hours of painting.

"The only difficulty," de Forge added, "was when the ceiling began to cave in." The holes in the ceiling can be seen nearby the Room to Move. There is a possibility the ceiling repairs may be a future project.

Alfonse Goulet, a Physical Plant carpenter responsible for the pool room paneling, believed work went smooth except for a few pool stick pokes. Goulet and his partner Bob Commeau both enjoyed working around students.

The man behind the carpeting, Jim McPhee, installed new rugs as well as completing his daily duties.

The Maintenance Dept. also serviced other less obvious duties during the school break in the S.U. Such activities included:

—insertion of 37 sets of crash bar safety hardware security —movement of the Room to Move and the Lecture Note Service

—general clean-up

Kelly said, "I hope they appreciate it."

CEQ presents lecture on effects of Alaska pipeline on environment

One of the more controversial ecological issues of the last few years has been the construction of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline. This issue was the result of a direct confrontation between economic interests and environmental concerns. This week, the Coalition for Environmental Quality is presenting the third in its series of lectures aimed at informing the public on aspects of the environment. The presentation this week is titled "The Environmental Effects of the Alaska Pipeline" and will be presented by Professor Paul Barrett, who has done extensive work on arctic ecosystems over the past few years.

The lecture will be given today at 7:30 p.m. in the Engineering East Auditorium.

Residential Memorandum

Although the University would like to house every student who wishes to be housed during Spring Vacation, due to problems of dormitory security this is not possible. However due to the special situation of the following students these students will be housed in their own residence areas from March 22nd through March 30th.

—Foreign Students
—Student Teachers
—Domestic Exchange Students
—Students involved in approved Academic Programs (verfication needed).

Those students who fall within the above stated categories and-or have questions should contact their Head of Residence by 5:00 P.M., today.

BDIC program deadline April 11

Deadline dates are rapidly approaching for students interested in entering the Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Program (B.D.I.C.).

A spokesman for the B.D.I.C. office, located in Goodell, announced the following schedule:

"All students currently working on proposals for this semester must have an appointment for a final interview scheduled by April 11."

"Students interested in entering the program for the summer or fall '75 must make initial contact with the B.D.I.C. office by April 11. Summer students must have proposals completed and interviews scheduled by May 1, while fall '75 students must do the same by May 16."

A definite schedule of deadline dates for transfer students will be announced in the near future. Currently, transfer students have six weeks from the time they make initial contact with the B.D.I.C. office to their final interview.

Any inquiries regarding the B.D.I.C. program and deadlines should be made in person at the B.D.I.C. office, located in the basement of Goodell.

Life Planning session Project Self announces

Project Self and Days and Weekends are programs for, by and about women sponsored by Everywoman's Center in Amherst. Life Planning is the focus of a March 15th Day. The day will be an opportunity for women to concentrate on important questions and potential answers focussed around a series of life-planning activities designed to encourage planning and decision making.

Project Adventure is a four week workshop beginning April 15 through May 8 sponsored by Project Self. This workshop involves a series of activities and physical competency experiences for women. In the process, participants will share physically and emotionally challenging experiences and begin to develop confidence and knowledge of their physical selves. This workshop will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 3-5 p.m.

For more information and to register for any of these workshops call or drop in to Everywoman's Center 506 Goodell UMass, Amherst or call (413) 545-0883.

Smith College art exhibition

Five anonymous American paintings are now being shown as part of an exhibition at the Smith College Museum of Art. Besides the five paintings, twenty-seven works from eight other institutions and several additional works from Smith's collection, have been brought together to form the exhibition.

The exhibition was conceived and planned by Sarah R. Mason, a 1974 graduate of Smith and former art student of Charles Chetham, Director of the Smith Museum. Through her research and study of other 18th and 19th century works, Ms. Mason has tried to suggest the problems which such anonymous works present to art historians and curators.

At a reception in the museum tomorrow, Ms. Mason will discuss the exhibition and its importance in illustrating the high quality of painting done by artists outside the larger academic tradition of American painting.

Running from now until April 20th, the exhibition is free and open to the public.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

Wednesday, March 12 — Born today, you possess a nature that is basically spiritual in nature. It is a spiritualism which will inspire you as work on any given project begins and stamp the completed project with your special signature when the work is done. You have an exceedingly strong desire for self-expression — but your chief way of doing so will be through the application of spiritual energy to those endeavors which, at least as far as others are concerned, promise only material rewards. For you, however, such endeavors will take on new depth, new dimensions altogether.

You possess much of the artist's temperament — and very likely something of an artist's creative talent. Yet you will not be driven by any tremendous desire to be an active participant in one or another of the arts. Indeed, if you can be an [illegible]

Although you have a highly developed instinctive sense, you are not one who puts a great deal of faith in knowledge gained intuitively. You prefer the safety of book-learning; you enjoy knowing that what you know is of a conventional, established nature. Even so, you encourage others to act according to their instincts, for, basically, you believe in the accuracy of what is grasped in such a way.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Questions of a legal nature may arise to plague you during the afternoon hours. Use the morning in an anticipatory manner — seeking answers.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — If you are careful to leave no stone unturned in your efforts to find answers to another's questions you will surely have your way by evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You should be able to gain results on the employment scene as a result of recent at-home studies. Direct energies toward new goals.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you fail to understand another's motives, you will very likely fail to understand your own. Try to see yourself as you see others in the same boat.

Israeli jurist speaks at Smith

Today at 8 p.m. in the Browsing Room of the Neilson Library of Smith College, the Five College B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations in cooperation with the Five College Chapter, American Professors for Peace in the Middle East and the Smith College Student Lecture Committee will present Amnon Rubinstein, Dean of the Tel Aviv University Law School. A jurist, journalist and leading Israeli TV personality, Dr. Rubinstein is the founder of the "Shinui" (Movement for Change) founded after the Yom Kippur War to work for political and social change. Its membership is primarily of academicians and other intellectuals.

Dr. Rubinstein is a member of the editorial board of "Ha'aretz" Israel's leading and independent daily, and a regular columnist for the same paper. His articles, analyzing current events in Israel have appeared regularly in the New York Times Magazine and in many other journals and have been widely translated. He is author of several books, among them "Here, Now" which covers a wide ranging variety of subjects from the plays of Harold Pinter to a satirical study of the Israeli woman, "Jurisdiction and Illegality," and the "Constitutional Law of Israel."

A gifted and dynamic lecturer, he participated in [illegible] and in 1969 in the American-Israeli Dialogues sponsored by the American Jewish Congress. He was invited by Harvard University to be guest lecturer at the Center for Middle Eastern Studies in March 1970. He has participated in a number of American TV documentaries on Israel.

Bromery addresses Stockbridge reps

Chancellor Bromery will speak to Stockbridge Senators on the subject of "Stockbridge's Role in the University," today.

A large turnout is expected and any interested persons are welcome to attend. The meeting is scheduled for 8 p.m. Campus Center [illegible].

Staidler speech

Neal Staidler, former Congressman at large from Michigan, will speak on Thursday at [illegible] Campus Center at 3:00. Mr. Staidler, to be presented by the College Democrats of Amherst, will speak on the topic of "The Democratic Party and the problem of voter alienation."

Staidler is a member of the Democratic National Committee and has been active in Democratic party reforms. He was recently named by President Ford to the commission that is to enforce the campaign expenditure rules recently enacted by Congress.

Ah yes, Below the Salt has and always will be the kind of magazine that would print peculiar work. But, as they state at the onset of every issue, they can't promise everybody's work will fit. Well, for one reason or another, the work we have for you is just that. But, Mike and I feel it deserved a better fate than lining our kitchen cabinets. And in our minds, as well as all of the other writers, we done good.

concert

by Jim Paulin

At the Peter Frampton concert, the sounds of metal and voice were distributed to the crowd by waals of speakers flanking the stage: they looked like a cross between jet (controlled by the pilot on stage who "pulls the strings.") engines and air vents: big conical speakers enclosed in bank vault size wooden cabinets with slats on the top resembling Venetian blinds. One of the speakers bore the brand name "Eliminator", reminding me of the fetus homogenizer, a tool used in performing abortions. The imposing wall of speakers is as much of a symbol of power as the skyliner edifices of this campus.

The barrel shaped spotlights, across the floor from the stage in a ceiling level "bunker", with smoke from the crowd rising through their beams, resembled recently fired cannons.

The crowd watched this martial display like generals on a reviewing stand watching a nation's army parade by. Rock concerts--the orgasm of the industrial revolution.

car tape decks

by Jim Paulin

Electronic sound in the car. The reel of tape spinning and tapes through heads, paving the highway with sound from a studio. A whole collection of tapes in a case coated with ersatz leather sitting on the front seat or the back seat or the floor or in the glove compartment or on the windshield. Conversation travels between the front and back seat, so is the taped music which is bouncing off the ceiling and the windshield and the side and rear windows and the music richochets inside the mobile metal shell. As long as the tires are spinning, so does the tape reel which runs so regularly it should have its own odometer to record musical mileage.

records

by Jim Paulin

Records are to music what a book is to the language: a privacy-promoting preservative, nullifying your need to leave the room. In the room with the books on the shelf and a rotating record being interviewed by a singletoothed reporter who is answered with circumlocutions. In the room with door open, not much is happening, the sun slides through the smoke and hits the floor and the record obviously spins through the smoke.

stereos

by Jim Paulin

Dormitories are sanctified by electronic deities, deities plugged into walls, deities bearing revolving plastic discs, deities speaking in many different tongue, deities providing companionship, deities dominating parties drawing all attention to themselves. These deities are gods of pleasure, regularly providing incentive to smoke and drink and drift away....

Stereos are friends, faithful friends. So are cigarettes, the "twenty faithful friends." Walk into a room, nobody there, put on a disc - and-instant companionship: predictable conversation, and always the same body language.

Stereos are shaped like boxes and so are rooms. The stereos convert the rooms into extended stereos and every object in the room is adopted by the stereo and converted into a speaker.

Paint covers the walls and ceiling, a rug covers the floor. The stereo emissions covers the covering.

As books on a shelf become part of the background scenery, the sounds dutifully emanating from the speakers become background noise, routinely acknowledged and routinely ignored.

Time stereos punctuated by electronic sounds grammatically structuring a day into action (verbs), emphasizing a situation (adjectives) permitting relaxation (commas) and sleep (colons). The clock radio shakes the bed and pulling off the sheets (capitalization.)

Stereos are nice, they fill the air in a room, they reduce opportunity for conversation. They're technological luxuries which have escaped villainization by those who usually condemn so many other nouns created by technology. Cars pollute, t.v. is mindless, but stereos, well they're civilized. "I mean I read all about how technology is so pernicious, how it's always fouling its own nest and Jesus Christ this is so aggravating I think I'll turn on the stereo and forget all about this aggravation for a little while...yes, a little while, or what the hell, I'll listen to it for a big while, and I'll want to listen to it more and more and 'I'll buy a big system with speakers big enough to blast birds out of trees and rattle the posters on the wall. Oh, how I love my stereo, I mean a room would be intolerable without it. Can you imagine going to a party without a stereo or riding in a car without a tapedeck? I mean I can't imagine going anywhere without a stereo ...."

"Good God! a power failure I'm all alone! Maybe I'll sing! But I only know a few songs and the electric guitar won't work. I'm lost!"

The Top Ten (the only ten) record stores in town

by Mike See Kostek II

There is quite a substantial music market in Amherst, with a potential 30,000 plus collegiate community buyers, as well as dribs and drabs from the Regulars. Through the years, places like the famous White Light, Amherst Audio, the Listening Post, and Superficial Smile have been and gone, but there has always been a solid market here for the round disc. The stores in college towns like Amherst are always more interesting than straight sheds such as Greenfield or Southwick, as there is a bizarre range of music tastes located in college towns whose denizens, though transient, are usually fed by a bigger bankroll and wider backgrounds. This makes for some fascinating shopping. No doubt about it, this a good town for record shopping, better in many respects than Boston, as we escape Boston's jadedness and higher prices.

There is just about every kind of record to be found in town, except for strong runs of ethnic records. You can check out Humphrey Bogart movie soundtracks, the Seldom Heard playing bluegrass, imports of Can playing their strange German Rock and Herbert Von Karajan conducting the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra through Beethoven's nine symphonies in a Deutsche Grammophon box selling for a little less than $40. This is in addition, of course, to the mainstream Pop, Rock, Jazz & Country selections, the meat and potatoes of any store's trade.

The following is a look at Amherst's disc emporiums by a recordphile who has been haunting them for more than seven years now. The ratings, albeit subjective, are made with a definite leaning toward the real local store owned and operated by someone from the area, and not a straight outside concern. Other factors such as honesty, ethics, knowledge, atmosphere, service and personality come into play, as well as the following Main Criteria: (the all-important extras)

1. Used Records bought and sold (a must for the serious buyer of quantity).
2. Imports (an exotic, yet useful item).
3. Cut-outs (the $1.98-2.99 items dropped from companies' catalogues or overstocked. Another must.).
4. Occasional "Specials" from $1.89 to 10c. (A fascinating realm in which you can scoop six James Brown records for 69c or the two record set of The Bible movie soundtrack for 10c. Another must.).

Elton John, No. 1 Pop Star, drops in to congratulate For The Record on the occasion of their being named Amherst's No. 1 record store. (That's Eltie in the middle, with the striped coat and rose-colored glasses).

Written down: (prices are of 8 March, 1975:

No. 1 For The Record remains tops. Picking up the great tradition of used records and the unique 10c bin of the late White Light, FTR remains one of the best stores found anywhere. $4.99 is standard price for the now standard $6.98 manufacturer's list price, and that's a fair one. They have the finest selection of imports, 200 healthy ones at $5.95 avg. in the area; they keep up a solid rock, blues and soul catalogue, and hit enough of the jazz highlights to be helpful. They run through a hefty stock of the $1.98's, dabble in tapes and are one of the main concert tickets outlets in the area. Only things missing are a bigger overall catalogue (an expensive proposition these days), a bigger classical section and more sales at the $4.17 level. Another problem is the sometime sour mood the propriators exhibit. But let's not get picky. Where else are you going to get your Melody Makers?

No. 2 The New Record Shop. The shop isn't new anymore, and it's stuck in the middle between being a real collector's store and Grateful Dead Heaven. Fine selection of rare bluegrass, blues and jazz. Their $4.59 average price mirror For The Record's and they feature a strange section of intermediate cut-outs and surplusses ranging from $3.20 to $3.49, as well as a very interesting set of rare cut-outs on labels such as Pablo and Argo. The folks there will order anything you want at no charge, have about fifty imports scattered about ($5.66) and a solid solid Classics section. However, they seem trapped in a rut that doesn't make it too interesting to visit often.

No. 3 Sunshine. Bursting from nowhere, these eager beavers have parlayed the lowest standard price in town ($4.17), the lowest sale price in town ($3.88), a fine selection of used records and cut-outs into the number three slot. Holding them back are a very limited stock (thin rock, a little jazz and blues) and a practice of selling Playboy on the counter. If they ever expand into a fuller catalogue, look out.

No. 4 Soundscope. I keep hearing those "Soundscope is going out of business" rumors, but this Boston chain's entry seems healthy as ever as your big, wide concern sweeping quite a few interesting areas. Their $6.98's sell for either $5.28 or $5.74, not too hot, but they have, next to Discount, the best catalog in town. Excellent classical, jazz and blues sections. Heavey traffic in tapes, both new and cut-out. They have a number of sales at $4.17-4.37 helping to offset their regular price, as well as the finest, most complete cut-outs in town, although they go for $2.49. It's the general artificial torpor of the Mt. Farms Mall that seems to creep in and dampen proceedings, with a bit too much money-flash holding the place down.

No. 5 Discount Records. Columbia Records' entry in the race also suffers from a surfeit of money-flash, with its turnstyle-ized $5.59 price tag. Discount, however, remains the store for immediate rare record fulfillment, with a reported stock of 80,000. Their classical, Broadway, specialty and jazz stocks can not be touched, with a heady cut of budget items (mostly $2.19) an interesting facet. They have a few $6.49 imports, and pack a goodly amount of new releases and selected labels and artists on sale ($4.09-4.79) to make good buys, and currently feature most of their stock going for $4.77 and less. Their main problem in the past has been a certain stiffness in their operations — no fun, no real sales. A few crazy items, such as one great 69c number, have helped a little, but not enough to help its slipping a little. Besides, the New Record Shop will order that rare item for you at a dollar less.

No. 6 Zayre's is the first of the fun stores on the list. These are the crazy places where records are a secondary item, and where a visit will either be totally in vain or else full of great finds. This is due to the $1.89-10c sales that creep in and out of town like gypsy fortunes. Besides having the most regular and the craziest (33c is not unusual, and I doubt any other place would have had that 10c selection) sales of the fun places. Zayre's has the only real steady 45's in town as well as occasional $3.97 top seller sales where you can snatch things like Bob Dylan and Nektar. Besides that though, they have a weak stock going for $5.57, a bunch of standard Harmony-Pickwick budget items, making the place practically useless otherwise.

No. 7 Woolco is another dumb fun store. Lots of $1.97 tapes and records, a few sale ($4.19) albums, and occasional real sale (97-67c) tapes and records, good country discs and various TV promotions. This is the place for the serious K-Tel record buyer who has to have them before they hit the cut-outs. Besides that, it's seventeen-year old city and (5.29) dumb with a skimpy selection in everything.

No. 8 The Paperback Booksmith, as you might expect, is a bookshop with a record corner tacked on. Thus things don't keep up to date with the other stores, and the price is $5.24. There are a few sale items ($4.24-4.99) and a fair amount of cut-outs still going for $1.98. Besides a few rare selected speciality cut-outs, it's pretty boring.

No. 9. The University Store is a convenient grab-bag for the more indolent of you masses. They have the standard best-selling rack-jobbed stock, with a little flair in jazz and folk. Their $5.33 price isn't too good though. The store's best days come on their $3.97 best seller sales and $1.97 cut-out sales, with some spiffy buys in classical and obscure rock and jazz items.

No. 10. Lafayette. The only people who buy records here have to be audiophiles who can't see beyond their components or crystal sets into the other stores. Horrible stock, horrible price, $5.37.

THE HOLLIES
(Epic)

English MOR rock is alive and thriving these days. Witness the new Hollies album. Remember these guys? They put out some of the best singles of early period British rock. Over the years they've had a few personnel changes, but that distinctive Hollies sound is still here. Alan Clarke has been the mainman since day 1 of this band (except for a brief hiatus), and his firm command shows no signs of slackening. The Hollies are a vocal group first, writers second and instrumentalists third. It can never be said that anyone in the band plays outstandingly, but let it be said that as a unit this is an unbeatable soft-rock unit. The original tunes are superbly suited to the band's [illegible] vocal style, and a [illegible] version of local favorite Bruce Springsteen's "Sandy" is included here. [illegible]

Making Tracks by Charlie Gillett
Inside the Record Business by Clive Davis reviewed by Paul Kontrimas

It's interesting to be reading two books on the same topic simultaneously, and these two prove exceptionally amusing when read together. The amusement lies in discovering the blatantly different motivations of both authors Charles Gillett and the ex-president of Columbia records division, Clive Davis. Gillett's intellectual intentions to find out just what's behind all that music he liked so much promises success for his book. Davis' more obscure, self-centered intentions insures that his book will go down the tubes.

Making Tracks happened because Gillett scratched around the record biz, and in particular, Atlantic Records, long enough to come up with a good history of that company and the big three who put it together — Jerry Wexler, and the brothers Ahmet and Neshui Ertegun. From the outset Gillett was determined to find out the proverbial "real story". He traces from the beginning the whole business of Atlantic records, starting when it was a seedy, two-bit, three-man operation that did all the recording, promotion and the selling of singles from a one-room office (they used to have their office in a run-down hotel in order to utilize the free switchboard and thereby avoid hiring a receptionist.)

" . . . Gillett traces Atlantic records starting when it was a seedy,two-bit, three man operation . . . "

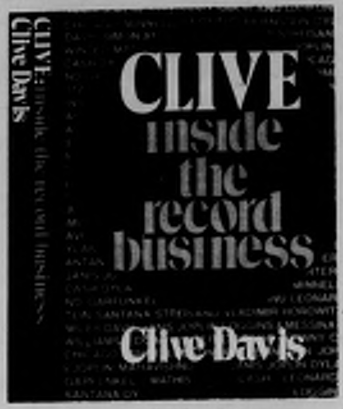
Gillett traces the company through the outset of the album buying rock audience when they are sitting tight with a rooster of talent consisting of Sonny and Cher, the Buffalo Springfield, Iron Butterfly and Dr. John. Somewhere in this time, folks like Leon Russell, Carole King, David Geffin (now, an executive working for asylum records) and a man named Mac Rebennack (better known as Dr. John) were making names for themselves as piano players in recording session, office workers, and song-writers.

Finally, Gillett looks at Atlantic Records today, finding it now a sub-group of the Warners-Atlantic-Electra organization, which is, as I understand it, a subsidiary of Warner Brothers, which is, in turn, owned by the Kinney Corporation, whose other pass time is running its multi-million dollar parking lot operations that owns much of the parking lots filling up New York City.

Out of Gillett's research comes some interesting little stories. For example, the eccentric Dr. John is explained, acts, dresses and throws gris-gris the way he does because as Jerry Wexler explains "like many other recording session men, Mac (Dr. John) grew frustrated working for producers who couldn't hear (music), and when he saw that Dylan and Sonny Bono were doing what they were doing even when they couldn't sing, man, he figured it was time for him to try something..."

Throughout the book, Gillett's stories ring true and free of pretensions. As a lover of the Rhythm and Blues spawned by Atlantic's promotion, he has shown his appreciation to those that made such music available.

Davis' claims of having such artists as Simon and Garfunkel what they are just may be true, but after a while, it becomes tiring to hear a man blow his own horn. And furthermore, his convenient position as first person story-teller instinctively causes one to cast doubt on what he is saying. The speakers is in too safe a place telling such stories in retrospect when there is no one there to argue his point.



MAKING TRACKS

Clive Davis' book smells a bit fishy, though. As many of you already know, Davis just last year was fired from his position of President of Columbia's records division amidst rumors of drugs floating between record company and record artist. Much publicity came from this incident, and it sometimes appears in reading this book, that it is intended as a rebuttal to all the bad press about the author.

This book is written in the first person that, by observation, contains an average of six"...and then I did..." or "....so I proceeded to tell..." per page. Sometimes it appears that Davis would like us to believe he is Music personified.

Nonetheless, Davis' interesting business perspective sometimes brings humerous moments to the book. One such remark concerns a S.F. person by the name of Pamela Pollard, noted for her soft, husky singing style and warm stage presence. Most likely you've not heard of her, because, as Clive says, "...her album didn't lend itself to FM support; the medium was getting more and more and more progressive; and her music, by contrast, was pleasant and melodic." (Just what is this man saying?).

In contrast, Davis explains Elton John's commercial success by the statement, "...(Elton) was in N.Y.C. for an appearance at Carnegie Hall, and I though that he might enjoy hearing some of our new artists. I took their newest releases along for the visit. "I've already got them" he said. It was Thursday; the albums had been released the previous Monday. Elton says he reads the trades every week...and he opened up a trunk in his living room to show me hundreds of cassettes and eight track tapes. It had become instantly apparent why Elton John has hits consistently...He knows what contemporary music is, he hears the changes."

Inside the Record Industry offers quite a collection of such anecdotes and trivialities that may be of interest to those observers of the popular music bizniz. Stories about Miles Davis' dark moodiness, Sly's sleaziness, Loggins and Messina's blandness and Andy William's "Hi there, I'm still dead!" —ness makes for some interesting reading. But look for Making Tracks first.

Tech Hi-Fi, one of the largest chains of stereo shops in the country, has two stores in this area. The Northampton Store on Main St., and in Amherst on 259 Triangle St.

The stores bring the largest variety of component equipment to the area as well as 50 years of stereo experience by their trained audio consultants.

All Tech Hi-Fi personnel go through a comprehensive training program, to better acquaint themselves with the equipment they are working with.

Service is the name of the game with Tech Hi-Fi. Jim Hemingway has been repairing equipment for five years in the Amherst area. Our repair department does factory warranty service on all equipment sold by Tech Hi-Fi. Remember if you move you can bring your components to any Tech Hi-Fi for factory warranty service.

The other Tech policies are seven days money back guarantee.

Thirty day price protection, Tech refuses to be undersold, if you can find a lower price with the same services we will match that price.

Ninety day, 100 per cent trade-in policy. If you aren't happy we will give you full credit towards anything in the store.

One year speaker trial. Again if you aren't satisfied you are protected. We will give you 100 per cent trade-in towards a new pair of loud speakers costing at least twice as much.

These are just some of the reasons to check out Tech Hi-Fi. Come in and let one of our audio-consultants help you pick out the system you've waited for.

Where did we go wrong? A Critical Examination of What Happened To The Rock Feeling

by G. Gomes

Well, now that I'm out of UMass, I've had a brief chance to examine what's been happening since the late sixties. I haven't liked what I've seen, but the point of me liking or disliking what I've seen is moot — it happened. That does not mean that I'm resigning myself to "the inevitable" — I'm not ready for the noose yet.

What happened? Flip your memory banks back to the year 1969 and remember. Remember the sixties? Remember that very last acid trip you took when you tried to figure out everything and observed yourself as a rat in a maze? Remember flashbacks? Remember the zenith of the supergroups — Blind Faith, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Whine, and the death throes of the Beatles and other humans who were worshipped as GODS? Do you remember thinking that, gee, you really didn't want to give up the opportunity to get a $10,000 a year job?

"No freaks for us...you're safe baby, you're safe Mama...you just take your TV dinner and you cook it up."
—F. Zappa, 1965

And, accordingly, the toll of trying everything too fast will lead to a concretization of the old values — too much freedom will lead to voluntary discipline (or slavery, depending on how frazzled the individual becomes;; too much dope and sex will lead to priestly ascetism; too much reliance on electronics will lead to a hatred of systems which weren't even explored decently by Rock musicians, which will inevitably lead to a 'roots' movement. What happens when an entire group's roots consist of three chord progressions? Well, the group will head back to the roots, only to find that the feeling they were looking for didn't lay in the chord progression, but in the feeling they got when they were first learning their instruments — when that was the best they were playing because they could not play anything else.

" . . . remember the zenith of the super groups – Blind Faith, Crosby, Stills, Nash and Whine, and the death throes of the Beatles, and other humans who where worshipped as GODS?"

Admittedly, the I-IV-V, blues and R&B progressions were the basis for a great many fine musicians, among these Hendrix, Clapton, Beck, Zappa (from '50's rock). However, the main thing that made these musicians stand out was an expansion on that basic knowledge, especially with the uniqueness (not the virtuosity) of their styles, which were beefed up with electronics. Your average rock'n'roll band were not particularly able to reproduce what Hendrix did, because they were copying him, not his sources. (In Jazz-Rock, or whatever those guys are calling themselves now, we've got a lot of people trying to copy Coltrane — and coming out as third-rate copies. Oh, it's nice, but you could take any of these guys out of any one slot and put them into another. Pharoah Sanders doesn't really sound like Coltrane and neither does Archie Shepp, even though both these men studied under Coltrane — probably because Coltrane taught that one should get himself and his own sound together, rather than making oneself a human XEROX machine. There is a difference between admiring a man and wanting to make yourself into a carbon copy of that man). Unfortunately, what happens in the U.S. — particularly in whatever rock groups there are left — is that people feel obliged to copy in order to survive. As far as that goes, it's one of the symbols of professionalization and standardization in mediocrity that transfers itself into the creative lives of artists. Rock musicians in the U.S. are exceptionally good now, more than capable of burning the tails of their British counterparts. So, why don't I throw those British whimps out the window and declare undying loyalty to the American rock musician?

Quite simply — they ain't got no soul, I fear. As the Sacred Cowboy said in his review of Emerson, Lake and Palmer's live LP, it is the difference between the technician and the artist. For example, Billy Cobham is just as good as drummer technically as I've heard, but his ideas are stupid and I always know what to expect from him. Chris Cutler of Henry Cow and Christian Vander of Magma, though both virtuosic rock drummers, are completely different in approach and basically eccentric (that is to say, they do not crank out machine funk rot on command). Whereas Billy can barely keep up with Cutler's polyrhythms, he buries him in volume. Vander can drown out almost anyone I've ever seen live, but he works in layers of sounds. Combine the two styles, add about 75 per cent throwaway licks, and you've got Billy.

A better example would be Bill Bruford of [illegible]

The early Mothers of Invention's vintage vantage point. "Do you love it, do you hate it? There it is the way you made it."

"....What happens when an entire group's roots consist of three chord progressions?

Well, the group will head back to the roots, only to find that the feeling they were looking for didn't lie in the chord progression, but in the feeling they got when they were first learning their instruments—"

Sun Ra, one of the Big Boys, the uncompromising innovators.

By this time, Ratledge had decided they really weren't cut out to be a rock group and got together a nine piece horn section to tour Britain, playing long improvisational sets. With the reed section cut in two, they recorded a fairly classic LP called Soft Machine Third, and were getting better exposure by signing with Columbia Records. After Fourth, however (recorded 1971), Wyatt decided he did want to play rock after all, and formed his own group Matching Mole as well as recording his own solo album. However, Soft Machine Third and Fourth had proved to a lot of the stranger British musicians that they needn't starve. Daevyd Allen was recording for Actuel (remember Allen?), and after several burns with the Byg record label, formed his own record label with the help of some rich friends. That eventually became Virgin records, a British equivalent of the Jazz Composers' Orchestra Association of New York, Delmark and Nessa in the mid U.S. and ECM in Germany — companies that would not only give the artists freedom to do what they wanted to do, but would also provide superior recording quality and a large return to the musicians, instead of scooping up all the royalties as other 'Underground' labels had — notably ESP-Disk of New York and Actuel (Byg) of Fance.

SUBMARINE SECTION 8: THE ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN CAPRICORN

By the time Virgin was formed by Allen (name is from his nickname Dingo Virgin), Soft Machine had already standardized itself with CBS too firmly to be removed.

Kevin Ayers, Wyatt and Allen were still somewhat persona non grata as far as American distribution went, and it was only Robert Fripp's intervention that allowed Matching Mole's Little Red Record to pass through the Columbia vaults into the U.S. Fripp had met Wyatt through Centipede, a fifty piece all-music orchestra that British pianist Keith Tippett had formed, and which Fripp had performed the production duties on. Another footnote — Fripp and Brian Eno from the group Roxy Music met through Robert Wyatt's admiration of Eno's work on Synthesizer.

In any event, after the collapse of the Soft Machine tour, Ayers retired to France, [illegible] British, it seems like they've come to a highly advanced chamber music with touches of Sun Ra, Riley (every one of these groups has a Terry Riley influence), Schoenberg and even the Yardbirds. That is, they aren't just copying the Yardbirds as Aerosmith would, but constructing new musical forms out of what they know. (They are Robert Wyatt's fave raves.)

Hatfield and the North on the other hand, seem to take more inspiration from the original dadaists like Duchamp, Satie, soul music and early Soft Machine. This shouldn't be surprising, since founding member Phil Miller played with Wyatt in Matching Mole, Pip Pyle has played with both Allen and Ayers, and bassist-lead singer Sinclair was a member of one of the original Wilde Flower groups with Wyatt and Hopper [illegible]

[illegible] time, but Vander's warm nature soon became hot and antagonistic. One night he was playing to the glasses again, when a sudden urge to curse the entire audience overcame him. Yielding to the urge, he began trying to explain how musicians were (literally) dying to play this music, and that the audience was rude, selfish, and he wished them all dead.

Mr. Legend has it that Vander never got that far. As he began to speak, he realized that he wasn't speaking French, English, Italian or even pig Latin. He was speaking this rather strange language called Kobaian. Words kept coming out in a steady stream, and he'd told the audience exactly what he meant, but he didn't have any idea of what was going on.

" . . . In Jazz-Rock, or whatever these guys are calling it now, we've got a lot of people trying to copy Coltrane — and coming out as third-rate copies. Oh, it's nice, but you could take any of these guys out of any one slot and put them into another. Pharoah Sanders doesn't really sound like Coltrane and neither does Archie Shepp, even though both these men studied under Coltrane — probably because Coltrane taught that one should get HIMSELF and HIS OWN sound together, rather than making oneself a human XEROX machine."

Underground exposed – new music found

by Jack Cahill

The jazz-black music art form is far too large and varied in scope to submit to control by sales-dominated record company biggies. There is certainly some fine music on the major labels, but not nearly enough. Getting a taste of Freddie Hubbard on CTI or Gato Barbieri on Impulse should begin to make you realize that there are untold amounts of other fantastic recordings on labels you never heard of by extraordinary players you never dreamed existed. Avoiding the established jazz companies (Blue Note, Prestige Milestone, Muse), herewith is an evaluated list of companies you will never find in your local Harmony Hut.

GIL SCOTT-HERON / BRIAN JACKSON
WINTER IN AMERICA

Strata—East is the finest label to emerge in the last 10 years. This "artist owned label" is run by the players who record on it and are sick of ripoffs. Sold in Amherst, thank Ra, it features the dynamic Music Inc., whose namesake album is a masterpiece, pianist Stanley Cowell's Musa lp, Dick Griffin's The Eighth Wonder, and numerous astonishments from saxophonists Clifford Jordan, Billy Harper, Charlie Rouse, and Cecil Payne, trumpeter Charles Tolliver, Keno Duke's Jazz Contemporaries (you have to know where they're at) and Winter In America by rising Gil Scott-Heron. Packaging and recording are both hi-quality. You must hear the music on Strata-East, moreso than any other label.

JCOA or Jazz Composers Orchestra Association is, similarly a cooperative society, and though their output has been small, it is impressive. Two boxed sets have been their main forays, the first featuring soloists Roswell Rudd, Cecil Taylor and Larry Coryell in side-long works. The second was the mind-boggling 3-record Carla Bley-Paul Haines, uh, thing, called Escalator Over the Hill with great gobs of music by everyone from Jack Bruce and John McLaughlin to Dewey Redman and Jeanne Lee. Recently released is Roswell Rudd's more easily graspable (one record) Numatik Swing Band.

STEREO
ART PEPPER

Choice Records — This husband and wife label is doing an admirable job recording superb, but unknown (is that a prerequisite?) jazz players. Pianist Roland Hanna's Sir Elf and the ever progressive Jimmy Giuffre's Music for People, Butterflies and Mosquitoes were their first releases, followed by A Flower for All Seasons by Eddie Daniels on flute and clarinet, an improvising wonder. Newer stuff from Chuck Wayne and Joe Puma, Zoot Sims and Vic Feldman are available from Choice, 245 Tilley Place, Sea Cliff, N.Y., 11579.

Delmark is the recorded spokeperson for new music Chicago style. Kalaparusha (Maurice McIntyre), Muhal Richard Abrams, Anthony Braxton (For Alto), and most of the Art Ensemble of Chicago are in the catalogue as well as many great bluesmen and less avant-garde men like Jimmy Forrest and Grant Green. I'll bet Mayor Daley thinks it's all crazy. Write to 4343 N. Lincoln, Chicago.

SPIRITS REJOICE
ALBERT AYLER

Steeplechase is generally not available in the U.S., being based only in Canada. Its output is large and largely unknown, featuring many excellent American jazz expatriates—Dexter Gordon, Paul Bley, Horace Parlan—some recent Jackie McLean and the work of the eclectically intense African pianist Dollar Brand Xahuri to name but a few of their items. Try out Brand's Anatomy of a South African Village. Info from Coda Publications, Box 87, Station J, Toronto, Ontario.

Enja, Chiaroscuro and Black Lion are three very different companies all under the Audio Fidelty roof. Enja, from Germany has cut Dollar Brand (African Space Program), Elvin Jones, trumpeter Terumasa Hino and other Japanese and German modernists. Chiaroscuro is from New York, has crazy, stylized covers and showcases fine older musicians, especially pianists like Earl Hines, Marian McPartland, Dave McKenna (Take It in Stride) and Don Ewell, often in solo settings. Some finely-crafted, mature pieces, here. WMUA recently acquired all of Black Lion's releases and they range from Pictures of Infinity by Sun Ra to Don Byas' Anthropology. It is not actually small, merely, unknown to many. Perhaps its most satisfying discs are the two last Thelonius Monk sessions, The Man I Love and Something in Blue. To hear them is to love them.

Contemporary Records — The first label to go stereo in the fifties with perpetually superb sound recording. Based in L.A., it can be found in decently large stores. Artists bearing your audial investigation consist of early Ornette Coleman, Barney Kessel, Sonny Simmons, Art Pepper, Sonny Rollins, Phineas Newborn, Shelly Manne and Woody Shaw plus many more ESP—Disk'. The legendary insane New York City record company has been focusing lately on vintage bop rarities—Bird, Bud Powell, Billie Holiday—but their bread and butter (ha!) was once the avant-garde: Albert Ayler, Sun Ra, John Tchicai; there's a list in the Below the Salt office to look at. Can't forget the Fugs or Sweetpie on record either. And an actual William Burroughs record, Call Me Burroughs, that should be mandatory.

Arhoolie is a blues, jazz folk label from the golden West Coast that continues in grand fashion in 1975. The honesty and sincerity of their artists make every release something special. Great bluesmen like Earl Hooker (Two Bugs and a Roach), Clifton Chenier and Charlie Musselwhite have appeared often as well as Jerry Hahn and the Dick Oxtot Golden Age Jazz Band. Generally found in area stores.

Pablo is old jazz entrepreneur Norman Granz' new house label. He has a stable of regulars that no one can argue with and the finished products they put out are inarguably excellent. A few highlights are guitarist Joe Pass' mind-boggling Virtuoso, Ella Fitz with Joe on Take Love Easy, Duke Ellington's Big Four with Ray Brown and Louis Bellson, Count Basie with a trio and, of course, the 13 record, $75.00 Art Tatum solo recordings.

Arista, the new Clive Davis-Steve Backer independent label has just this week released a passel of fantastic thangs, some from the British Freedom label. They are: Cecil Taylor—Silent Tongues (live), Ornette Coleman's 1964 London concert, Randy Weston from Montreux, plus Roswell Rudd, Marion Brown, Albert Ayler, Charles Tolliver, and the highly anticipated Anthony Braxton New York, Fall 1974. This reed-player is second only to Sam Rivers in his startlingly original excursions. All of these have been seen at For the Record and may be reviewed soon.

This listing is unavoidably arbitrary and too short—I've left out innumerable companies like New Music Distributors, Umoja, Revelation, Onyx, BYG, Bromfield, ad infinitum. Any interested parties are welcome to petition, revile or turn me on thru the Collegian-Below the Salt office. To hear is to see

Roomful of Blues – 1975 from 1945 music

by [illegible]

Profile: Roomful of Blues

Invariably, it's difficult to imagine that nineteen-seventy-five lurks beyond the boundaries of [illegible] where Roomful of Blues is playing their music. The eight-piece band from Providence, Rhode Island can really get an audience enthused with its hip-swinging sound.

Roomful plays Chicago blues, rhythm and blues, and early and pre-fifties jazz, including their own renditions of tunes done by greats like Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Jay McShann, Louis Jordan, Buddy Johnson, Muddy Waters — all very danceable. The audience [illegible] taking to the dance floor to do the jitterbug or the lindy hop. Nineteen-seventy-five, you say?

Each member of the band is a truly dedicated and accomplished musician and deserves recognition.

The tight rhythm section is comprised of [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

The band is now receiving the attention and recognition it well deserves, as those places where Roomful plays are usually packed with an appreciative crowd.

A roomful of Chicago blues, rhythm & blues, Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Jay McShann, Louis Jordan, Buddy Johnson, Muddy Waters...

[illegible]

There is no doubt that, as [illegible] says, "More will certainly be heard from this group". It is suggested, though, that if the opportunity presents itself — get out and see the band perform live. It may not be long before it will be easier to go down to the record store and buy Roomful's latest album than to find tickets to see them perform.

at $58, the new advent 2 is something really wonderful!

The Advent/2 is a brand new speaker from Advent designed for an absolute maximum of useful performance at lowest cost. Its own low price of $58 is made lower still by the fact that it works superbly with low-cost, low power amplifiers and receivers.

The only real difference between the Advent/2 and the two more expensive Advents (the original and the Smaller Advent), both of which are deservedly best sellers all across the country, is that it doesn't have the final half octave of low bass that they do. It has the same clean and clear sound with a musical balance that is satisfying not just with the best recordings or one kind of music, but with the whole range of music and the various ways of recording it. Its frequency response is equal to that of most speakers available at any price.

Bromery addresses Stockbridge Senate

Stockbridge students seen as 'training for future'

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Randolph Bromery said last night that UMass student attorney William M. Dorsch made an incorrect interpretation when he charged that confidential course evaluation forms were violating the public disclosure law.

Speaking before the Stockbridge Student Senate, Bromery said that opening the forms to the students would result in "about 10,000 slander suits and decrease the effectiveness of the thing because students would be afraid to sign their names to the forms."

Answering questions from faculty and senators, the Chancellor said he didn't mind protests over the universal resource fee, which has been proposed as a method of paying off the dormitory debt service, as long as someone came up with an alternative.

"We need something to keep students in the dorms," he said. "Because we have fiscal autonomy, we can't run a deficit budget. If we did that, I'd be the one to go to jail."

Bromery said he felt mandatory dining commons were worse than mandatory dormitories, and that "the state should help renovate the dorms."

Concerning possible budget cuts by Governor Dukakis, Bromery said he'd "try to maintain the student population and make the cuts elsewhere."

"When the faculty or support services are cut, it's the students who pay," he said. "We're fighting the state on this."

The Chancellor explained that there were few options open in relation to paying off the Campus Center debt. "It's a self-liquidating building. We can't speed up paying it off, and we can't increase the fees.

"We could go out and try to raise the money, but these are bad times and that may be difficult. The state legislature and the governor may take it over as a state building in 1979. Most likely private money will be used though," he said.

Answering a question concerning job placement for Stockbridge students, Bromery suggested that Stockbridge student government petition Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage to become part of the placement service in Whitmore.

In his 30 minute speech to the Stockbridge Senate, Bromery praised Stockbridge students as being "the saviors of our world future."

"You are the people with the expertise of the future who will train people here and abroad about food and natural resources," he said.

Bromery's topic of speech centered on the spectre of future over-population and the using up of world food and energy supplies.

"We've alsways had an overabundance of automobiles, food and many other things," he said. "We've grown up with an infinity psyche. Now we have to think about food distribution processes."

"It's a 1984 sort of thing - a redistribution of people. I'm not sure I want that to take place, or the end to come," he said.

$83,000 less to spend; SS cuts inevitable

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

Members of the Student Senate Budget Committee yesterday agreed that many student organizations and projects funded by the Student Activity Tax Fee (SATF) will face budget cuts.

The senate budget committee is responsible for allocating funds accruing from the (SATF).

Jon Hite, a committee member, attributed the cut-backs to a forecasted decrease in funds yielded by the (SATF) and an increase in the number of groups competing for (SATF) funds.

"During the coming fiscal year," Hite said, "we will have $83,000 less to work with."

Last year, according to Kevin Muldoon, budget committee chairman, (SATF) funds yielded [illegible]. This year he said they will yield only [illegible]. Hite added this year the budget committee received requests totaling approximately [illegible] million.

According to Muldoon, the decrease in the (SATF) yield results from the following factors: a 50 cent decrease in the SATF levied on each student, a projected decrease in enrollment, and an increase in Senate appropriations from the SATF funds for its own reserve accounts.

Senate reserve accounts are used to finance emergency programs and to cover unforeseen expenses which Muldoon said might crop up when "groups are caught short by an inflationary squeeze."

As a result of the decrease in SATF funds, many budget requests have already been rejected and many groups have received less than what they've requested.

At Tuesday night's budget committee meeting, "Spectrum", the student literary and fine arts magazine, requested [illegible] and received [illegible]. The Black Scientists requested [illegible] and received [illegible]; the Legal Services Offices requested [illegible] and received [illegible] and the Flying Club budget request was rejected outright.

Chip Lalonde, the editor of Spectrum objected to the cut in the request handed to him by the budget committee last night.

"For the past two years," Lalonde said, "Spectrum's budget has limited the magazine to the publication of one yearly issue."

As a result, Lalonde said the magazine has "to reject [illegible] per cent of the entries submitted."

To finance a second yearly issue "Spectrum" requested [illegible], an increase of approximately [illegible] more than last year's budget request.

Describing his magazine as the "sole" outlet for creative expression on campus serving all students," Lalonde said, "We are unable to fulfill our service to the students with our present budget — and we won't stand for it."

"Spectrum" will appeal its budget cut to the Executive committee of the Student Senate, next week.

In rebuttal, Jon Hite of the budget committee said, "groups providing services most extensively and frequently used by students will receive the highest priorities."

He cited as examples: Area Governments, which sponsors the Everywoman's Center and many coffeehouses, The Collegian, WMUA, and the Outing Club.

Those groups that had their budget requests rejected by the budget committee have already successfully appealed their requests to the Senate's Executive Committee.

If Chip LaBlonde, editor of "Spectrum" does not look happy it is because once again they had their budget cut by the Student Senate.

An article for the May 5 Amherst town meeting warrant that would ask the State to allow the Town to institute rent control will be submitted to the Board of Selectmen before March 31, said Doug Stanley, chairman of the Progressive Candidates Pool (PCP).

The PCP is presently organizing student candidates for the town meeting election of April 8.

Rent control would include dorms at UMass and Hampshire College, he added.

If the article is approved by the town meeting, it would be sent to the State House as an application for rent control to be acted on in this session, under the provisions of the Home Rule Amendment, according to Stanley.

If the legislature acts favorably on the Amherst requests, he said, it would then be submitted to the town and placed on the ballot of the next general election.

Stanley added that a petition calling for rent control will be circulated among students next week. He said that this will show how much support for rent control exists as well as inform students what is at stake in rent control.

A petition of ten signatures is needed to get an article on the town warrant, but Stanley said that his group is shooting for a lot more so that townspeople will be aware of student support.

Stanley said a provision that an elected rent control board be established would also be included in the article.

"This is contingent on the people approving rent control," he said, "but it's different from other systems where the

In a separate but related development, a bill that would amend the present law requiring a town population of 50,000 as a prerequisite to rent control was submitted to Rep. James Collins (Amherst), in November, according to John Pepi, member of the Student Organizing Project.

The SOP submitted the bill as an attempt to get rent control instituted in Amherst in anticipation of any ruling that would allow all students to live off campus, and the skyrocketing rate increases that may result, Pepi said.

Amherst has a population under 50,000, Stanley said. "Both routes are being pursued to insure the needs of the people of Amherst are given a fair hearing."

Kerouac still 'lives' in minds of followers

By DON AUCOIN
Staff Reporter

"I think he's still absolutely front-page news," said Robert Creeley of the late Jack Kerouac Tuesday night, and the packed house at Mt. Holyoke College's Gamble Auditorium seemed to agree.

Creeley, a poet, was participating in a panel discussion along with four other friends of the famed "Beat" novelist.

The other speakers included Ann Charters, author of a recent biography of Kerouac; John Clellon Holmes, novelist; Michael McClure, poet and playwright; Charles Jarvis, English professor and long time friend of Kerouac; and Creeley. The panelists were speaking in conjunction with the "Other Voices – The arts and San Francisco 1945-1960" program, and the discussion was billed as "An evening with Jack Kerouac."

The speakers reviewed his life and work, each contributing individual anecdotes and opinions about the man who is seen as the foremost figure of a group that included Allen Ginsberg and William Burroughs.

Jarvis said Kerouac's writing was "a historical effort to drain every atom out of an idea or a feeling."

The panelists also agreed that Kerouac is often identified with his most famous character, Dean Moriarty of On the Road, but said this was inaccurate. Holmes said Kerouac was basically shy, awkward, and self conscious, "until he got a few drinks in him."

The talk moved from an analysis of Kerouac's writing style to a discussion of his early struggles to get his books published, and finally to the events surrounding his death in 1969.

Charters spoke of his bitterness, especially towards youth, and said that towards the end "He was looking for all kinds of reasons to justify what was happening, a very sad, tragic figure."

Kerouac's influence on his contemporaries was deep and immediate, the speakers said. Holmes commented "His work astounded me, opened up my mind, and puzzled me."

However, Creeley told of some other writers who weren't at all impressed, most notably Joseph Heller and John Barth, who, he said, "found nothing to react to" in Kerouac's writing.

A large circle of friends provided the material for Kerouac's novels, the speakers said. Among these were Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Neal Cassady, Ginsberg, McClure, Holmes, and Gregory Corso.

Holmes said he felt that this situation may have led to the estrangement between Kerouac and Cassady; the relationship suffered as a result of the portrayal of Cassady in On The Road.

Two [illegible] were seated, and Kerouac sat between them and threw an arm around one man's shoulders and roared "I used to be a fullback at Columbia University!" Then he turned to the other man, and thrusting his chin forward into the other's face, demanded, "Are you my angel?"

Student input on the rise

Odiorne whips SBA into shape

By DAVE KOWAL
Staff Reporter

George Odiorne, newly appointed dean of the School of Business Administration (S.B.A.), said yesterday, "The UMass School of Business Administration should be the flagship of the state system."

. Newly appointed SBA Dean George S. Odiorne sees S.B.A. as "flagship of the state system"

Odiorne was speaking at the first working meeting of the S.B.A. student cabinet.

Jay Parker, cabinet chairman, said, "The student cabinet is one of many changes Dean Odiorne has made since he came here in October. In the short time he's been here, he has completely dismantled the system as it was."

Odiorne came to UMass after serving as dean of the Utah University business school.

Parker said Odiorne dissolved all S.B.A. committees and established three committees in their place, including the student cabinet. New committees will be formed if they're needed.

"This is the first time," Parker added, "the administration has given room to student input. Before, students weren't even allowed into certain meetings. Now the situation is different. All meetings are completely open to students."

Parker said Odiorne has obtained more grants for the S.B.A. in the four months he's been here than the previous administration had obtained in their four years here.

"The S.B.A. is also trying to form their own placement service," he continued, "which will be completely funded by the S.B.A. When business students go to Berkshire House looking for job placements, they say, 'We're not an employment agency.' Now something will be done about finding jobs for business students."

Bob Shaughnessey, a member of the student cabinet, said changes were occurring so fast, he was having trouble adjusting to them.

Parker said, "We have an imminently qualified faculty, and now we're going to be able to utilize them. We have more talent than we know what to do with.

"Within ten years," he added, "this school can be in the top ten with no question."

Among the topics discussed at yesterday's meeting was a motion for the S.B.A. to adopt a two year pre-business plan for underclassmen to lessen the burden on the business school faculty.

Odiorne said, "The School of Business Administration has the most overworked faculty on campus. We now have a student/ faculty ratio of 70.5 to one. The ratio acceptable for accreditation is 70 to one, so we're operating at a substandard level."

The meeting also discussed "peer counseling" for incoming students, and a task force for improving the service of the Business Library.

SS restructure move will ease unionization

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

The Student Senate last night approved a constitutional amendment that will dismantle the sixteen member Student Organizing Committee (SOC) and restructure it to have twenty members.

The SOC was originally made up of all Student Senators and will now include a member from each area government, a WMUA representative, Editor in Chief of the Collegian, and three members from Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) to be appointed by the SGA President.

This structural change will "bring out the grass roots support we've been looking for" according to co-sponsor of the amendment, Jon Hite.

The SOC oversees operations of the Student Organizing Project (SOP), a group working to establish collective bargaining and unionization for students.

Hite said, "The new proposal will speedup Student Senate efforts to unionize."

Both SGA President Rick Savini and former SOC Chairman John Pepi supported the amendment and said it will make the SOC a more representative group.

In other action, the Senate approved all but [illegible] of a [illegible] combined budget proposal for the Student Homophile League (SHL) and Gay Women's Caucus (GWC).

The SHL GWC budget proposal had previously been denied outright by the Student Senate Budget Committee (SSBC) and was granted last night's hearing by the Executive Committee.

Nominees sought for teaching award

Academic departments of the University are soliciting nominations for the Distinguished Teacher Award (DTA) from students and faculty.

"The purpose of the award is to identify and honor distinguished classroom teaching, particularly on the undergraduate level," said [illegible] secretary to the DTA Committee.

The award, given to three faculty members and three teaching assistants annually, includes a certificate of commendation and $1000, tax free. Funds for the award are provided by the University and Amoco Co.

"The award criteria," said [illegible], "are an ability to stimulate students to challenging ideas and effective communication, a real knowledge of subject matter, an ability to relate to students, and performance in both large and small classes."

Members of the nomination committee are previous award winners who serve for two years, representatives chosen by the presidents of the Student and Graduate Senates, and a rotating chairperson.

Food Science 101

A legend in its time

By STEVE TRIPOLI
Staff Reporter

"What I'm trying to do is bring in one internationally known expert per semester," says Professor Fergus Clydesdale of the Food Science and Nutrition Department.

He'll be doing it again tomorrow, when Professor Melvin Benarde of the Hahnemann Medical College and Hospital in Philadelphia addresses the Food Science 101 classes in Mahar Auditorium at 10:10 and 3:35. The lectures will be open to the public.

The purpose of bringing the speakers in, according to Clydesdale, is to "give students a chance to hear people that they see in the media who have credentials" in the Food Science field. "This is the decade of food and energy," said Clydesdale, "and if people don't get more of this stuff, it will lend to the apathy surrounding the food issue now."

Benarde's credentials are numerous, including a weekly television show on environment and health, books published, awards, and community activity. "He's a scientist involved in trying to interpret rationally the need for technology in food production," Clydesdale said.

To date, Clydesdale has been able to bring speakers to the University without using University funds or paying honoraria to them. "Because of the support of students for the course, I consider it an honor for someone to be able to address them. After all, without a tremendous amount of organization, effort, and money, where else can you get [illegible] people interested enough to listen?," said Clydesdale.

Professor Fergus Clydesdale has built up the food science program to the pinnacle it has reached today.

"It's good for people who travel this much to be exposed to the UMass support. It's the biggest course of its kind in the country," said Clydesdale. The 101 course has become something of a legend both on campus and in the food science field, being written up in three magazines.

Last semester, the course was addressed by Ronald Deutsch, who Clydesdale called "probably the best nutrition writer in the country." Since then, according to Clydesdale, Deutsch has spoken frequently of UMass and the reception he received from students here.

Clydesdale would like to continue the series. "I think it's good for a student to hear experts from other areas of the country," he said. "Their point of view may be different, but the students see some basic agreement" between the speakers.

Although the lectures will be open to the public at both 10:10 and 3:35, because of crowding at the 10:10 lecture, it would be preferable for those not enrolled in the course to go to the 3:35 lecture, according to Clydesdale.

...At maple sugaring time, the cumulative effect of "one drop in the bucket" will help drown the nation's pancakes and waffles.

Political science professors speak out

Democrats must unite to win in 1976

By [illegible]
Staff Reporter

The inability of the party to unite behind one candidate is the problem that Democrats face in the 1976 Presidential race according to Glen Gordon, chairman of the Political Science department and four other professors in the department, interviewed yesterday.

The professors were Jerome Mileur, Jeremiah Reid, Robert Shanley and Fred Kramer.

"There is no way on earth that he (Gov. George Wallace of Alabama) could get the Democratic nomination for the presidency," said Gordon.

The Democrats have "probably had enough of (Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota)," he added.

They also agreed that President Gerald Ford has the Republican nomination if he wants it, because it is "historically extremely difficult to dislodge an incumbent President," said Gordon.

Although the professors admit it is too early to predict the 1976 race, they agree the five announced candidates for president do not present themselves as strong possibilities.

"None has shown anything but significant weaknesses," observed Mileur.

"They are throwing balloons to the wind, looking for something to happen," said Reid.

The five announced candidates so far are Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, former Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma, Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, and Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona, all Democrats.

Mileur noted that Bentsen's chances could be hindered because of his associations with the oil companies of his home state of Texas. Udall has not been heard much since his announcement, said Mileur. And organized labor, the most likely backer of Jackson, has cooled in its support of him, he said.

"The Democrats may not be able to put it all together," said Shanley.

If the Democratic convention in 1976 becomes deadlocked, they could give the nomination to a more familiar party member, like Sen. Edward Kennedy, or Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine, or they could rally behind a darkhorse candidate, according to Shanley.

They would be seeking a candidate from the center of the party, said Kramer, and this would rule out a national party ticket with Wallace on it.

In fact, Mileur said that he would be "surprised and appalled" if Wallace was nominated for the presidency. Shanley added he is "too controversial," and that it would be "unlikely" for him to run on a third party ticket again.

In addition to the candidates and potential candidates frequently mentioned as viable possibilities, there are some lesser-known political figures that were mentioned by the professors.

Shanley noted that governors were frequent candidates for president, but he added "I don't think that the position of governor is anymore a springboard to the presidency." He feels that the nominee will come from the Senate.

Gordon suggested that Sen. Frank Church "could make a substantial rise" if his committee investigating the CIA becomes newsworthy. He noted that Church is "interested" in the presidency, and is liberal.

Mileur suggested that in a deadlocked Democratic convention, a governor could receive the nomination. He mentioned as likely governors Hugh Carey of New York and Daniel Walker of Illinois.

Classrooms, offices to bring new life to former library

By [illegible]

Renovation of Goodell Hall, former UMass library, into a classroom and office building is in the planning stages, according to Paul Meade, planning office associate.

Meade said there had been speculation in the past that Goodell would be a part of a UMass law school or would be a law center. "General thought was that Goodell would be a good law center because of its library structure, but the political climate has changed as far as having a law center on this campus," he continued.

Presently, there are no funds available for the renovation of Goodell, Meade said. "We have asked for renovation funds for the Amherst campus for four or five years now and Goodell has always had top priority on our list." He also said that the Massachusetts legislature had decided that there would be no capital outlay and that was what the University was looking for.

Some funds were appropriated last year, but as of now, not enough have been given for the renovation of Goodell, according to Meade.

The Planning Office has also requested renovation funds again this year, but Meade said that the Governor is not likely to support capital outlay this year, either.

When the money is finally appropriated, it will take 18 months to appoint an architect and to design the work that has to be conducted, according to Meade. After the initial 18 months, the building should be ready for renovation and the actual renovation will take an additional 18 to 24 months he added.

"During the renovation period," said Meade, "the organizations presently using the buildings will have to be relocated."

The building is now being used by The Everywoman's Center, Communications Skills, The Audio Visual Department, Communications Disorders, Outreach, BDIC, Administrative Procurement and Accounting and the Physical Plant. Goodell also has classrooms on the sixth floor and the [illegible] first and second floors are being used for administrative storage.

Rent control?

another Amherst wants rent control on the next general ballot," he said.

If the Selectmen do not act, a petition signed by 8 per cent of the registered voters would place the question on the ballot, Stanley said.

A petition signed by 10 per cent of the voters would then call for a special election with the question as the only issue on the ballot, he continued.

"In both cases, Amherst will decide for itself whether it wishes to have rent control. The Collins measure, however, will not cover dormitories," he said.

Kenneth Dean, acting head of residential life, said he knows of no legal basis for rent control of State financed buildings. The DOF "would have to get through the legislature first," he added.

Stanley said his group is organizing student candidates not only to get the rent control approved but also to show the people of Amherst that students are concerned about town issues. He said there will also be lobbying of existing town meeting members so that "they will know what is going on with the rent control thing."

Ford has inside track on GOP nomination

On the Republican side, the professors agreed that Ford has the inside chance. He has "foreclosed anyone from talking about the presidency" by staying in the race, according to Reid.

However, there are problems that Ford faces if he seeks election in 1976. The professors agreed the economy will be the major issue in the campaign, and that Ford will have to show positive improvements that he made in the economy.

Kramer suggested Ford might impose wage and price controls in late 1975, in part to steal an issue away from the Democrats. He said the Democrats will be calling for such controls this year, and that Ford will impose them, in the hope that they will have a positive effect on the economy after six to nine months. This would present a favorable economic climate in the nation at election time.

Ford also faces internal strife within the Republican Party, especially from former California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Ford, according to Gordon, has "co-opted the left wing of the Republican Party," and as a result, has alienated the conservative wing, of which Reagan is the most vocal representative, of the party.

"It is useful for (Reagan) to make noises," said Gordon, because he represents an important part of the Republican Party that cannot be ignored. Gordon noted that a recent Gallup Poll showed that only 18 per cent of Americans identified themselves as Republicans, so that party cannot afford to ignore any segment of their constituency.

Darkhorse candidates mentioned by the five professors for the Republican Party included Sen. Howard Baker of Tennessee, and Elliot Richardson, recently appointed ambassador to Great Britain.

Resource Network evaluates dorm programs and services

Tonight at 7 p.m., rooms 168-172 in the Campus Center, the Resource Network will hold a public hearing on the value of programs and services in the Residence Halls. Asked to attend for the purpose of "hearing," the testimony will be those administrators who are now in the process of making major budget decisions which will effect the future of such programs.

In order that they understand the value of the services presently being delivered, and the potential consequences of eliminating those services, the administrators will be hearing directly both from those who deliver services and from students who receive them.

Members of the Network committee are now in the process of contacting as wide a spectrum of potential speakers as possible. Testimony is being solicited from students, agency and residence hall staff, faculty and other concerned groups and individuals.

Anyone who is interested in testifying is asked to contact the Resource Network (545-0851 or 5-0333) for more information and a place on the speakers' list. Each testifier will be asked to limit her-his presentation to no more than five minutes, be prepared to answer questions relating to their testimony, and to submit, if possible, a copy of the prepared text. The compilation of these statements along with a collection of additional data will be distributed, shortly after the hearing, to appropriate campus administrators. The entire evening will be taped and broadcasted on WMUA as soon after Thursday as possible.

Bicentennial meeting tonight

The People's Bicentennial Commission will have an organizational meeting tonight at 7:30 in Rm. 113 of the Campus Center.

The Commission is a national organization based in Washington, D.C. whose purpose is to present the facts and spirit of the American Revolution to the American people in an attempt to realize our American revolutionary heritage. Parallels can be drawn from the 1700's revolt against an oppressive, non-representative power structure, and the reality of the corporate controlled economic and political system.

Candidates speak in Pierpont session

The three candidates for Amherst Board of Selectmen in the town's April 8 election will appear tonight at 7 p.m. at the weekly session of Project Ten's Political Campaigns Seminar in Pierpont Hall.

The three candidates, Leo Bouchard, Robert Garvey, and Diana Romer, are vying for two seats on the five-member Board. Bouchard and Garvey are both incumbents seeking re-election.

All town residents, including on-campus students, are eligible to vote in the April election if they have registered to vote on or before March 19.

The three candidates are expected to discuss a wide range of local issues.

The public is invited to attend and question the candidates on issues of local concern.

Town committee sponsors lecture

The Amherst Democratic Town Committee will hold its monthly meeting tonight at 8 p.m. in Room 804-808 of the Campus Center. Neil Stabler, Visiting Lecturer at the Kennedy School of Harvard University and a member of the Democratic National Committee, will speak on Party Reform. The public is invited.

NIT protest

Spectators at this weekend's opening of the NIT could find themselves facing a picket line as they attempt to enter Madison Square Garden.

Operation Push, a Chicago black activist group led by Rev. Jesse Jackson, has threatened the protest because of the lack of an all-black college in this year's field.

Jackson announced Monday night that his group will picket the tournament and urge black players not to cross the picket lines.

Peter Carlesimo, chariman of the NIT selection committee, called the proposed protest "unjust and unfair." He said the NIT has never picked schools on a racial basis.

Carlesimo explained that "in all the NIT's years we've only had two Division II teams good enough to get in. One was Southern Illinois...and then last year we had Maryland-Eastern Shore." Maryland Eastern-Shore is an all-black college.

There are presently no all-black colleges playing a Division I schedule in basketball.

Perhaps the top all-black team in the country this season is Kentucky State, owning a 26-2 record.

Tiger pitch hits Fisk; ruins wrist

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. [AP] - Carlton Fisk, the Boston Red Sox' All Star catcher trying to come back from serious knee surgery, suffered a broken right wrist when struck by a pitch Wednesday in an exhibition baseball game with the Detroit Tigers.

X-rays disclosed a clean break of the discal ulna bone, just above the palm of the hand.

Trainer Charlie Moss said that Fisk's wrist will be placed in temporary cast until Friday or Saturday and then a permanent cast will be required for from four to six weeks.

Fisk was making only his second appearance since he suffered a serious right knee injury in a home plate collision in Cleveland last June 28.

Fisk was taken to Winter Haven Hospital where wet X-ray plates disclosed the break.

The Boston catcher appeared behind the plate in a game for the first time of the training season in a game against the Montreal Expos at Daytona Beach on Tuesday.

He admitted pain in his scarred right knee but returned the lineup against Detroit at Wednesday.

Murphy - big man with soft touch

By BOB HIGGINS

The awards just keep rolling in. All-Yankee Conference for the second year in a row, YanCon player of the year, first team All-New England...

But it's almost over now for John Murphy. Oh, there'll be at least one more game, hopefully more. But UMass basketball fans will never again see number 54 pouring in those baseline jumpers in Curry Hicks Cage, the scene of so many of his personal and team accomplishments.

Basically, he's a walking contradiction — a big man (6' 8" 218) with an amazingly soft shooting touch. For those of you who have been amazed by his game shooting, catch his act before or after practice some day — he almost never misses. It's a gift, but it's something he has worked on for a long time.

"I've always been able to shoot from the outside," says John. "But I've improved my shot since I came here. It used to be more of a set shot, but I've developed it so now it's a jump shot."

That set shot had a number of New England schools looking at him when he graduated from Clinton High four years ago. "It's a small town, so we didn't get much publicity, but we had a good team," said John. Murph decided on UMass mainly because he wasn't interested in prep school, and some of the other schools wanted him to attend one.

John Murphy . . .

So he came to UMass, and that year teamed with Bill Endicott and Jim Burke leading the freshman team to an amazing 18-1 record. People began to expect great things in the next few years, and the future looked bright for UMass basketball.

And some great things did happen in Murphy's sophomore year. In fact, there was one game that year that ranks as John's biggest thrill as a UMass player. "It was the Penn game," John recalls. "They were ranked in the top twenty nationally and we beat them down at the Palestra." What John failed to mention was that he personally was the big gun for the Minutemen, shooting 10 for 12 from the floor and, along with Al Skinner, carrying the team to one of their biggest wins ever.

When the 1972-3 season ended, UMass was invited to the NIT, the first of three such invitations in Murphy's three varsity seasons. Was Murphy nervous about the prospect of playing in Madison Square Garden in his first varsity year?

"No, I can't be nervous or I won't play well," said John. "Some guys play better when they're nervous, but I don't. Of course, sometimes it's hard to tell if I'm nervous or not," he added. John may have been a little edgy, but he still managed to score ten points in both the win over Missouri (78-71), and the loss to North Carolina (73-63).

Then came last year's excellent 21-5 season, which featured, among those five losses, some incredibly close games (a last-second loss to Providence, overtime losses to BC and UConn, and the overtime loss to Jacksonville in the NIT, in which Murph scored 25 to lead all scorers). Do games like this have any effect on him?

"It doesn't matter how much you win or lose by," he philosophized. "A win's a win and a loss is a loss. It hurts for a while, but you just have to get over it. The NIT came right before spring break, so you have a chance to get away."

. . . in shooting touch

This season, more than any other, Murphy has been a model of consistency for the Minutemen. No matter what else happened, you could be fairly certain that he would contribute his 15-20 points each game. "I think I've improved my inside game some, but not a lot," said John, reflecting on his increased scoring output. In addition, he has improved his rebounding, averaging close to 10 per game this year, as opposed to 8.5 last year.

Again, this season, the team has been hit with some tough losses, and a major disappointment. But Murphy does not like to dwell on these things. "People have said a lot about the ECAC thing," he said. "I try not to worry about things like that. There's nothing I can do about it, so I just try to go out and play basketball."

What does the future hold for John Murphy? There are those who think he'll be playing pro basketball somewhere next year. Among them is his coach, Jack Leaman. "He's the second best big man, next to Julius Erving, that I've ever coached in New England," said Leaman. "He's been hurt because he had to play center for us sometimes, but when he's at forward he's the best basketball player in New England."

"I think he'll be a good pro prospect," the coach continued. "He runs well for a big guy, he shoots well, and he's intelligent. It all depends on how hard he wants to work. He can be an outstanding pro player if he wants to work and he gets with the right team," the coach concluded. That's pretty high praise from a guy who has sent two players (Erving and Skinner) to the pros in the past few years.

Murphy himself doesn't know what the future holds. "I have no idea. I know I'd like to play pro, but I just don't know." John has decided that his major (management) is out for him, so he probably will not be returning for his degree, at least not in the near future.

Reflecting on his four years of basketball at UMass, John had nothing but good things to say. "The Cage is the greatest place to play basketball," he said. "The fans can really help the team, and they have a big effect on the other team." Concerning Coach Leaman, he said, "He's a good coach — he really knows how to teach basketball."

Outside of basketball, John has enjoyed all other aspects of UMass life as well. A member of Lambda Chi Alpha, he said he wouldn't trade fraternity life for anything, stating "It's been a big factor in my life." Like many others, the only thing he disliked was classes. But overall, he has really enjoyed his four years here.

"I'd like to stick around and keep playing, if they'd let me," he answered.

Believe me, John, there are a lot of us who wish you could.

Ride 'em cowboy! — UMass gymnast Roy Johnson, straddles the sidehorse in an earlier meet. The side horse gave Roy no trouble as, it didn't buck once.

Gymnasts seek EIGL title

By BILL DOYLE

With a berth in the nationals and second place in the Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League on the line, the UMass men's gymnasts will be at Springfield College tonight at 7:00 p.m. for the first day of the three day E.I.G.L. championships.

The league champion is determined by a combination of the regular season standings and the team's finish in the championships, Coach Tom Dunn said.

The Minutemen finished second during the regular season behind powerful Southern Connecticut. Coach Dunn said that he concedes first place in the championships to Southern but that it would be a close contest for second place between UMass, Springfield, and Temple.

Based on regular season play, Southern has 16 points (two points for each league victory), UMass has 14, Springfield has 12, and Temple has 10. Each team in the championships gets two more points for every team that it outscores, Dunn added.

The compulsory routines, all new this year in accordance with Olympic rules, will highlight tonight's opening night competition. The team and all-around championships will be settled tomorrow night, with the individual titles set for Saturday night.

Since Southern and Springfield are Division II schools, only UMass and Temple appear strong enough to be in the running for the Division I E.I.G.L. berth in the nationals, Dunn said. In order to qualify for the nationals, Dunn explained, a team must be the top scoring Division I school in the E.I.G.L. championships and total 400 points in the compulsories and optionals.

Dunn, who usually is free with his predictions, said that he couldn't tell if UMass could score the necessary 400 points in order to qualify.

"It will be so close that I can't even guess," he said. "We have a good chance to be the top Division I finisher but I don't know about the 400 points.

"It will be all decided in the compulsories. Southern should win everything, but among UMass, Temple, and Springfield, whoever is ahead after the first night should take second. Either UMass and Temple, whoever is ahead after the compulsories, will probably be the top Division I finisher because both schools are pretty even in the optionals."

In last season's championships, under a different scoring system, UMass just fell short of the qualifying total of 300 points, as the team scored 299.6. Even if UMass had totaled the extra .4, it wouldn't have gone to the nationals because both Penn State and Temple had higher totals.

The gymnasts will be competing without vaulter Jack Fabbricante, who is out for the remainder of the season with a hyper-extended knee, and all-arounder Paul Marks, who also will be sidelined for the rest of the year with a bad back.

Minutemen who will be competing are: Bill Brouillet, Roy Johnson, and Jon Brandon in the all-arounds (although Brandon will actually be only competing in the last three events) John Forshay and Chuck Hall on the floor, Steve Marks and Dave Kulakoff on side horse, Peter Lusk and Dave Douglas on rings, Steve Marks and Forshay in vaulting, Andy Hammond and Kulakoff on p-bars, and Joel James and Henning Geist on high bar.

The E.I.G.L. teams are divided into three groups which will compete together. UMass will be competing with Southern and Temple.

For the individual competition, the top eight performers go to the finals on Saturday night, Dunn said. The top three Division I finalists are eligible for the nationals.

Dunn rates only Bill Brouillet as having any real chance of reaching the finals in the floor exercise. Southern is expected to take the top four positions in floor, Dunn said. Peter Kormann, Jay Whelan, Steve Randall, and Sam Schuh are the Southern favorites. Whelan is the defending champ.

On side horse, Steve Marks is capable of as high as a second place finish, Dunn said. Temple's Gary Kulick is favored to win according to the UMass coach, with Southern's Tony Williams, and Syracuse's Greg Collis (defending champ) and Frank Martorelli also rated highly.

On rings, Peter Lusk, if he hits the dismount that he has been missing, has a good chance to finish second, Dunn said. Southern's Kormann is rated as the man to beat by Dunn, and teammate Rich Onysko along with Springfield's Steve Francis and Jim Harvey are also expected to be vying for top spots. Douglas and Brouillet stand good chances of qualifying for the finals, Dunn added.

Vaulting has Steve Marks, rated by Dunn as the second best in the field if he hits. Kormann again is rated as the best by Dunn. Cornell's Brian Dawson and Springfield's Rich Samuels will be right in there also, Dunn added. Jon Brandon, who has been using a new optional routine and has a good compulsory, has a chance to qualify for the finals, in Dunn's opinion.

Parallel bars is expected to be UMass' weak event, as Brouillet is the Minutemen's best but Dunn doesn't even pick him to qualify. Kormann (who else?) will probably win, said Dunn, while Whelan and Onysko should also finish high.

Finally, the high bar finds no Minutemen listed in the top eight by Dunn. Joel James, Jon Brandon, and Roy Johnson are given the best chances by Dunn to break into the qualifying group. Peter Kormann [illegible] is Dunn's favorite. Whelan and Onysko will be up there, too.

In the all arounds, Kormann of course, is expected to win. Whelan won't be competing on rings and thus won't be an all arounder, so Onysko should come in second, Temple's Tom [illegible] third, UMass' Brouillet fourth, and Johnson fifth, Dunn predicted. That would make [illegible], Brouillet, and Johnson would be the three Division I qualifiers.

The teams competing tonight will be Southern, UMass, Temple, Springfield, Army, Navy, Cornell, Syracuse, and Pitt.

Pittsburgh halts Bruins' streak

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Rookie Pierre Larouche snapped a 14-game scoreless string with a three-goal hat trick Wednesday night while leading the Pittsburgh Penguins from a 3-1 deficit to a 5-3 victory over the Boston Bruins.

Larouche, the top-scoring National Hockey League rookie with 58 points, [illegible] the Penguins' only goal in the first period dominated by Boston, and then scored two goals while the Penguins piled up four within a four-minute, 16-second segment of the second period.

Celtics burn Suns

HARTFORD (AP) — John Havlicek scored eight points in the last minute and a half, including six in a row, to spark the Boston Celtics to a 88-82 National Basketball Association victory over the Phoenix Suns Wednesday night.

Havlicek, who sat out most of the second half, got loose on a layup to put Boston ahead 80-78 with 1:30 to go. He dropped in two free throws 15 seconds later and scored again with 54 seconds left to give the Celtics an 84-78 advantage.

After Curtis Perry scored for the Suns, Havlicek put the game out of reach with a short jumper with 30 seconds left, giving Boston a six point lead, 86-80.

The game was the third and final one for the defending world champions in Hartford. Boston won two of the contests.

Phoenix played without its top two scorers, Charlie Scott and Dick Van Arsdale. Scott, the NBA's fifth leading scorer, hurt his knee against the Knicks in New York Tuesday night and Van Arsdale was nursing a torn calf muscle.

The Suns grabbed a 24-18 first period lead but fell behind at the half, 42-39. The visitors outscored Boston 28-17 in the third quarter for a 67-59 lead.

Sportswright's surprise

Professor Sportswright is already handing out the quiz as you enter and search for a seat in the filled-to-capacity lecture hall. Panic seizes you and you think to yourself, "Oh no! Not another surprise quiz!" But this test of knowledge is easier than you think because you've been a faithful reader of the Collegian sports pages during the winter season. You know all about John Murphy, Alex Eldridge and Chris Lamby, but what about Dave Kulakoff or Jeanne Abrahamson? Don't worry, a general knowledge of UMass sports should get you a passing grade. Just sit back and enjoy this one!

Lenny Bruce: Sold American

By Jeffrey Pelman

LENNY
directed by Bob Fosse; from the play by Julian Barry, starring Dustin Hoffman and Valerie Perrine

Walk out of your present state of mind and take a look at what people have been fulfilling their intellectual capacities in these past few months. A man named Lenny Bruce has been appearing in theatres, magazines, newspapers, on the covers of an endless series of rush-produced paperbacks. His name has become as familiar as Walter Cronkite's, and suddenly people are beginning to realize where George Carlin gets much of his material from. In short, we are idolizing a part-time junkie who did comedy routines for a living and was arrested numerous times for narcotics and obscenity charges. The man is also dead.

The revival got under way with Lenny, a broadway play by Julian Barry and starring Cliff Gorman in the title role. It enjoyed a successful run and a few Tony Awards, and soon the fortunate few who had seen the play were searching stores for old Lenny Bruce records and Lenny Bruce books. Then Bob Fosse, who had just hit the jackpot as the director of Cabaret, decided to make a film about him. This is what loosened the eventual avalanche.

Lenny is a chronicle of Mr. Bruce at his memorable extremes. We live the exasperating moments when his humor bombs, but are rewarded constantly by the witty, [illegible] routines which in life vaulted him to his recording contracts. His obscenity condemnations are well-documented and explored maturely to the point where one can almost relish in the total absurdity of the judicial system.

The core of the film is the relationship between Lenny and Honey, his stripper turned stripper wife. He meets her in a greasy spoon, again at a party, and ultimately beds her. She is real: an eye-winking, black-sequined sleaze, but nevertheless that. She enjoys the sex she has rather than succumbs to it, and her inner desire surfaces with long-collected force as they start to turn to drugs as releases from their hectic lives. Honey, who provides the film with its narrative flow through a series of "cinema verite" interviews, reflects Lenny's emotions merely by being a former companion of his. Their individual problems and experiences strangely seem to blend so that their need for each other's worries becomes a defined characteristic of their marriage.

Lenny's humor is nothing new to us. Many contemporary comics since his death have attempted in one way or another to recapture his "viciousness", his out-and-out vile truthfulness which time was comparable to pulling his audience's pants down. But these attempts, although successful to the college generation, have kept the barriers of permissible slang well intact to the adults. However, a society which throws you in the can once most assuredly will foam at the mouth in hope of a second bite. Lenny shows you the teeth and allows you to sweat with Mr. Bruce right under the smoke-filled spot.

Dustin Hoffman is the most diverse, refreshing actor working today, and his role as Lenny gives further reclamation to this. When the film opens he is Dustin Hoffman, the old Benjamin Braddock stereotype (which critics have beleagured him for, yet still always seems to fit the part); but as the film speedily enters its second half he is undoubtedly Lenny Bruce. The mannerisms are all there, the face, the vocabulary, even the pseudo-satanic beard. If there was any question earlier why Fosse seemed to be imitating a documentary, there is no question now. The scene where he delivers a monologue while doped up on heroin is the most nerve-racking, calculated bit of acting I have ever seen.

And Valerie Perrine? As Honey she is excellent, although not as superlative or as worthy of all the publicity she has been getting. There are moments when her cuteness overrides her true emotions, but these can always be blamed on the director.

The one complaint most viewers have had of Lenny is its pace. They say it moves too fast, that it is missing pieces near the end during his decline into drugs. This might be true, but how complete must the story be? Bob Fosse designed his film for the masses, not for the New York socialite who might have gotten drunk with one of Lenny's relatives a while back. Many people across the country knew virtually nothing about this comedian before the film was made, so as a basic, well-edited rehash of his rise and fall it certainly succeeds.

What bothers me about Lenny, though, is not the film itself, but the media wave which has accompanied it. Talking about Lenny Bruce is the latest trend, and this was inevitable because of the movie: but why idolize him? We are doing it because Bruce represents everything "society" considers rotten. By worshipping him we feel we can make the world pay for his unjust surpression.

But we are making him into something Bob Fosse was trying to avoid. The director is asking no sympathy for this dead man; if he were this would have been a color film, like Bonnie and Clyde. Lenny has a non-glorifying subject with non-glorifying intentions by the director, yet it is released as a commercial film; therefore, who can we blame for this saturation? Us, because as no one can possibly deny, we eat it up.

So how do you cope with someone ahead of their time? You ignore them or you lock them in a cage. Obviously this has been proved wrong. Question then, world: How do you know when someone is ahead of their time? Answer: you don't, but perhaps you can check [illegible] see how far you are behind him. The refusal to accept the controversial is an unconditional surrender to the forces of your peers, and we do it all the time. This is why it is wrong to start praying for Lenny Bruce. The smart people were the ones who liked Lenny Bruce back then. Now it is fruitless to call him a genius, when potential geniuses are being ignored or locked up every day. We do not need idols like Lenny; what we need are more people like him.

Maybe this all boils down to nostalgia, a very entertaining concept of our culture, but one of the most useless time-wasting activities we can subconsciously endure. [illegible]

CYMBELINE

reviewed by Michael Grossman

Cymbeline is certainly not the most popular play by Shakespeare. Of the few who have heard of this play, I'm sure even less know what it's about. I, too, must confess an unfamiliarity with this late work by Shakespeare.

Nevertheless, Cymbeline is from Shakespeare's last period; the period that produced The Tempest and The Winter's Tale. These plays, starting with Cymbeline in 1610, are of a new genre. They are commonly referred to as "tragic comedies." Picking up on the final sense of the great tragedies [illegible]

[illegible]

Cymbeline thrusts Posthumas out of his court in order to make room for Cloten's desires. Posthumas turns up in Rome and wagers his wife's virtue against a villainous hot-blooded Italian, Iachimo. Iachimo goes to Cymbeline's court and sneaks into Imogen's bedchamber, via a trunk, and steals the bracelet Posthumas gave her and spies a mole on her left breast. With this information, Iachimo returns to Rome and convinces Posthumas that he seduced his wife. Struck by overwhelming grief, Posthumas [illegible]

[illegible]

They were painted green with gold trimming. Since many of the costumes were laced with gold trimming, the movement of the performers was rather pleasing visually. Yet there was an interesting contrast in the costume coloring. Gold, generally used as a symbol of virtue and goodness, was worn by the negative characters — the mountain setting, the stage submerged into darkness and the back screen glowed with a blistering red. As the redness emanated through the glittering gold, the visual excitement symbolized exquisitely the essential paradoxes of this play.

[illegible]

A world that should be filled with happiness and love is now engulfed in death and possible destruction. Yet the seeds for redemption, reconciliation and rebirth are firmly planted. And when these seeds sprout, the lives of these characters will enter an idyllic garden.

[illegible]

[illegible] pression on the dummy's head even resembled Cloten's foppy smile! The audience was sickened, to say the least. We are given nothing to understand this action, except to say that Shakespeare is oscillating frantically between extremes. Again, why? The answer lies somewhere in the genre of the play itself.

Overall, the acting fell a bit short. Cymbeline (Malcolm Ewen) was rather unconvincing, along with the Queen (Mary Robinson) and a host of minor characters. In fact, the first act was pretty rough for the whole cast.

Finally a solid American band

by Ork Alarm Santos

SONG FOR AMERICA
KANSAS
(Kirshner Records)
Timing: 44:46

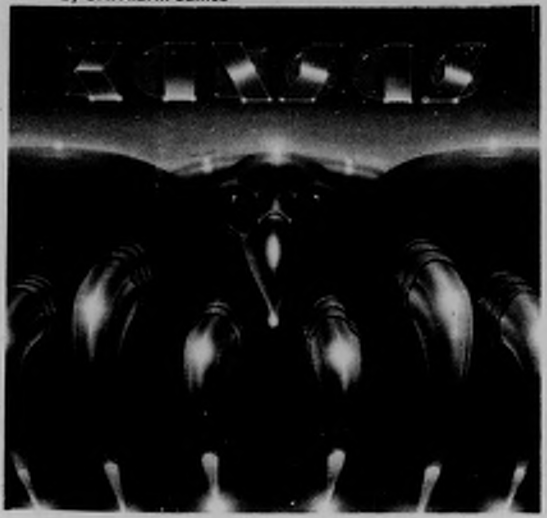
No, Song For America isn't a new album by Johnny Mann & His Singers, but some more hot wax by the prairie boys, Kansas. Devout Below The Salt readers will remember Kansas as the band yours truly touted as the best new band around two semesters ago.

Song For America should have been called Song For Kansas. Why? Because besides being their second album, it represents a giant step forward for the band in terms of direction, quality or better yet, everything. The first disc, Kansas, suffered because 1) it was their initial album and 2) they tried too hard to impress us with a variety of musical styles. Not so with Song For America. Kansas has locked themselves into a style that blends the artyness of Yes — ELP Genesis with the rockin' power of the Blue Oyster Cult.

Pheew!

Part of Kansas' overall success with this combination is that they don't let the pyrotechnics get out of hand. (Lord knows the boys have plenty of opportunities!) The two best examples of what I mean is the title cut and the closing twelve minute opus "Incomudro — Hymn To Alman". Keyboardist's Steve Walsh and Kerry Livgren (doubles on guitars) play some excellent synthesizer passages straight out of the ELP mold. However, unlike Emerson, Walsh & Livgren have sense to use the minimum instead of the maximum. Even the drummer doesn't let his synthesized solo get out of hand. It all ends up as rather flashy, but simple and FUN!

Of the remaining shorter compositions, "Down The Road" is the obvious single. Basically a good, fast paced rocker with AM potential. "Lonely Street" is the band's dabbling in pure heavy metal.



" Who would imagine...that they would freak out...in...Kansas?"

You could call it something Deep Purple would write if they were from the midwest. This DOESN'T MEAN that it stinks like Deep Purple; Kansas has better muscianship and imagination that best Purple could throw out. "Lonely Street" oozes and wheezs its way like the Blue Oyster Cult on a good night. "The Devil Game" rocks well also and features some Yes — Jethro Tull twists in it, i.e. start — stop interchanges via the violinist, guitarist and keyboards.

With their second lp, Kansas should certainly be recognized as a group to be reckoned with. Only the delivery of the vocals could provide a possible source of irritation. Walsh in particular sounds like he's a midwest preacher. But what the hell, why quibble with petty things. Finally we have a solid rock album by an American group. And you thought this was a Johnny Mann & His Singers album. M'Kek. (A)

Nightbirds
LABELLE
(Epic KE 33075) Time 36:15

The success of "Lady Marmelade", one of the best-produced singles in years, has brought Patti Labelle, Nona Hendryx, and Sarah Dash back into the limelight for the first time in over a decade. While known as Patti Labelle and the Bluebells, the group had a number of rhythm and blues hits during the early sixties ("I Sold My Heart To the Junkman" being the most memorable), but faded rapidly.

Reappearing as Labelle (Who producer Kit Lambert was one of those responsible for the name change), the group showed an incredible maturity, leaving much of their early shrillness behind. Their vocal work with Laura Nyro on Gonna Take a Miracle is classic and proved Labelle able to blow most other female vocal groups away.

Since then, several Labelle albums have come and gone pretty much unnoticed, but on Nightbirds, their music has coalesced to a point where it is impossible to ignore them any further. Produced and arranged by near-genius Allan Toussaint, and boasting an impressive line up of musicians including three of New Orleans' mighty Meters, Nightbirds is filled with a strength and consistency which makes recent stuff by Gladys Knight sound pallid in comparison.

This is the first time horns have been mixed into Labelle's arrangements (Toussaint's doing) and their effect is striking. Songs like "Somebody Somewhere" and "You Turn Me On", both written by Nona Hendryx have all the power and wisdom of their current hit, and Toussaint's "All Girl Band" is brilliant soul sensitivity. A natural.

Nightbirds is one of the most impressive and lasting musical surprises in some time, and will certainly be "gotcha gatcha ya ya da da" ing for a long time to come. A-

Total Time 49:27

Ex John Mayallite and drummer Keef Hartley is in the fore again with his newly-composed British group, Dog Soldier. Keef, with his Native American oriented cerebrum, so named the group because a dog soldier was the best warrior sent ahead of the raiding party to scout. He always led and never followed, and this is Keef's hope for his new band.

STRAY DOG
[illegible]

[illegible]

The majority of cuts contained on the album are written by lead vocalist Timmy Dulaine, who obviously needs more experience in coming up with a catchy tune or an interesting lyric now and then. As for his singing style, he sounds somewhat like an inferior version of Deep Purple's David Coverdale. Nothing that the band attempts here is in any way new. You've heard it all a hundred times before, and a hundred times you've heard it better. "Junkyard Angel" at least features a light, bouncy chorus which is nice, but from its very name, you can probably imagine what kind of garbage the rest of it is. Stray Dog should be put out of its misery.

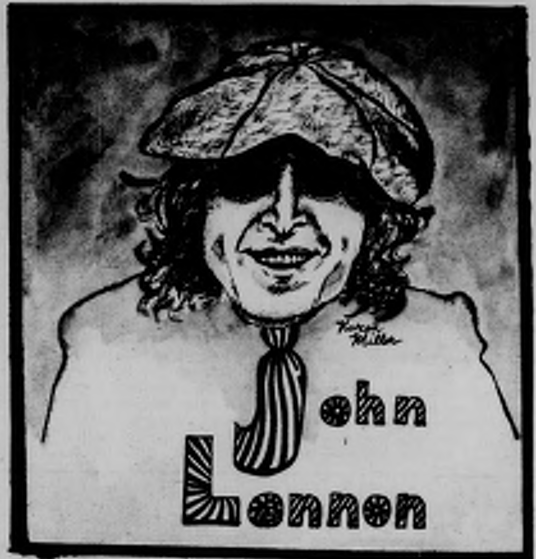
Rock 'n' Roll
JOHN LENNON
Apple SK-3419
Total Playing Time: 40:29

Who would have suspected a progression from Mind Games to this? Although it is true that "Ya Ya" was previewed at the end of Walls and Bridges. This is not a rock and roll revival, in the sense of a literal and tedious note-by-note recreation of old hits. Rock'n'Roll is a statement of spirit, honest and integral. The record contains 15 songs from the '50s and early '60s, oldies, but filtered through 20 years of sound and emerging significantly altered. Probably the deepest breath John Lennon has taken in years.

Part of the '50s—'70s dialectic on this album is that most of the songs here sound as if they were recorded in mono — but they're not. Conventions of '50s albums — the quick fade, the obvious edit, the uncredited musicians — are respected throughout, and the overall impression is of the spirit of mono turned inside out. A few of the songs retain their original textures — "Be-Bop-A-Lula" and the "Ready Teddy—Rip It Up" medley are good examples. Most of the songs are transformed by intensification of the original texture ("Peggy Sue", "Slippin' and Slidin' ") or by thorough re-arrangement ("You Can't Catch Me", "Sweet Little Sixteen"). In this last group, "You Can't Catch Me" stands out as the album's masterpiece. This Chuck Berry song moves into a really tribal plane, acting something like a mantra (see "I Don't Wanna Be A Soldier Momma" on Imagine for a similar feeling).

The album ends with probably the oldest song here — "Just Because" — and it has (appropriately) the muddiest mix. Rock 'n' Roll is not an easy album to listen to, but the listening is definitely worth it. As the man says, "There's two basses in this. I hope you appreciate it."



John smiles all right, but it's not always easy.

Rock & Roll
JOHN LENNON
Apple SK-3419 time 39:29

Bang, great record. Just like that? No, but sort of...

John Lennon is the finest rock singer to emerge in the 60's, for reasons that go way beyond pipes. No one could match his all-round talents to do it both fast and slow. His bar-grill tenor howls and coos as nicely as you want, and mainly, he knows, instinctively, about the spirit of tormented, crazed, wonderful growth and celebration that is Rock & Roll as well as anybody. Liste to the way he can move a giant lump of a tune like Fats Domino's "Ain't That A Shame"...

But hold it, forget the little analysis. Two tunes are drags, five more motor in second gear, and the other seven (especially "Stand By Me", "You Can't Catch Me" and "Just Because") are great snappers. They catch and open the main gate of liberation that makes rock & roll such a compelling force. There are two factors that work together here. One is the escaping from all the monkey business we deal with, whatever jive it may be. As teenagers this means parents, school, the awkwardness of coming of age; later it comes to be a shitty job doing nothing, taxes, etc. and perhaps (certainly for John) an empty world of non-thinking idiots who refuse to look beyond their own empty lives and try to impose their Age of Mogellian ideas upon you. It wouldn't be so bad if they just left you alone, but "everybody wants me to be just like them."

The second blending item is the natural lyrical, romantic spirit that invades us all, usually peaking during teen time. Great thoughts of life, love, humanity flow out idealistically, with quite a power stock behind them. This is the human spirit at perhaps its finest.

And so a music that can take and shake you for all you got physically, emptying your frustrations while it rings true to your fondest, most private idyllic aspirations is, well, a way of life.

It takes worried men to sing worried songs; it takes teenagers to play teenage songs unless the spirit lives on past 20. Old people don't rock very well, they're too busy being respectable in a bitch of a world — they've given up. As Roy Campanella knew about baseball, you have to have a lot of little boy in you to rock. Keep the faith, keep the spirit. Intermittent as he has been recently, no one has more spirit than Lennon. His gift is the ultimate in art, namely the power to make you forget where you are and wrap you totally in his vision, which becomes your vision. Insidious. He makes you believe. You just know he's giving all he has, and the untrammeled human soul going 100 per cent is a sort of holiness and ultimate love.

Money continues to poison rock, killing, through easy success, much of the music's reason for being. It goes a lot deeper than good time boogie; it seeks out the basic urges, the basic reasons for being in everyone's soul. In a perverse way, money separates the hacks from the zealots by numbing the insincere's senses with cheap fulfillment. John Lennon's been through all that. Here's a continued salute to one of the few people who knows it goes a lot deeper, and intends to stay alive all his life.

One of the first best films I've seen in the last decade. The story is about four husbands from the Atlanta suburbs who travel up into the wilderness to show off their manhood by way of a leisurely canoe trip. FUNNY LADY (?)
Ha ha ha. Barbara Streisand in her new musical which has just begun at the Showcase Cinemas in West Springfield. It's been advertised to be a fancy fantasia filled with fashionable femmes and fellows, frequently frivolous, but finely furnished with frolicking fun. More likely a foolish farce, but let's give it a chance, huh?

KING OF HEARTS++++
[illegible]

LAST TANGO IN PARIS — A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE++++
[illegible] sub-stitute, and in Streetcar we meet Stanley Kowalski, who is torn between two sisters and the hypocrisy of the world around him. (Amherst Cinema beginning Friday, 3-14.)

THE NIGHT PORTER+++
Makes Ilsa look like senile saurkraut. Yes, this is the latest entry in the Nazi No-no genre, but it does contain some decent acting by Charlotte Rampling and Dirk Bogarde. If you're planning on bringing your overcoat, though, don't bother because there's more sex in an average Scientific American [illegible]

LENNY++++
Dustin Hoffman's latest has hours as Lenny Bruce, the dead comic who is more famous today than most of the living ones. Bob Fosse directs in a black-and-white documentary style designed to fill in unaware viewers on the basic highs and lows of Bruce's life and wife (Valerie Perrine). Chock full of excellently re-told routines, hysterical human situations, and alternately depressing ones. (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.)

ROSEMARY'S BABY++++
Superb treatment of the super-natural by Roman Polanski. [illegible]

REPORT TO THE COMMISSIONER++
Another corruption-within-the-force police saga, this time starring Michael Moriarty and a whole slew of non-actors who trip over each other in misled attempts to support a film genre which should have ended once television got hold of it.

CALIFORNIA SPLIT+++
Elliot Gould and George Segal in a fast paced look at the gambling world. A Robert Altman film which typifies the director's interest [illegible] (Mountain Farms Four)

THE FRONT PAGE+++
Walter Matthau and Jack Lemmon in a fast paced look at the newspaper world. Hey, doesn't this sound like the last film? Of course, it does, and it also reminds one of The Sting and about a half dozen other films which try to capitalize on current trends. But Nixon and the gang started it all, so I guess we should blame them. Oh yes! The movie. Well, it's pretty funny. (Mountain Farms Four)

ROMEO AND JULIET++++
One of the best Shakespeare films and certainly the most beautiful. Directed by Franco Zeffirelli, who had enough couth to cast young people in the starring roles instead of famous names. (C.C.A., 3-14, 7 and 10).

SUPERVIXENS+
I have not seen the film, but the preview was bad enough. Another dosage of chauvinistic slime from Russ Meyer, who supposedly is here in Amherst to reach the college audience with his work. If this is the case, I'm ashamed to admit I go to college. Even though there is more worthy matter in a bowl of pea soup than in this man's mind, you have to give him credit for being a past porno pioneer. But this is 1975, Russ, and I'd rather lose the services of my nuts for a full year than let you tease me to death. (Amherst Cinema, 3-13 and 3-14.)

YOUNG FRANKENSTEIN++++
Mel Brooks, who was responsible for laughing convulsions and a coast-to-coast bean revival with Blazing Saddles, now serves up his horror movie spoof which will fill theatres faster than pot smoke for a Yellow Submarine showing. Done in black-and-white to give it the 1930's look, it features Gene Wilder as Doc Frankenstein, Peter Boyle as the monster who has zippers instead of stitches, and Marty Feldman as the castle geek. Bill Densmore sues UMass to get Ed School records

NORTHAMPTON — A hearing date was set yesterday for March 25 in Superior Court of Hampshire County on a suit against UMass seeking disclosure of records from the School of Education.

The suit filed by UMass student William P. Densmore, Jr. asks for release of records pertaining to the School's use of federal grant funds.

Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson denied a request from Densmore because "the federal grand jury has taken jurisdiction of all the records to which you have requested access."

Johnson appeared before a Federal Grand Jury in Boston with the School of Ed records on March 6.

The extend of the records requested by the federal grand jury remains secret.

The federal grand jury, the FBI and HEW have been investigating allegations of misuse of funds.

James O. Newpher, special agent in charge of the FBI's Boston office predicted the suit would be thrown out because the federal subpoena superceded state law allowing access to public records.

Densmore's attorney Richard Howland of Amherst said "the chief issue is whether or not the records remain public after they have been subpoened by a Grand Jury."

Densmore said he filed the suit, based on the State's open records law, because the records were "at one time public records and are still public records. I am insisting on my right to look at the records."

Johnson, charged as defendent in suit, has retained copies of all the records and that copies of the records could be made available."

"I think the suit will be thrown out, the University has been allowed to keep the records so they can continue operation, but they are under strict security," said Newpher.

The confidentiality of the records will have a "chilling effect on the general availability of documents and on the news media from seeking information," said Densmore.

UMass President Robert C. Wood has said that up to $2.4 million max have been misused in a five-year period at the School of Education. The FBI has acknowledged that [illegible] of grant funds have been misused at the School of Ed.

Gluckstern considered for Maryland position

PROVOST ROBERT L. GLUCKSTERN

By CHRIS DILLARD and BILL DENSMORE
Staff Reporters

Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Robert L. Gluckstern has been recommended by a University of Maryland search committee to head the [illegible]-student College Park campus, outside of Washington, D.C.

One other candidate, William L. Hayes a University of Georgia behavioral psychologist was also recommended.

The campus search committee will present the two favored names to a closed session of the University's Board of Regents, according to the Diamond Back, the student newspaper. Their selection is to be announced a week from today, the newspaper said.

Many campus sources in Amherst had confirmed that Gluckstern, [illegible], was under consideration at Maryland and at several other Universities inside and outside New England.

Of two other candidates under consideration until recently, one withdrew his name. The other, Hans Mark, director of the Ames Research Laboratory, Menlo Park, Calif., was believed to be under less serious consideration.

Don Percy, the candidate who withdrew his name, is Vice President for Administrative Affairs of the University of Wisconsin at the Madison campus.

The College Park campus, known nationally in physics and athletics, has been without a chancellor since last July. An acting chancellor has served in the interim.

The former chancellor, Charles E. Bishop, left to head a five-campus University of Arkansas system.

Gluckstern, a PhD. physicist, headed the UMass physics department for most of the sixties. He is a former Yale physics professor.

Gluckstern has been receptive to offers from other campuses since last fall, before current troubles at the School of Education. Friends say he is eager to try running a large public university himself.

Resource Network hearing looks at dorm programs

By JAN ALEXANDER
Staff Reporter

After almost three hours of testimony by students, faculty and staff in support of programs and services in the residence halls, five administration officials had "no reaction at this time."

The hearing last night, sponsored by the Resource Network, and attended by five directors involved in making budget decisions concerning dorm programs, was held to air "the value or lack of value of the dorm services," according to moderator Ted Slavin.

The Resource Network is a group of individuals concerned with the breaking down campus alienation through support programs.

The officials in attendance at the hearing were Douglas Forsythe from the Chancellor's office, Daniel Melley, director of public affairs, Warren Gulko of budget and institutional studies, Russell Kraus from the provost's office, Daniel Fitzpatrick, associate dean of students, and Jack Littlefield of the planning office.

All of the testimony were pleas for continuation of support services such as dormitory counselors and heads of residence, also [illegible], infirmary and mental health services, women's centers, and the Global Survival Program.

Sarah Hamilton, director of new student programs, stressed the need for dorm counselors. "To the new student," she said, "the language of the university is strange. Words like cum, outreach, [illegible], and core have no meaning to them."

Governing Board to open meetings

The Campus Center Board of Governors last night complied with a Collegian request asking them to observe the "open meeting law" and change their scheduled executive session to a public meeting.

The Collegian advised Board Chairperson Jeff Taggart that the board may be in violation of the open meeting law by scheduling periodic executive sessions from which the press and public are excluded. Taggart agreed to allow the Collegian to attend the meeting.

Stabler warns against political complacency

By DON AUCOIN and DONNA FUSCO
Staff Reporters

Neil Stabler, recently nominated to the Federal Elections Commission, last night warned against complacency in the Democratic Party.

Speaking at a monthly meeting of the Amherst Democratic Town Committee, he said "The more organization in political parties the better, Since Massachusetts is a largely democratic state, you're likely to be feeling you've got it made, but we cannot afford complacency. We've got to get our candidates known."

Stabler, who will be meeting with the Senate Confirmation Committee tomorrow morning concerning his nomination, said he did not foresee a recurrence of the "more than 8,000 campaign spending violations of 1971."

"The big loopholes are in campaign contributions and not expenditures," he said. According to Stabler, the new Election Campaign Act of 1974 will prevent contribution abuses.

The new law puts a limit on contributions and expenditures and provides for public financing of presidential elections.

Stabler said of the Commission, "This is a perfect opportunity to get the political system cleaned up. After we review the violations from 1971, our emphasis will be to meet with political and public groups to stress voluntary contributions."

A visiting professor in Practical Politics at UMass 13 years ago, he was also Democratic State Chairman for eleven years in Michigan.

Stabler said he was distressed over the lack of communication in the politics of this state.

"We've got to get back to human dimension politics. What is colder than getting your politics always canned in the media?" said Stabler, adding, "People have given up local meetings and person to person contact for paid political time on T.V."

Stabler said "How can a democracy run on the abnormal diet of political news the press is presenting? Why don't papers find it interesting to set space aside for what's normal in politics, rather than what's abnormal?"

"Politics has gradually improved, especially since 1968. We've been trying to get reform for a long time. Now we have the reform; the irony is, now, when the parties are beginning to get half-way decent, respect for government has been going down... government has improved and the public [illegible]."

OH academics 'not traditional'

Future uncertain for Orchard Hill budget

By JERRY ROGERS
Staff Reporter

Though it's surrounded in a haze right now, a red warning light flashes whenever next year's budget is the subject of conversation in the Orchard Hill (OH) offices.

"We're acting as if nothing is going to change [illegible] budget plans — but we're not making any promises either," according to [illegible], assistant director of Student Affairs.

Because the Hill is a residential college rather than a residence area budget problems are compounded.

Academically, the OH is often viewed as a "frill" by the less innovative faculty and administrators on campus. This could cause problems in the academic budgeting, said Michael Wolff, director of Orchard Hill.

"There's a policy drift," he explained, "because the people who make up policies are slow to make up their minds when budgets are uncertain. Like water finding its own level, they tend to drift toward tradition, and this is bad because we're not part of tradition."

In past years there has been a mingling of funds from academic and student affairs sources. This year, due to different problems in both areas budget preparation will have to be more traditional.

Academic funds come through [illegible], administrator of special programs in the vice chancellor for academic affairs office. Last year's appropriation in this category was [illegible]. This year, however, contingency plans for budgets with a six to ten percent cut are being made.

Wolff said that a choice shouldn't have to be made between traditional departments and the OH, and [illegible] collaboration of the OH program with departments. This does not mean, however, just letting more sections of departmental courses on the OH, but rather consolidation of resources and courses that are suited to the OH's overall concept.

The academic problem is compounded by problems of residence because life at OH will obviously affect the involvement of students in OH courses.

Wolff explained that budget problems together with voluntary dorm residency "come at a difficult time", and he doesn't like the thought of dorms becoming "boarding houses", because this would kill a lot of interest in academics. Plans to make different residence areas at different cost levels don't help either, because it might cause OH to "become less accessible when it should be more accessible."

This year, [illegible] was received from state funds and was all spent on security, salaries of counselors and OH staff, special centers (such as the Third World Center and The Women's Center), and supplies.

Trust fund revenue amounted to approximately [illegible]. One half of that total was earmarked for environmental projects, such as replacing rugs in the dorms, putting locks on the lounges, or other major, unusual changes. Already this year the Physical Plant has run out of environmental funds and thus there are no locks on the lounges as it had been previously planned, and even if the locks (which are on order) arrived "today" there are no funds to provide for installation.

Another [illegible] of trust fund monies is allocated to debt service, leaving [illegible] for the salaries of heads of residence, janitors, and also for furniture and any maintenance work done by the physical plant.

Result of 3-campus report

Faculty accepts 52 personnel policy revisions

By BILL GONET
Staff Reporter

The faculty senate yesterday accepted a report recommending 52 revisions in a university wide academic personnel policy drafted by a multi-campus committee.

The multi-campus committee, composed of academic and administrative representatives from the university's three campuses, had formulated an academic personnel policy for all three campuses at the request of University President Robert C. Wood.

The report accepted yesterday was described by Senate secretary David Boothe as "an initial response" to the deficiencies of the multi-campus document and offers recommendations for their correction.

The report was the result of a study of the multi-campus document made by the Senate's Rules, Academic Personnel policy, and Grievance Committees.

The multi-campus document outlines procedures and guidelines for deciding matters of faculty appointments, promotions, tenure, and salary adjustments.

Boothe cited the following as the chief deficiencies of the multi-campus document: "its departure from the concept of the faculty's right to primary responsibility over personnel actions, its vagueness, and the way it purports to emasculate the grievance system as it exists."

Besides addressing these areas, the report also objected to what Boothe described as the unrealistic standards and procedures for promotions and the use of undefined terms like "institutional need."

The report states that specific definitions of such terms are important because multi-campus document uses these terms to describe criteria for personnel evaluation.

An hour long debate over the interpretation of revisions pertaining to the implementation of the affirmative action policy preceded the adoption of the report.

The discussion resulted in the deletion of one revision and the rewording of another.

The accepted report will be submitted to the multi-campus committee via President Wood's office.

In his opening remarks Boothe said that the senate reserves the right to make further recommendations and that Wood's office is formulating procedures for the incorporation of the senate's revisions in the next draft of the personnel policy made by the multi campus committee.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery in opening remarks, regretted that he had not yet received any more definitive information from School of Ed audit and reported that the external committee reviewing the School of Ed will deliver a verbal report of its findings by May 15.

State employees cannot obtain reduced rates at DC's

By P. J. PROKOP
Staff Reporter

Dining commons buildings are paid out of student board money and not by the state, so state employees cannot eat in the dining commons at a reduced rate, according to Sidney Myers, UMass-Amherst attorney.

A 20-year-old state law, Chapter [illegible], Section [illegible], permits state employees to eat for 30 cents in state-owned dining halls.

However, the UMass Police Dept. was the only group on campus taking advantage of the reduced meal cost.

David Johnston, director of public safety, issued a general order last week saying UMass police must now pay the regular price for meals when eating in the dining commons.

Johnston said that the order was issued as soon as he was aware that the money to pay the difference of the reduced meal rate came out of student's money and not state money.

Rep. James Collins D-Amherst said he didn't think the dining halls would come under the title of a 'state institution' because of the trust fund money. Asked if there was any legislation under consideration in the matter, Collins said he's "looking into it."

Collins added that he felt it would be "inappropriate for State employees to eat at the dining commons unless the difference was subsidized by the State." "Everyone should have to pay equally," he said.

The University did not come under the law, Myers said because the University was different from other state institutions such as Northampton State Hospital. "Because we have the machinery of the trust fund, we operate in a slightly different way than other State agencies in some areas, this being one of them."

UMass police have enjoyed the benefits of reduced meal plans for many years, when there was perhaps only one dining hall and a few police, said Arthur [illegible], acting food services director.

As more dining commons were built and the police force enlarged, the practice simply continued, and even though the regular prices went up, the police paid the same rate. "This was an oversight, the price should have been raised," [illegible] said. "I don't feel the police felt they were ripping anyone off, and I don't think the dining commons people felt they were being ripped off," he added.

"Sometimes counselors are the only people who can break down this basic communication problem. Without them, help would be by chance, not by design," Hamilton said.

"The crux of the dorms is community spirit. It's time we learn to function together, but this isn't going to happen when there is no staff," [illegible] added.

Acting Ed Dean says panel of visiting scholars would act as academic audit

By [illegible]

Louis Fischer acting dean of the School of Education, said the Blue Ribbon Committee of visiting scholars, "would act as an academic audit for the professional world and governing bodies in the commonwealth."

Fischer said the Blue Ribbon Committee and the Ad Hoc Committee of the Faculty Senate which were organized to review academic standards at the School of Ed are "very important but for different reasons."

"The Ad Hoc Committee is important in re-establishing neglected relations with the rest of UMass," said Fischer in a Collegian interview.

The re-examination of all programs at the university as a general policy is healthy, said Fischer, because it shows which programs are more important and makes careful judicious uses of resources possible.

Fischer said his priorities as acting dean are the encouragement of faculty to explore new methods, individualization of programs when possible, and the support of affirmative action groups (women and minority) on campus.

In the past the freedom to explore new methods sometimes went overboard according to Fischer who said he hopes the delicate balance between freedom and responsibility will be established in the future.

Ideally, said Fischer, an educational program should consider factors such as the students prior education, special interests, and unique learning situations, not just drop students into a "predetermined curricula."

"The national recession and a budget crunch at UMass are likely to hurt attempts at individualization," said Fischer.

He stressed that all problems aren't solved by money but that "generally speaking, individualization requires a better ratio of faculty to students, more library resources and special programs such as Outreach."

"Unless the size shrinks, the student body, it is difficult to maintain a wide variety of programs," said Fischer.

LOUIS FISCHER, Acting Dean of the School of Education.

Fischer said he is pleased with faculty and student input into committees. "They volunteer to form task forces and pull together information for committees."

The Ad Hoc Committee was organized to review and evaluate the administration and academic standards of the School of Ed at UMass from [illegible].

The Blue Ribbon Committee was designed to take a critical look at the size of programs and the academic procedures in the School of Ed to determine its strengths and weaknesses.

Collegian classifieds DON'T pay - for sellers of stolen clarinet

By BRUCE FREDERICK
Staff Reporter

If you rip something off around here, keep it. Or sell it in Mexico. But don't try to sell it through the Collegian Classifieds.

At least this is what Philip [illegible] and Peter [illegible] found out Wednesday, when they attempted to sell a clarinet to a pair of likely customers who had read their ad.

The apparent music lovers went to Washington Tower, seemed impressed with the merchandise, and bought it. And then promptly identified themselves as the original owner of the instrument, and a plainclothes UMass policeman. The sweet sounds of passing money quickly changed to a more sour tone: a monotonal dramatic reading of a Miranda card.

[illegible] and [illegible], of [illegible] and [illegible], respectively, were charged with possession of stolen property.

According to [illegible], Asst. Director of the Dept. of Public Safety, the clarinet's owner had reported the theft from the Fine Arts Center March 8, read the ad on March 12, and notified the UMass police, who planned the set up.

Also on March 13, and again in Washington Tower, another person also learned something about the fine art of ripping off: don't [illegible] down the corridor with the newly acquired merchandise in plain view. Several residents of Washington's third floor observed a familiar stereo being carried down the hall by an unfamiliar face. The residents detained him and called the police.

Arrested was David E. [illegible], 26, of [illegible] Franklin St., Holyoke.

House committee rejects Cambodian aid bill

US airlift delayed by airport shelling

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A compromise to send Cambodia $135.6 million in food and arms aid over the next three months was rejected 18 to 15 yesterday by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, and a Senate Democratic Caucus voted 38 to 5 against the emergency aid request.

Meanwhile, in Phnom Penh, rebel gunners blew up an ammunition dump at Pochentong airport yesterday, setting off an hours-long chain of explosions that shut down the U.S. airlift. The Cambodian government struck back with napalm and bombing strikes in a major new offensive to ease pressure on the airport lifeline.

The White House described President Ford as "deeply disappointed" but still hopeful that his aid proposal will be enacted, and a State Department spokesman said, "If the Cambodian government receives this assistance, they will still have a chance."

But the action yesterday by Senate Democrats, and a similar vote Wednesday by the House Democratic Caucus, all but destroyed any possibility that Congress will approve the full $522 million in aid to Cambodia and South Vietnam.

Before the vote in the House Foreign Affairs Commiettte, Acting Secretary of State Robert Ingersoll made an emotional appeal for the funds and was told by a committee member that he was "simply failing to come to grips with the facts."

The House committee overturned the compromise recommended by its subcommittee to provide $135.6 million over the next three months, contingent on presidential efforts to bring about a settlement. But it postponed until next week a final vote on the bill on a suggestion that it be sent to the full House for a vote even if the Committee majority is opposed to it.

Committee Chairman Thomas P. Morgan, D-Pa., indicated a compromise is still possible. He asked State Department officials to seek such a solution in meetings with Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D-Minn., one of the eight members who visited Indochina last month.

Ingersoll, in his last-minute appeal, insisted that the full request is needed and rejected suggestions that Cambodian President Lon Nol be asked to resign so an orderly surrender could be arranged.

Rep. Pierre S. DuPont, R-Del., said: "Mr. Secretary, you don't seem to come to grips with the problem. I don't know if you don't see the problem, or have been instructed not to see it."

One Western military source in Phnom Penh said government troops all around the capital defense perimeter "seem to be doing better the last few days — the lines are tighter, better and stronger." The main aim was to halt the rocket attacks on the airport and refugee-jamed Phnom Penh.

The ammunition explosion sent slugs and shrapnel whining across the airport and nearby Highway 4. It shattered windows in the terminal building but evidently caused no injuries. A U.S. military spokesman said he had no information on reports two U.S. planes were hit.

The more vulnerable DC8's quit for the day when the explosion came, but the C130's got in a few more flights later before dusk forced a halt to flying. None of the airlift planes can land at the Phnom Penh airport at night. Spokesman said 15 DC8 and 29 C130 cargo flights, a normal load, reached Phnom Penh yesterday despite the airport shutdown.

Schlesinger sees Hanoi offensive; Communists battle near Saigon

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary James Schlesinger said yesterday Hanoi seems to be readying a major military offensive in South Vietnam to coincide with next year's U.S. presidential election.

He said the United States should stop "sitting idly by" and give South Vietnam the $300 million extra military aid that President Ford has requested.

"Hanoi seems to follow American electoral politics fairly carefully," Schlesinger said in a televised interview. "I would expect that the way things are going, 1976 will be the year for the major offensive."

Meanwhile, in Vietnam, tank-led North Vietnamese troops closed in on two district capitals 35 miles northwest of Saigon yesterday, sending an estimated 25,000 civilians and militiamen fleeing southward in panic, field reports said.

At the same time, Saigon high command spokesmen said the Communist offensive — the biggest since the massive 1972 attacks — spread to the Mekong Delta yesterday.

Communist forces overran five small villages and attacked three district capitals in the rich rice-growing region south of Saigon, they reported.

The assaults in the Mekong Delta spread fighting the length of South Vietnam. Previous Communist thrusts struck at a 400-mile line running north of Saigon, but not south of the capital.

In Saigon, the government ordered a nationwide mobilization, placing every male between 17 to 43 on military call to meet the Communist drive. An official statement said new draft calls would be issued "to meet the battlefield requirements in the face of large-scale Communist attacks.

Newsmen at the scene reported the two district towns of Go Dau Ha and Khiem Hanh were deserted by noon Thursday, with civilians and militia-men — many barefooted and without weapons — fleeing down Highway 1 toward Saigon.

Communist forces were advancing toward the two towns from two directions, the Saigon command said, and government reinforcements were rushed to the area.

As the basis for his prediction, Schlesinger cited "dramatic" increases in the number of North Vietnamese troops that have been infiltrating South Vietnam.

"Must of their strategic (troop) reserve remains in Hanoi," he said. "But the level of infiltration has increased dramatically in recent weeks.

Although there is "no immediate crisis" comparable to that facing Cambodia, he said, "the indications are very clear that Vietnam will need considerably more military assistance than we have given to them to date this year.

Portugal arrests businessmen, military leaders after coup

LISBON (UPI) — Hundreds of Portuguese [illegible] into hiding yesterday to avoid a purge of top businessmen, conservative military officers and right-wing politicians suspected of involvement in Tuesday's short-lived revolt.

A government statement said 36 officers and 14 civilians had been detained so far and others were being sought.

Extremists wrecked the offices of the Confederation of Portuguese Industry. The bank workers union called for the nationalization of banks and plastered a sign on one, renaming it the "People's Bank."

Police sources said among those being sought was Christian Democratic party leader Maj. Jose Sanches Osorio, who served as information minister under Gen. Antonio Spinola.

Spinola, ousted as president in a crisis last September fled to Spain by helicopter with his family and several officers after the abortive coup Tuesday.

Soldiers making the arrests shot the lock off the door of one house where the residents failed to answer. In another case, they fired a grenade to gain entrance.

Officials said many of the wanted men could be fleeing for the Spanish border and urged the public to be vigilant. All banks were closed for the second day to prevent withdrawal of money.

Sheriff urges grass decriminalized

Urges possession, use be misdemeanor

Compiled from Wires

BOSTON — Saying outdated and unenforceable marijuana laws make policemen the objects of ridicule, Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley joined a series of legislators yesterday in calling for leniency.

"Widespread use of marijuana in this country and intermittent enforcement of the laws prohibiting this drug are causing disrespect for those who make and enforce the laws," he said.

Buckley testified before the legislative Committee on Human Services in favor of a proposal that criminal penalties for the possession and use of marijuana be repealed.

The proposal would make those actions misdemeanors punishable by a fine similar to that for a traffic violation.

Under current law, the maximum penalty for a first-time user is six months in jail and a $500 fine; a second offender could go to jail for two years and be fined $2,000.

The decriminalization bill is modeled after a first-in-the-nation Oregon law that went into effect in October 1973 reducing the penalty for smoking grass to the same degree as a parking ticket.

Although the penalty for possession of a small amount of marijuana has been reduced by the legislature from a felony to a misdemeanor, "marijuana arrests constitute nearly 60 per cent of all drug charges in Massachusetts," said Marsha Semeuls, director of CLUM's Drug Policy Project.

She said surveys taken in Oregon indicate that a majority of the population, including police, favor the decriminalization law.

Kissinger says slow progress in Mideast

ASWAN, Egypt (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said yesterday he is making slow but definite progress in what a U.S. spokesman called "serious and complicated" talks with President Anwar Sedat on a second-stage agreement between Egypt and Israel.

After a day of sightseeing at the Philae temples, staff work and lounging by the pool, Kissinger med Sadat yesterday night for more talks before flying back to Israel Friday bearing the Egyptian leader's latest position on a troop disengagement accord.

Walking around the Philae temples yesterday morning, tieless and wearing a blue shirt, Kissinger told reporters: "We are going ahead slowly as expected." Asked if there were progress, he said: "Definitely."

A key disagreement still appeared to be over the political guarantees for an end to the state of war. Egypt has said it will not go along with a nonbelligerency clause, but Israel has asked for it as a price for withdrawing from the Abu Rodeis oil fields and the Sinai mountain passes of Gidi and Mitla where the present Israeli defense line is based.

Israel's national radio said Israeli forces along the Egyptian and Syrian frontlines had taken precautionary measures following movements by both Arab armies. Military sources said the Israeli forces were "carefully watching its frontiers, and the radio warned that war may erupt if Kissinger's peace mission fails.

Arsenals susceptible

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A research center said yesterday the United States has an arsenal of nearly 30,000 nuclear weapons which invite an enemy first strike, are susceptible to premature firing and theft by terrorist.

The Center for Defense Information, a private organization headed by retired Rear Adm. Gene R. LaRocque, said the force is too large and dangerous and should be reduced.

It said that nearly 10,000 nuclear weapons are stored in the United States with the rest scattered throughout Europe and Asia and on ships and submarines at sea.

Tax relief voted on

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee voted tentatively yesterday to forgive up to $2,000 in income taxes for those who buy homes between April and December, and to weigh 1975 tax cuts more in favor of families with children.

However, the committee turned back an initial attempt to increase the size of 1974 rebates for upper income levels over those contained in a House-passed tax-cut bill.

Business policy net

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer forces yesterday accused the administration of fostering a climate in which big business is seizing on the recession to scrap or delay health and safety regulations written in the law.

Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal, D-N.Y., said managerial mistakes, not federal regulations, are the real reason so many industries want rollbacks in rules which they say would drive up prices.

Welfare bill signed

BOSTON (AP) — Legislation authorizing the hiring of 200 additional social workers for the state Welfare Department was signed yesterday by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, 26 hours before a federal court's deadline.

The hiring was ordered by U.S. District Court Judge Frank H. Freedman, who threatened to cut off Massachusetts' $580 million a year in annual federal welfare aid if the state did not act.

Charges of marijuana hazards attacked byConsumersUnion

BOSTON (UPI) — Marijuana may not be the great threat to health and society that many studies have indicated, according to Consumer Report magazine.

"The time has come to take a fresh look at the alleged dangers of marijuana," the Consumers Union publication said in its March issue.

The magazine said a "horrifying collection of marijuana hazards" — including brain damage, lowered resistance to disease, loss of motivation, birth defects, lung [illegible]

[illegible]

"Although the Jamaica report was completed nearly three years ago, it has still not been published in the United States. Indeed, CU was unable to obtain a copy from the government agencies concerned," the magazine said. An English edition was published in February by a Dutch firm.

CU said to qualify as a heavy smoker in the Jamaica study, one had to smoke at least eight marijuana cigarettes a day, and the subjects studied had smoked an average of 17.5 years. In the U.S., a heavy smoker is considered to be one who smokes more than seven a week.

The study concluded: "The data clearly indicate that the long-term marijuana use by these men did not produce demonstrable intellectual or ability deficits. There is no evidence in the results to suggest brain damage."

A spokesman for the National Institute on Drug Abuse said the Jamaica study was not considered definitive because the group studied was not big enough from which to draw any scientific conclusions.

The Jamaica study compared 30 men who smoked marijuana heavily against 30 non-smokers. Comparably, the study which linked brain damage to marijuana use and which received wide publicity and acceptance involved only 10 men. CU said the results of that study are highly questionable because of the 10 cases studied, all had used LSD as well as marijuana, eight of the 10 had used amphetamines, four had significant head injuries, and a number had used sedatives, barbiturates, heroin or morphine.

On the basis of these facts, CU quoted one authority, "speculative connection between cannabis use and brain damage is highly suspect."

"It is not a situation to be lightly treated and dismissed which is in a sense what I think the CU paper does," Pollin said.

Attica news summary

The Attica prosecutors, after seven weeks of watching their case fall apart, announced on February 27 that they are "revising their list of witnesses against the Attica Brothers charged with the kidnap and murder of inmates Hess and Schwartz during the Attica uprising.

The prosecution is still presenting its witnesses in a pre-trial "Wade" hearing designed to test the legality of the identifications made of the defendants by State witnesses.

The prosecution is attempting to prove that their witnesses' identifications of the defendants were not coerced or threatened or otherwise illegally gotten through promises of parole or immunity from prosecution.

However, through intense cross-examination, the defense has brought out the torture and harassment they were subjected to prior to identifying the defendants. [illegible]

One witness after another has repeated accounts of beatings, verbal abuse and death threats they received from Attica prison guards after the putdown of the rebellion. They described how the prisoners were stripped in a yard and forced to crawl in mud. Guards and state troopers formed a "gauntlet" through which the prisoners were forced to run while clubs and guns struck their naked bodies. They were locked three men in a cell built for one for several days. Fed infrequently, one witness said he was given a bowl of food only after guards had put "piss and spit" in it. In tears, witness John Flowers described how a guard had [illegible]

Witness [illegible] Newport was offered a transfer to a medium security prison, instead of staying at Auburn, a maximum-security penitentiary, in exchange for his testimony.

Dallas Simon, another State witness, asserted that he had told the investigators that Tommy Hicks, an inmate killed during the retaking of the prison, had had a knife in his hand and was covered with blood when he admitted to other prisoners his participation in the deaths. Statements made by other witnesses also indicated that [illegible]

Almost [illegible] witnesses have appeared in court during the first seven weeks of the hearing. Once on the stand, many are unwilling or unable to continue bolstering the State's frame-up of the defendants. The State, in need of new testimony to prop up its case, presented the defense with a list of ten new witnesses they plan to bring to the hearing. One of the names was that of Richard Fisher, who calls himself Baba. Up until recently, when his charges were dropped "in the interests of justice," Fisher was himself an "Attica Brother" indicted for the kidnap of a guard.

Across the hall from this hearing, trial has begun for two Attica Brothers charged with the death of a correctional officer during the Attica rebellion. [illegible] are hearing the prosecution's case in the first major Attica case to reach trial.

In a related matter, concerning the prosecution of inmates for the crimes of State employees, Martin Sostre was tried before a Plattsburgh, N.Y., jury which convicted him on charges of assaulting prison guards who beat him while administering a rectal search.

Watchful eyes over Ethiopia

The recent session of the totally formed "socialist government" in Ethiopia (which in reality is a logical extension of western neo-colonialist powers), has requested more emergency aid from the colorful Red, White and Blue (U.S.A.).

This request for military support is intended to be used in an effort to silence the people's liberation struggle in Eritrea, a country connected to Ethiopia.

Informed sources indicate that only a few privately owned industries have been nationalized under Ethiopia's new government. The poor have not yet been given land for production; while still, thousands of deaths caused by famine remain common.

Instead of tractors and farming equipment, the new "socialist government" want missiles, tanks and highly sophisticated weapons.

Many questions still remain unanswered to date. Although the destruction of houses, bombing of villages and mass killings have taken the priority over human rights and freedom to self-determination.

Spectrum

Losing an image?

By CHIP LALONDE

Autopsy Subject: Spectrum

Victim is believed to have suffered a long and painful death which began two years ago. Victim was found with hands tied behind back. Foul play suspected. Cause of death: asphyxiation due to lack of funds. Claw marks found on the cadaver have been positively identified as belonging to those of the wild beast generically referred to as Redneckus Budget Committeeus.

We at Spectrum feel that the Senate Budgets Committee has done its fellow students a disservice. Spectrum is the only campus fine arts magazine publishing undergraduate fiction, non-fiction, poetry, art, photography, etc. We are the sole outlet of its type on campus that is open to all forms of creative expression by all UMass students. The only other undergraduate magazine on campus is Drum, which is the Black literary magazine, addressing itself to understandably important Third World concerns. Spectrum too, however, addresses itself to important concerns and represents a signigicant constituency. Here is a comparison of how your money was spent:

	1970-71	1971-72	1972-73	1973-74	1974-75
DRUM	$18,717	$18,967	$33,095	$32,995	$31,345
SPECTRUM	$24,615	$26,522	$26,175	$14,075	$13,167

Why the gross disparity? One need not question the importance of Drum. The point is: Why has Spectrum become so much less important in the eyes of the Senate? We are glad to have $15,000 rather than nothing; we put what we receive to the best and most economical advantage. What we protest is ignorance as to what our task requires, and indifference to principles of quality.

This year Spectrum was forced to reject 94 per cent of all the material that was submitted to us. This does not count the color artwork and photography which we have had to reject immediately because we could not afford quality four-color printing within our present restrictive budget. The reason for these rejections is that Spectrum can only afford to come out once a year and can only afford to print a strictly limited amount of pages.

Tuesday night the Budgets Committee gave "thumbs down" to Spectrum's request for funding of two issues, despite the fact that the students of this University are producing much more than enough quality material to fill them.

I invite you, now, to sample a taste of the incredible, inedible world of "logic" inhabited by those strange creatures of the Budgets Committee: Said one Senator - Since Spectrum only uses 6 per cent of the material it receives, then two issues would mean that 12 per cent of the material would be used. Since Spectrum is only using such a small percentage of its submitted material, what difference does a few per cent make? Conclusion: Give Spectrum a slight increase to permit them to do one issue, and too bad for the 94 per cent. Chew on that piece of swiss-cheese logic, and see if you can swallow it.

I am appalled by the inability of my fellow students on the Budget Committee to step back long enough from the printed dollar-signs floating in front of them to see what is really valuable and important. I find it incredible that in a college of Arts and Sciences the value of artistic expression is so little understood by its elected leaders. How much sense does it make when talent and ideas are suppressed instead of encouraged?

In the interest of fairness to all students on this campus, Spectrum will appeal to the Executive Committee on Monday. At this time we would also like to appeal to all undergraduates who are unhappy with the way the Senate is spending your money. The Spectrum staff is in the process of starting a petition and is also in the process of doing the layout for the upcoming issue [due out in April]. We need all the help we can muster with this petition. Concerned individuals should call the Spectrum office at 545-2023, or stop by. Friday evening is all right. Saturday afternoon is a good time. Monday is crucial.

Let's prove that Corso was not right. And don't miss WMUA 11 a.m. Saturday morning!

From our perspective

Athletic prioritie$; change due

Athletics and education have been tied together ever since the Golden Age of Greece when the idea of education was to develop both the mind and the body of a student. Today athletics and education are still very closely linked together, but the reason for this link has been drastically changed and distorted. The change is in the separation of the student and the athlete; UMass has many of each but few of both. The distortion comes from the fact that the link has become one of business and not education. The business of athletics has nothing to do with education. I suggest that we try to reunite the student and the athlete.

UMass does have an extensive intramural program, but the majority of the money that is used for athletics at UMass is used to support twenty-two varsity and JV teams consisting of 826 athletes. This money amounts to over $200,000 per year and it comes directly from the pockets of students by way of their Athletic Fee. Women get 9 per cent, but most important, three teams (men's basketball, football, and hockey) get 59 per cent of the total money available for direct team funding. This dramatic unequal distribution of wealth may have been all right with some people in the past, but fortunately we are all being called to question it in view of the new federal anti-discrimination regulations and our current economic crisis. Money is tight or almost nonexistent. We can not afford to continue to support a top-heavy, expensive men's elitist sports program if we hope to also develop and support a women's program. We can not afford to continue climbing up the ladder together keeping the same distance between. We have been forced to get on to a seesaw.

Over the past three years everyone has faced the reality of the situation except the Big Three. Funding for women's sports has been meagerly raised while some men's programs have been slightly cut. The Big Three, on the other hand, continue to get an increasing proportion of the wealth.

The Athletic Council proposes to handle this squeeze by having its cake and eating it too. They want to promote women's sports, but they don't want to cut back any more on the men's programs, especially the Big Three. Keep in mind that the football budget alone is four times that of the total women's sports budget. The Council proposes to have the state assume the cost of the stadium thereby freeing up $100,000 a year of student money that currently pays for the stadium. In addition, they plan to ask the state for new salaried coaching positions. We all know that in view of the current recession this plan is simply wishful thinking.

Let us put the dreams aside and come back to reality - there is no more money. Yes, we could pour all of our money into football or basketball and fo "Big Time" in an attempt to generate more money, but in the same light we could go out and try to buy Secretariat and see if he could support UMass athletics through the profits we could make off him. Buying Secretariat or buying a Big Time football or basketball team has nothing to do with education. It is time to go back to the drawing board. It is time for new creative and innovative ideas. It is time for changes that will be painful and difficult to make, but if we can reunite the student and the athlete it will be worth it.

Issues and (non) action

"Hey, let's hit the Student Senate meeting," I said to Norm de Plume in a weaker moment.

"Sure, that should be a circus, a little entertainment to say the least," he replied.

Sure enough, the sign next to the escalator told the story. "Laurel and Hardy downstairs," with an arrow pointing to the escalator.

After we had arrived and kibbitzed a bit, Norm turned to me, astonished. "Jesus, I've written columns about these clowns for years, and I had never even gone to a meeting. My suspicions have been confirmed!" He waved his hand at the panorama of people sleeping, people talking, people doing crossword puzzles, people trying to listen.

"It restores my faith in the political process," he said, as we left for the Drake.

An interesting thing, the Student Senate. Every year when elections roll around, we sign the nomination papers of anyone who wants our signatures. That is the last we see of them unless we venture into the depths of the Campus Center on Wednesday nights.

There's always an ad in the Collegian about those Wednesday night meetings, but somehow, "Behind the Green Door" gets a higher attendance in one showing than the Senate gets in six months. Perhaps the SGA should run a picture of Rick Savini in the nude...

Actually, the non-involvement and resignation of students is a characteristic of society in general.

We are our parents' children, thus all the rhetoric about changing the world remains embedded on old albums to be listened to in the late nightmorning when the pot smoke has settled and everyone has gone home. Our parents, for the most part, have given up on the voting process, most of us have not even tried it.

If the Student Senate is a farce, who is making it so? Is it the inherent domination of Dr. Gage? Is it the "elitism" of the Student Senators? Or is it our own elitism regarding the entire process of Student Governments?

The sixties were filled with "student revolt," yes, even here at UMass there was some action taking place. And at that time the issue was a country thousands of miles away. The seventies have given us not only the carry over of the Vietnam conflict, but threats as to our own survival. Yet where are the voices raised in anger? It may seem ludicrous, but the Student Government can also be a vehicle of student revolt. We now hold more power than ever, but we refuse to use it.

Wednesday night, the Student Senate voted to reconstruct the Student Organizing Council, which is an advisory board to the Student Organizing Project. The Project was set up a year and a half ago, funded $40,000 by the Student Senate. Its purpose is to organize a "Union" for students, giving them collective bargaining rights when dealing with the administration. This in essence means no more of "Calling Dr. Bromery, Dr. Gage, Dr. Bromery" when we have demands to be made. The Organizing Project has launched the lawsuit against the University on the Dorm Residency rule. You may have seen the effects of its efforts without realizing it. The stereo co-op, voter registration drives, CC Student Workers' Union, and last semester's University Town Meeting are results of the SOP's work.

The SOP has been a valuable group on campus, yet for various reasons had not been able to unite students broadly on University issues. Public relations was not its top priority. There seemed to be an elitism of sorts, without too much real concern about uniting students, even though that was the purpose at the outset. The Project, though set up for community purposes, was not representative of the UMass community, and actually caused polarization within Student Government, its fiscal benefactor. But the SOP is destined to become more broadly based.

In the bill passed Wednesday night, the Student Organizing Council was brought into the Senate as a standing committee. Each area has representation in the committee. Groups like the Collegian and WMUA also have one voting member each. In addition, there are five voting members at large, not necessarily voting members (You maybe?). The move has the potential for throwing the SOP into bureaucratic limbo, but it also presents the potential for giving the Project more power than ever, in conjunction with the Student Senate. I sincerely hope it is the latter. A lot of different people have been working intensely toward the same end, and the coordination of activities is a much needed action. But where the Project will go depends on Student (yes, your) input.

The tactics of the sixties hold no place in the seventies. We have become victims of the Watergate syndrome. If the syndrome overtakes us and prevents action on our problems, the spirit of Watergate will have succeeded in subverting our ideals. There is a defense. Speak out, to the Student Senate, to the UMass Board of Trustees, to Governor Dukakis, to your State Representative. As Norm so aptly put it, "There's nothing to lose but the blues!"

Collegian 'irresponsible'

To the Editor:

I must, in good conscience, express my overwhelming rage at your ultimate show of irresponsibility, evidenced by yesterday's 10x15 inch spread of tit, used to entice UMass students to a film presentation. I am aware that no one in the Collegian office gives a damn whether or not I, or a multitude of students, were offended by the advertisement. I was reminded of this obtrusive state of affairs when told by your advertising manager that "for every woman who felt offended by the ad, there were hoards of men who got off on it." I refuse to argue that one; my energy is not expendable.

However, I believe the time has come for the Collegian to be called to account for its school-boy sensationalism that hides behind the facade of "professional journalism." There is a serious question involved in this issue: what gives the Collegian the right to use student funds to perpetrate blatantly sexist and degenerative attitudes that in turn reflect upon the over-all image of consciousness on this campus? I accuse the Collegian of contriving excuses ["this is a free press"] as a means of avoiding responsibility to the student body and, in effect, insulting us all.

If Marilyn Chambers is the Collegian's idea of the all-American girl, well, Steve Tripoli who has confused Mother's Day with International Women's Day, is not the only one with his head stuck up his ass. Round 3, or is it 4, 5, 6, ????

The Army's secret

To the Editor:

The following is a response to the letter written by the Veterans' Coalition printed March 12. After much soul searching and endless hours of debate with myself, I came to a painful decision to let the truth out. I am a Vietnam era veteran drafted by our beloved ex-President Lyndon Baines Johnson. My military experience was the ultimate reward for me and I must convince people that they can reap the blessings of the military experience. Why do most veterans tell you that the army sucks or words to that effect? Well, I shall tell you. The army has a serious overabundance of people. People just don't want to get out. They want the happiness they enjoyed in the service to last forever. Of course, because of this the army cannot afford to pay all these people. To solve this, they forced people to sign a pledge. In exchange for a chance to re-enlist after five years in civilian life the person must tell everybody he meets how bad the army is. Thus, people would be discouraged to join. After five years, if the person kept his part of the bargain, the army would let you rejoin. Well, I say "the hell with it." Let the people know the truth. If you want fun, travel, and adventure, join now.

Going up in smoke

To the Editor:

Smokers, you stink!

Not smokers in general, but the people who feel that they have the right to blow smoke around lecture hall of 200 people, or those who smoke in the No Smoking area of the Dining Commons. Or even a better example is a person filling a cramped English class with the putrid odor of cigarettes.

These are people who make me think, where's the justice in it all? There I am, unwillingly taking part in another person's indulgence, and what can I do without making myself look like a total fool? Nothing, that's what. All I want is to breathe. Is that asking too much? I'd like to know where you people get the authority to make me breathe your smoke while I'm trying to think. Also it's a known fact that if I breathe your smoke, then I have a good chance of getting cancer along with you. I'd rather make that decision myself.

So next time you're in a confined area and no one else is smoking, ask yourself why they're not smoking before you light it up.

Women on welfare

By KAREN BRUNO-MANGAN

The AFDC program helps perpetuate the myth that women need a man to support them. Indeed, most women grow up believing that they will marry and have a man to support them. However, when that man leaves, they are left for the most part without marketable skills or work experience. If they have children they are saddled with the additional burden of trying to find adequate day-care facilities.

Traditionally, poor women have always worked. They are burdened with poverty not only because of economic factors, but because of repressive social morals, and the myth that women need a man to be dependant upon. In society which extols the virtues of motherhood, the hard fact is that poor women are forced to leave their homes for low paying, deadend jobs.

Because of the restricted work available to them, many of these women are forced to turn to the state for help. When a woman transfers her dependency from a man to the State, she faces a great dichotomy. There are those who tell her that "deserving" people are working had to become independent of assistance. However, when she looks to the outside world, she sees how severely restricted she is because of her lack of educational and job skills, as well as the grossly inadequate day-care facilities available in this country. Thus, many women are forced upon the welfare roles.

Poor women also have less access to birth control than do the affluent. Over fifty percent of the counties in the United States offer no family planning services. With the rise of the single parent family, and desertion being the poor man's divorce, the largest growing categoy in the AFDC roles is "out of wedlock births."

The illegitimate behavior of the affluent is easily covered up by means of abortion and easily obtainable contraceptives. The poor, however, are publicly criticized for the same behavior. Society feels that there should be two moral standards - one for welfare recipients and one for non-recipients. They contend that welfare mothers deliberately have more children in order to get bigger welfare checks, when in act as of 1970, only fourteen states paid 100 per cent of a family's predetermined need, and six states paid less than 50 per cent of a family's predetermined need.

Women are even discriminated against by those government programs which were designed to help them get off the welfare roles. The Work Incentive Program (WIN) requires all adults on AFDC to accept jobs or training unless incapacitated or restricted by day-care responsibilities. 95 per cent of the adults on AFDC are women. 37 per cent of the people participating in the WIN program are men. The Department of Labor has set a list of regulations which gives first priority to: unemployed fathers.

When they get into government training programs, women are trained as clerks and typists, while the men are taught the higher paying crafts and skills.

AFDC is a target for public harrassment on sex, morality, child neglect, and the so called welfare generations. The social attitude towards AFDC is that most recipients should not be receiving aid. They feel that a person's need for aid to their own fault - a personal disgrace. The welfare recipient is a non-person. He-she has a degraded social identity. The institution itself reflects its role in society. Humanity and self respect have been minimized. Society wants to make very sure that only those who are "clearly" eligible receive aid. This results in all kinds of controls and the violation of many people's rights.

In recent years, the Supreme Court has invalidated some of the more discriminatory policies of the welfare agencies. In 1968 the court ruled that the "man in the house" rule was unconstitutional. Previously, the welfare department had stipulated that any man living in an AFDC home was responsible for the support of the children in that home. While the Court was handing down these decisions, many state legislators were busy trying to sterilize mothers of illigitimate children who were "morally unfit". North Carolina, Tennessee, and California are among those states that had such proposals.

We live in a society where people, who are in many cases receiving benefits which fall below the poverty level, are constantly criticized by those who are receiving more government subsidy than any welfare recipient receives in a lifetime. About five million dollars a year goes to farmers for price supports and soil banks. The government actually pays farmers to take their land out of production. If one totals up all the federal funds distributed through social security, welfare, unemployment, workman's compensation, r.r. retirement, etc., one finds that people earning below $5,000 get $296.00 per person (monthly) and those earning $25,000-$40,000 receive $1,146.00 a month. It seems obvious who is receiving more "government handouts".

AFDC is a constant reminder that something is wrong. Unfortunately, society refuses to see the faults where they lie; within the system itself. Until those realizations are made, the victim will continually be blamed.

Tow thyself

To the Editor:

I would like to address this letter to Amherst Towing. So, dear Amherst Towing: what the fuck is going on? I'm one of thousands on this campus who are completely disgusted with you leeches sucking up what little money we students have with your asinine towing charges.

Following is another installment in the ever continuing saga of "How to blow $28 in 5 minutes, when you only have $14 to begin with." A friend of mine from Taunton parked his car for five minutes in Lot 62 [Hills South], Wednesday, around the noon hour. He came back and the car was gone. A parking attendant showed him the receipt which documented that the car had been towed at 12:04. He had parked the car at 11:59. The parking attendant then pointed out a towing notice, measuring 8"x10", attached to the side of the attendant booth — this is like positioning a stop sign sideways; it's legally there, but who can relate to it?

I would like to know how a car can be ticketed [$10] by the University, reported to Amherst Towing [in North Amherst — at least 5 minutes away], and towed [for a fee] — in under five minutes. The figures just do not compute. Five minutes does not allow enough time for the car to be "spotted" and have someone call in a complaint. My conclusion is that a representative from Amherst Towing must have been "browsing" around, looking for a quick way to cop some extra bucks for his establishment.

Since you people [A.T.] do not have a parking sticker for any lot at UMass, you have no right to be present in any parking lot on campus until summoned by a campus official. You might try to weasel your way out by saying that as long as you keep the motor running or the truck in motion, that you're not violating any rules. I say you have no right being on campus patrolling around, unless you are answering a specific call. Your trucks should be the ones that get towed. So, AMHERST TOWING, here's an old cliche with a new twist, but with a familiar meaning — GO TOW YOURSELF! [and I don't mean "tow"].

Senior lecturer at Hebrew University to speak tonight

On Friday, March 14, Dr. Arthur Aryeh Goren, Senior Lecturer in American History at the Hebrew University, will speak on The Search for Community, following Shabbat services which start at 7:00 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

Goren was born in Chelsea Mass., and he lived in Washington D.C. and in New York City before moving to Israel. In 1966 he received his Ph.D. from Columbia University, specializing in American social and immigrant history. His study, New York Jews and the Quest for Community was published by Columbia in 1970 after winning the Bancroft Award. He is the editor of "New York City, 1870-1920" of the new Encyclopedia Judaica.

Goren will be eating dinner at the kosher dining hall in Hampden Commons before his talk. People are welcomed to join him for informal conservation. Call 52526 for details.

National Mime Co. acts at Smith

"Mime requires that you seek out the essence of just about everything."

The words of Kenyon Martin, founder and director of the National Mime Company which will perform at Smith College March 16, reveal his dedicated and emotional pursuit of this art form during the past fifteen years.

The Sunday performance, "Beyond Worlds and Unnatural Acts" will include a collection of classic mime pieces and a contemporary theater selection which explores the darker side of man's nature in a series of vignettes using words, music, mime and comedy blackouts.

Tickets for the 8:00 program, sponsored by the Department of Theatre and Speech Production, are available at the Smith Theatre Box Office between noon and 5 p.m. weekdays.

Film 'The Dybbuk' to be shown free

On Saturday night, March 15, the film The Dybbuk will be shown in Thompson 104 at 8:00 p.m. This is the original version of Anski's haunting drama of the supernatural as originally done by the Warsaw Art Players. The Dybbuk is the spirit of the dead lover that has entered a young woman's body and refuses to leave. This classical production of a drama of exorcism is being shown here free and is open to the public. It is being shown as part of the area wide Jewish Arts Festival.

Chilean group to perform

By Progressive News Service

Next Tuesday, March 18, this campus will have the privilege of hosting the first United States concert of the QUILAPAYUN, a group of Chilean folk singers who have been banned from their native homeland by the fascist military junta. Before the execution of Salvadore Allende, the folksingers performed in rallies to hundreds of thousands of Chilean citizens, rendering in music the social and political realities of Chilean life.

The QUILPAYUN music follows the indigenous Andean melodies and is played with Indian instruments; the "quena" (long bamboo flute), sampone, charango (a tiny high pitched guitar), maraccas and bongos.

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. A contribution of $2 is requested; the earnings will be proceeded to Chilean refugee and resistance groups. Tickets will be available this week at a table on the Campus Center Concourse every day, also at Cronopios Bookstore, in town, and at Uroboros at Hampshire College. This event is sponsored by the 5 College Chile Solidarity Committee.

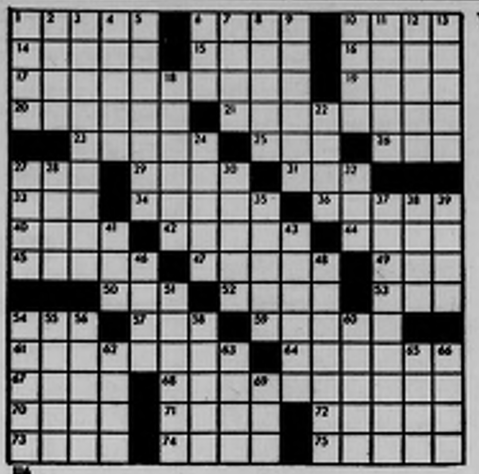
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved



Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

Friday, March 14 — Born today, you are a person of tremendous ease. Your ability to juggle a number of talents, a multiplicity of interests, and a great variety of activities in such a way that none encroaches upon the time or energy that must be given over to another — and vice versa — is not only exceptional, it is a guarantee of your success wherever your commitments may be. A highly optimistic individual, you need only take care that you don't lead others into believing that they can accomplish with their time what you can with yours.

You will never be without friends and companions, so long as and whenever you wish them. For other people are drawn to you as toward a magnet, finding in your well-balanced nature, your ready extension of good will, and your open, straightforward manner every indication of the intelligent, happy, well-oriented individual within. You have none of the little idiosyncrasies that put people off — and all of the traits that urge them in your direction.

Self-appointed guardian of good spirits, you try always to keep the mood of any gathering light. Even when the subject at hand is of an extremely serious nature — and it cannot avoid being so now and again — you manage to steer people toward a positive attitude about it rather than a fearful or tense one. Such an insistence upon the positive brings you daily the reward of others' confidence in you.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Saturday, March 15

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a high-risk day for the Pisces who insists upon getting into new developments on the home front. Try to stick to what you know.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Make sure that you make your decisions based on fact, not fancy. Members of the opposite sex may cause some concern in the forenoon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Let every minute take you closer to a goal on the home front. Otherwise, you will end the day feeling guilty for not having done your best.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Though there may be many incentives to leave what you are doing in favor of something else, you would be wise not to do so — at least for the present.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — When and if the winds of chance shift in your favor today, be quick to take advantage of them. Look for a break in recently formed clouds.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Exceptional gains for the Leo who plays it smart on the home front today. Don't even consider moving your operation to a new location.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — If you have limited talent along the lines called for at this time, expect only limited accomplishment. Be happy for another's safety.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — If you would gain the most from the least today, direct your energies toward attaining the desires of the young. There is much to question at evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — This is a day when you can increase your popularity rating many times over — simply by expressing yourself in a diplomatic, tactful way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Indulge your own personal interests this morning. You can do much to settle the dust of dissension which has recently arisen on the home scene.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — There is good fortune for you in the near future if you are wise enough to take advantage of this day's special — and unexpected — event.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Consider a past experience and you will gain insight into a new personal relationship. Build new knowledge on the old, new friends on those of long standing.

Black Theatre presents 'God's Trombones'

"God's Trombones", James Weldon Johnson's classic collection of Negro folk sermons, will be presented in a dramatic musical adaptation at UMass March 14, 15, and 16.

A production of the Black Repertory Theatre, under the direction of Professor Esther Terry, "God's Trombones" will feature the Voices of New Africa, under the musical direction of Professor Horace Boyer, performing traditional as well as original music, arranged for this production by Professor Max Roach of the Department of Music.

Regarded as classic examples of the oral poetic traditions of the Black church, the seven sermons will be performed by actors from the repertory company. The sermons will be integrated into a musical program developed by Profs Roach and Boyer, and performed by the choir.

Performances will be at 8 p.m. at Bowker Auditorium, except for the Sunday performance, which will be matinee beginning at 3 p.m. Tickets will be $1.50 for UMass students and $2.00 for the general public. Tickets may be purchased beginning Wednesday, at the Bowker box office, and before the presentation. For further information, call 545-2751.

Melon Dash; swimwomen standout

By LAURIE WHITING

"I love the feeling of killing myself in a race, the feeling of swimming to total exhaustion — and knowing I did my best time." That's Melon Dash's philosophy; the philosophy that keeps her swimming and winning.

Melon Dash, one of the best women athletes on campus, has proved herself invaluable as a three-year member of the UMass women's swim team. It's routine for Melon to capture first places in dual meets and you can count on a good showing in championship meets as well. Less than two weeks ago, Melon wowed the crowd at Easterns by winning a stand-up-finish 100-yard butterfly in 1:00.7.

"Melon came to UMass with good swimming technique and ability," says Coach Pat Griffin. "She's motivated, and she works hard. She's a challenge for me. She knows swimming, and she challenges me to do the best coaching job I can."

Melon took swim lessons when she was very young, and started swimming competitively in country club races at age eight. In her first AAU meet (a District championship) at age 10, Melon placed third and fifth. She joined the Colonie Aquatic Club afterwards, and placed with the top finishers her first years on the team. By the time she was 12, she was getting stronger, improving her times, and she was winning.

Melon continued to win and people began to notice. "And you know how some people are — you win one race, and they ask you if you're going to be in the Olympics," laughs Melon. "Then my mother told me my coach thought I might be Olympic material, and childhood fantasies started dancing in my head."

Melon Dash

It wasn't until after Melon won a 10th in the 100-meter breaststroke in the AAU National Junior Olympics in San Diego, California, that these fantasies began to mean something. Through the Junior Olympics, she was invited to the Meet of Champions in Bartlesville, Oklahoma. It was an Invitational for the J.O. participants (Melon placed 4th in the 100-meter breaststroke) and was instrumental in getting her into some real "world class" swimming.

Through the meet, Melon made connections with Don Gambril, coach of the Phillips 66 team at Long Beach, California. He coached a quality team and invited Melon to train with them for the summer.

"I swam four hours a day and absolutely hated it," admits Melon. "I was the worst swimmer in the pool and all I remember is being tired and hurting. When I was out there, all I wanted was to come home."

At Long Beach, Melon worked weights for an hour a day, and swam four — usually a total of 12,000-14,000 meters a day.

"Swimming that much took too much time that I was not willing to give. There were too many other things I wanted to do," says Melon. "I learned two important things from swimming that summer, though," Melon reflects. "One was that I didn't want to swim that way. I love to travel and do other things that require time; time that I wouldn't have if I swam four hours a day. Secondly, I really learned about my body. I learned that it could endure much more than I expected. I got to know my strengths and weaknesses."

Melon is presently a BDIC major in physiology of exercise and nutrition. Ultimately, she'd like to pursue research in nutrition to see how diets affect physical performance in competition.

"I love my major; there's nothing I'd rather do," says Melon. "I'd like to get into the health field and sometime try coaching swimming in another country, or here in the U.S."

Being in Arizona for the National's this week, Melon's latest hopes are to do her best time for the 100 fly and achieve an All-American standing.

Competition in Springfield

Men gymnasts fourth in EIGL's

Peter Lusk performs on the still rings in an earlier meet this season. Lusk scored the ninth highest ring total in the compulsories last night. But his 8.4 was good enough to lead all Division I competitors.

The UMass men gymnasts are in a disappointing fourth place with 167.9 points after the compulsory routines held last night on the first day of the three day Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships at Springfield College.

The championships continue tonight with the optional routines and finish tomorrow with the individual championships.

Southern Connecticut is way out in front after the first night's events with 198.05 points. Temple, the school that UMass has to beat in order to qualify for the nationals (if the Minutemen score 400 points in doing so), is in second with 174.45 points. Springfield scored the third highest total with 172.9 points.

In order to score the necessary 400 points to qualify for the nationals, UMass would have the total 232.1 points out of possible 240 in the optionals tonight. The highest the Minutemen have totaled this season was 207.4.

Coach Tom Dunn said before the meet that the team standings would pretty much be decided after the compusory routines. UMass would have to outscore Temple by 6½ points tonight to finish as the top Division I school but even then there is no chance of qualifying for the nationals.

"Except for high bar and side horse," Dunn said, "we did just about what I expected. The other teams were just better than I thought they'd be."

Springfield had the advantage of competing in their home gym but Dunn said that that wasn't the reason they scored so well. "They just came up with some really good routines," he explained.

The high bar had to be the weakest event for UMass, as only Henning Geist had a strong routine. Geist's 7.35 was the ninth highest score of the meet in that event but it was the third best Division I average. The top six Division I individuals, combining both compulsory and optional totals, go to the finals tomorrow night. The top three scorers tomorrow qualify for the nationals.

Side horse had to be the biggest disappointment of the meet for the Minutemen. Steve Marks, whom Dunn tabbed as second best in the field, finished tied for eleventh and eighth among the Division I competitors.

The next best score for UMass on pommel horse was Roy Johnson's 6.95, good enough for only 18th place.

There were some good performances for UMass, as Peter Lusk leads the Division I competitors on rings with an 8.4. Bill Brouillet is the third highest Division I floor performer with a 7.45, the second place p-bar man in the division with an 8.35, and the sixth best Division I vaulter, as he totaled a 7.9.

Steve Marks had the second best compulsory vault, scoring an 8.25. Roy Johnson is on the verge of qualifying for the finals, as he is in sixth place in the floor exercise.

In the all-arounds, Tom Kovic of Temple leads the Division I competitors with a 44.3 total.

Bosox, 9-2 top Bucs

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) — Danny Cater and Juan Beniquez homered in a 14-hit attack and the Boston Red Sox snapped a three-game losing streak Thursday with a 9-2 exhibition victory over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Cater, a 35-year-old veteran fighting for a job, also had a pair of singles to go with his first spring homer. Beniquez had a single and stolen base wasted in the third, drove in a run in the fourth and then blasted a two-run homer over the left field fence in the sixth.

Reggie Cleveland became the first Boston pitcher to go five innings, allowing just one run, a solo homer by Al Oliver in the fourth. Rookie Rick Kreuger surrendered four hits and one run in the final four innings.

The Red Sox rapped Pittsburgh starter Jerry Reuss for [illegible] and four runs in the first five innings. Wayne Simpson gave up five runs on four hits, two hit batsmen and a walk in two innings.

Women in Arizona

By LAURIE WHITING

Arizona is one of the driest states in the country, but not for qualifiers Reenie Groden, Melon Dash, Penny Noyes, and Cindy Whiting, who are spending four days pool-side at the University of Arizona in Tempe awaiting National competition.

The meet started yesterday at the outdoor University pool. Only swimmers who made the designated cut-off times are competing. As the quality of competition improves, the cut-off times are faster; making the Nationals a meet where only the best compete.

UMass Eastern champion, Melon dash, has high hopes for her specialty, the 100 fly. Melon would like to make All-American (place in the top 16) and is aiming for the minute mark in that event. She has also qualified for the 200 I.M. and the 100 free and will be in the free relays.

Penny Noyes, another UMass hopeful, will be following up solid Eastern performances in the backstrokes, the 50, the 100 free, and the 200 and 400 free relays. Goal times for Penny are: 50 back 29.1, 100 back 1:02.5, 50 free 26.8, and 100 free - 54.5.

The two other members of the free relays are Cindy Whiting and Reenie Groden. The two sophomores are specialists in the freestyle sprints and are a valuable part of the team effort. Reenie's split for the 200 relay is 25 plus [illegible] and for the 400 relay, a 57 plus [illegible]. Cindy's splits are 27 plus and 58 plus.

Erving, Kenon spark Net's win over Spurs

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — Larry Kenon and Julius Erving took turns blitzing San Antonio for a combined [illegible] points Thursday night and the New York Nets roared to a [illegible] victory over the Spurs.

New York took what proved to be an insurmountable lead with [illegible] left in the first period on a 20-foot jumper by Brian Taylor. The Spurs put on a rally that brought them to within two points in the final period, but it fizzled under a [illegible] point fourth quarter onslaught by Erving.

Kenon wound up with [illegible] points and Erving had [illegible]. Taylor added [illegible], Al Skinner had [illegible] and Billy Paultz collected [illegible] as the defending ABA champions ran their record to [illegible].

Swen Nater sparked the Spurs attack with [illegible] points and [illegible] rebounds. Donnie Freeman added [illegible] points, James Silas [illegible] and Rich Jones and George Gervin scored 14 each as the Spurs fell to [illegible].

Fenton pinned early

Dennis Fenton did not fare too well in his National wrestling competition at Princeton, New Jersey yesterday.

Fenton was pinned at 4:30 of the second period in his first match by a combatant from Arizona State.

Fenton had taken down his competitor in the first period, but then he was rode and pinned in the second.

Mike Pyatt poises to shoot a shot in a road game against Boston University earlier this year. John Murphy moves in for the rebound.

Today, the Collegian presents a special NIT preview edition. It can be found in the centerfold of today's paper, and can be removed and carried with you to New York this weekend.

In this special, you can find out how UMass shapes up in their opening round game, player rosters for both clubs, how the Minutemen feel about playing in their third straight NIT, a short history of UMass participation in the tournament and more.

So pull it out, sit in your favorite easy chair, put your feet up, and enjoy.

Or better still, when we see you in New York, we want to see you carry your Collegian.

NIT '75

Minutemen face Jaspers

John Murphy drives for yet another of his almost unstoppable hoops. The 6'8 senior will be a key performer for the Minutemen.

Staff Photo by [illegible]

by Steve DeCosta

The NIT gets underway tomorrow afternoon at 1:00 when UMass and Manhattan tap-off at Madison Square Garden.

The match-up pits two teams rich in NIT tradition. This will be the third straight appearance and fifth in six years for the Minutemen, and also the third straight for the Jaspers.

UMass wound up its season with an 18-8 record and will be out to prove that its exclusion from the ECAC New England playoffs was a mistake. The Jaspers finished their injury-riddled season at 13-11, including a 10-4 mark down the stretch.

According to UMass coach Jack Leaman, Manhattan is a tough draw, despite its relatively poor record. Holy Cross coach George Blaney, whose Crusaders beat the Jaspers by two in the first annual Madison Square Garden Classic Tournament, calls them "the best 13-11 club in the United States."

The Jaspers went through most of the year without the services of two starters, Bill Campion and Tom Lockhart.

Campion, the nation's fourth leading rebounder last season, was plagued by a recurring back injury while Lockhart suffered a broken leg early in the year. Both are ready to play in tomorrow's opener.

"He (Manhattan coach Jack Powers) said he's got everybody back and they're healthy so they're gonna be tough."

"Then," Leaman continued, "the guy in the New York Post said they didn't belong in the tournament so that made them mad. He (Powers) said they might win the whole thing because of that."

Campion will be the key if the Jaspers hope to advance any further than the first round. When the 6'10" junior did play this season, he averaged 15 points and 12 rebounds per game.

The top Jasper scorer is George Bucci, who hits for 20 per contest. The pesky swingman is a pinpoint shooter and jumps higher than his 6'2" stature would indicate.

Charlie Mahoney is the man that runs the club. Not much of a scoring threat, the 5'11" guard penetrates well and unually winds up with a ton of assists.

Lockhart and Mike Young, both 6'6", are probable starters up front.

UMass assistant coach Ray Wilson, whose job it was to scout the Jaspers said "they like to run a little but they're good and physical. They'll cause problems."

But then, the Minutemen aren't exactly pussycats either. With Jim Town and John Murphy up front, the Minutemen averaged eight more rebounds per game than their opponents.

Murphy would up the regular season with 17.8 average and Town finished at 12.2. They were the only Minutemen to break into double figures.

Bill Endicott and Jim Burke have both played well lately and should start in the backcourt. Endicott will draw the thankless job of guarding Bucci, while Burke should be assigned to shadow Mahoney.

The second game of the afternoon doubleheader pits another New England team, Providence, against tournament favorite Clemson.

The Friars should have their work cut out for them. The Tigers are ranked 14th in the nation in the latest AP poll and boast one of the best big men in the tourney in 7'1" Wayne 'Tree' Rollins.

The winner of the UMass-Manhattan game will move into the tournament's quarter-final round against the St. John's-Lafayette winner. The Providence-Clemson victor will face the winner of the Southern Illinois-Pittsburgh match-up.

"I feel that any team in our bracket can get to the semi-finals," Leaman said.

Tradition

Tradition is the cornerstone of the NIT.

It's St. John's returning for its [illegible] appearance, seeking its fourth championship. It's Southern Illinois returning to the scene of its birth as a basketball name. It's Providence returning to try and re-establish itself as a national power as it was in the early '60's. It's Manhattan returning for the thirteenth time to try, for once, to finish higher than its previous best, fourth in [illegible].

But it's also a matter of building tradition for the three first-time tourney participants, Clemson, Pittsburgh, and Oregon. And what better way to establish tradition than to win a first in a first appearance.

The NIT has also become an integral part of the UMass basketball tradition. It was bound to happen.

For the fifth time in six years, UMass fans and students have a weekend off. In the past, up to 5,000 Minutemen fanatics have made the trek and, despite the poor showings of the Minutemen, it has been a fun time for all.

It is refreshing to meet friends among New York's millions. It is a reunion when every other person you see shouts "Go you Minutemen".

It is several thousand people crowding together on 34th street, waiting to board busses, rocking cars, and basically letting loose.

From that opening tap-off to the post-game brew at McAnn's it's a great way to spend a weekend. See you there.

Jim Town wears a pained expression as he fights for a rebound. Town will have his hands full with Manhattan's Bill Campion.

NIT: Something for everyone

Home for some; the end for others

by Dave Eibel

When the Minutemen take the floor of Madison Square Garden tomorrow against the Jaspers of Manhattan they'll be involved in a sort of paradox.

For John Murphy, Greg Duarte, and guards Bill Endicott and Jim Burke tomorrow's clash marks the third straight year UMass has appeared in the tournament played in the "Mecca" of basketball. It will also be their last.

But for Derick Claiborne, Alex Eldridge, Mike Pyatt, and sophomore Jim Town the game against Manhattan will mark their initial appearances in the nation's oldest basketball tournament. And even if David Thompson thought the NIT was "for losers", he wouldn't find too many allies among the Minutemen.

"That's his opinion," and you can sort of see his point said tri-captain Burke. "They're the defending NCAA champs and not getting invited this season must have been a big blow to them. I think they chose not to go because they're probably just sick of basketball for this year."

One of the big incentives the Minutemen have going for them was presented by the ECAC selection committee that mysteriously neglected UMass from its New England tourney in Springfield. For one thing the Leemen can prove, with a reputable performance, that the ECAC pick 'em and choosers had their feet in their mouths when they made their bids, but on another level the hoopmen want to prove to Holy Cross, Providence, and UConn, who're also in the New York tournament, that UMass is the better team.

"I'd like to take on any of the three," stated Town. "I think we could've beaten all three of them if we'd played in Springfield, but I think everyone hates UConn the most, so I guess I'd like to meet them the most."

"I just want another crack at Holy Cross," offered freshman forward Pyatt. "I was playing JV at the time so I didn't get a chance to play."

No matter how much they might claim otherwise one has to figure that the players feel they didn't get what they deserved when they were snubbed by Scotty Whitelaw and company.

Even though an NIT bid was almost a 99 per cent certainty for UMass there was still a certain amount of worry for the players that the 105-87 victory over Maine March 6th would mark the end of the season.

"The trip up to Maine was really funny," said tri-captain Burke. We just didn't know what was going to happen. It was one of those things where you don't want to think that you might be playing your last game, but you knew it was possible."

It'll be homeward-bound for Eldridge, Pyatt, Glenn Cooper and Claiborne and Joe Artime who all played their high school ball in the metro area of the Big Apple.

When you mention Madison Square Garden to a basketball player his eyes light up immediately. Mention it to one of the New Yorkers on the team and the lights almost blinding.

"I just think it's great," mused Claiborne about playing at the Garden. "Everybody dreams of playing there when they're in high school."

"It always feels good to go home and play in front of your people," exclaimed Pyatt. "There'll be so many people from the school and so many of my friends there. I don't feel tight because I know all the people there," continued the freshman forward.

With five players more or less going home and seniors Duarte, Murphy, Burke and Endicott about to say their last hurrahs as Minutemen, there's no doubt that UMass will be up for this year's NIT. Perhaps it was summed up best by Pyatt who when asked the obvious "how far do you think you'll go" question, just looked at his Converses and said, "I'd just like to keep winning and stay there for a week."

Who's who: The 1975 NIT Field in a nutshell

Here is a wrap-up of the other 14 teams in this year's NIT field, how they shaped up over the season, and what their chances are in tournament.

CLEMSON — (17-10, ranked 14th in the nation) Coach: Tates Locke — Tigers' first NIT appearance and they have the best chance of going all the way. Led by freshman guard Skip Wise (18 points per game) and one of the country's top big men, 7'1 Wayne 'Tree' Rollins. Out of the tough ACC, the Tigers split their regular season match-ups with national powerhouses Maryland, North Carolina, and North Carolina State.
North Carolina State.

CONNECTICUT — (18-8) Coach: Dee Rowe — Huskies are coming off two sound defeats in the ECAC playoffs, and could be hurt by injuries. Earl Wilson is listed as a possible performer because of a scratched cornea. Tough first-round draw in South Carolina.

HOLY CROSS — (19-7) Coach: George Blaney — Crusaders drew top seed in New England tourney, but were blasted by BC. Have winning NIT tradition, copping crown in 1954 and finishing third in 1961. Homecoming for ex Knick Blaney and super-frosh Chris Potter.

LAFAYETTE — (22-4) Coach: Tom Davis — Leopards bowed to LaSalle in finals of ECC tourney. Record includes wins over Rutgers and Princeton. Top scorer is Todd Tripucka (19.2), helped out by Greg Baldwin (14.7). A not so long shot.

MEMPHIS STATE — (20-6) Coach: Wayne Yates — Tigers are in second year as independent. Broke century mark in eight different games en route to 90.0 per game average. Set school record with 136 points against Buffalo State. Paced by Bill Cooke (18.3). Good record could be result of poor schedule.

ORAL ROBERTS — (20-6) Coach: Jerry Hale — Titans are another team with not-so-great schedule, but the talent is there. Guards Anthony Roberts and Arnold Dugger spur offense. 6'9 Mel Johnson pulls in better than 10 rebounds per contest.

OREGON — (18-8) Coach: Dick Harter — Ducks were a mediocre 8-6 in tough Pac-8, but swept 10 games outside of conference, including wins over Providence, Arizona State, and Creighton. Seven of the losses were by grand total of 13 points. Led by native Bay Stater Ron Lee.

PRINCETON — (18-8) Coach: Pete Carril — Tigers eased to second place finish in Ivy League. Finished fourth in the nation in team defense, allowing just above 55 points per game. Barnes Hauptfuhrer led team in both scoring (15 per game) and rebounding. Could be a surprise.

PROVIDENCE — (17-10) Coach: Dave Gavitt — Friars are making eighth NIT appearance, having won title in 1961 and '63. Tough schedule, but really didn't beat the top teams. Guard Joe Hassett (18.1) is top point-getter but erratic shooter. Bob 'Mabooboo' homecoming could be ruined by bout with mono. Bad luck playing Clemson in opening match.

PITTSBURGH — (17-10) Coach: Buzz Ridl — Panthers were first round loser in ECAC southern division playoffs. Wins over Notre Dame, Marquette, and Rutgers to their credit. Look to Kirk Bruce (17.8) for scoring and Mel Bennett for rebounding. Erratic.

ST. JOHN'S — (18-8) Coach: Lou Carnesecca — Redmen have won four NIT titles, most in history, in 21 appearances. Overall mark of 28-20 in all NIT games. Bowed to Rutgers in ECAC metro final. Led by Mel Utley (18.8), but, for excitement, watch leaper 'Boogie' Smith. Can never be counted out.

ST. PETER'S — (15-11) Coach: Dick McDonald — Peacocks had best year since '68. Top scorer is Bob Fazio, [illegible]. Adam Coleman also worth watching. Longest of long shots.

SOUTH CAROLINA — (18-8) Coach: Frank McGuire — Gamecocks play top-notch independent schedule. Own wins over Manhattan and Pittsburgh. Tom Boswell and Mike Dunleavy are the offensive heavies, Alex English handles board work. Good choice for the final four, maybe better.

SOUTHERN ILLINOIS — (18-8) Coach: Paul Lambert — Salukis made a name for themselves by winning NIT in 1967 with MVP Walt Frazier. 6'11 Joe Meriweather (20.1) is big gun, assisted by sharpshooter Mike Glenn. Could be a dark horse.

UMASS WINS
N.I.T.!

Forget the past; time is now

By RON ARENA

Being invited to the National Invitational Tournament has become as common as the Boston Celtics playing in the NBA playoffs. However, unlike the Celts, UMass has not added winning to their tradition of playing in a post-season affair.

1970 was the first year UMass took part in the NIT. They didn't last long. In the opening round, the Minutemen drew Marquette, one of the top teams in the country. Marquette had been invited to the NCAA's, but refused the offer, in a dispute over which regional site they were to play in.

If Marquette had expected an easy time by choosing the NIT, UMass quickly changed their outlook. Led by Captain Ray Ellerbrook and a super sophomore named Julius Erving, the 18-6 Redmen gave the Warriors an unexpected scare. At halftime, the score was deadlocked at 27, and stayed close throughout, as UMass lost by seven, 62-55. UMass' strong performance becomes even more impressive, considering that Marquette went on to win the NIT's that year. Coach Jack Leaman says of their initial appearance, "We played a great game and I was proud of our efforts."

In '71, UMass finished the regular season with a 22-3 record, on the strength of a sensational year of Julius Erving. Erving, in his last year of college ball scored at a rate of 26.9 per game, while averaging 19.5 rebounds per contest.

Unfortunately, Erving's UMass career, and the Redmen's final campaign ended abruptly. In the opening round, they once again drew the top-seeded team, this team being North Carolina. Pre-season polls rated the Tar Heels as the only threat to UCLA for a national championship. They never even made it to the NCAA's though, as South Carolina upset them in the Atlantic Coast Conference playoffs. So they took out their frustrations on the NIT participants.

1970

Starting with a 90-49 bombing of UMass, the Tar Heels easily went on to capture the tournament. Remembers Coach Leaman, "We played at 11:00 in the morning and got blown off. Julius Erving had never fouled out before, and in this game he fouled out with 16:58 remaining and that really hurt us." Erving, in his last game in a UMass uniform, finished with 13 points and 8 rebounds, well below his average. The strength of North Carolina that year can be associated with the fact that three of their players, Bill Chamberlain, Dennis Wuycik, and Steve Previs, all went on to play pro ball.

After missing the tournament in 1972, the Minutemen returned in '73, sporting a 19-6 record and a 12-game winning streak. Again, they drew one of the top seeds, Missouri. Missouri's credentials outshone the Minutemen's, as they were 12th ranked nationally, with a 21-5 record.

In perhaps one of their greatest moments, UMass upset their heavily favored opponents, 78-71, for their first NIT win. Bill Endicott (who calls the game his biggest thrill in his four years here), led the victors with 16 points. Tom Austin, Al Skinner, Charlie Peters, and John Murphy, all hit double figures to support Endicott's showing.

Without even the time to savor victory, UMass advanced to the next round vs. North Carolina. Again the Tar Heels were a 'top team', but a stunning loss to Wake Forest in overtime killed any NCAA hopes. Before that loss, North Carolina had been ranked eighth in the country.

Remembering their 90-49 humiliation, UMass played an inspired game, only to lose by a 73-63 score. At halftime, it was tied at 30, and with eight minutes to go, UMass trailed by four. Tom Austin, a 6'9 senior, ended his varsity career for UMass with his best game, leading both teams with 21 points and 10 rebounds. North Carolina was downed in the next round, losing to Notre Dame.

Last year, UMass had high hopes once again, as they finished with a 21-4 record behind senior Al Skinner, and juniors John Murphy and Bill Endicott. They drew Jacksonville (18-7) in the opening round, so the championship was up for grabs. UMass failed to capitalize, though, as they were defeated in OT, 70-69. Murphy scored 26 points in the contest, but the height advantage for Jacksonville proved too much. After drawing top-seeded teams in other appearances, this loss came as a sharp disappointment. Al Skinner, in his last game finished with 15 points.

So overall, the UMass NIT history has been disheartening. They have won but one game out of the five they've played. This should give UMass the incentive to try for a better showing in the 1975 tourney beginning tomorrow against Manhattan.

Julius Erving, the unforgettable, snares a rebound and almost spears the Warriors of Marquette in UMass' 62-55 loss in their first NIT, back in 1970.

John Murphy et al. couldn't stop North Carolina from "Tar-heeling" UMass 73-63 in the 1973 NIT.

SCER report documents CC pay inequalities

By JOYCE KOSOFSKY
Staff Reporter

A recently published report from the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) documents that student employees do not receive the same pay rate as other employees in the campus center-student union complex.

According to the report, the majority of personnel employed at the Campus Center-Student Union complex are students. Although the mean average hourly income is $2.56 an hour, most student workers are locked into a pay scale of $2.00 an hour. The report states that most student workers feel that their minimal wages are "neither representative of the work they perform nor adequate to support them in a country with an annual inflation rate of 14 per cent." They receive no sick pay, no cost of living increase, not benefits. They report also states that technically students aren't considered employees. They are catagorized as "03" which means "payment for services."

Also, the report indicates that the UMass student work-force is in a uniquely bad situation. It states that not only are they deprived of normal employee benefits, but are also ineligible for welfare (except for food stamps) and-or unemployment insurance.

In an earlier SCER report it was estimated that the entire cost of a school year at UMass came to $3,000 for necessary expenditures. Yet, a student earning $2.00 an hour during a 34-week school year working 20 hours per week can expect to take home $1,360. Even the student who earns $2.56 an hour during this time and works full time during the summer makes only $3,000, which as the report states, is not enough to pay living expenses during the summer.

The SCER report also showed that while the starting salary for student workers is $2.00 an hour and full-time non-students workers is $2.95 an hour, the salary of the Campus Center director is more than $27,00 a year. For a 40-hour week, 49 weeks a year this figure equals $13.78 an hour. The average rate for other Campus Center professional staffers is $12,370 or $6.31 an hour. Laborers earn on the average of $7,245 or $3.70 an hour. Clerical workers, mostly women, average $6,808 or $3.47 an hour.

The average hourly income in Massachusetts is $4.25 an hour. The SCER report show that student workers are far below this average. The SCER report has raised the question that "as long as the administration can get away with paying students sub-standard wages, why should they pay decent salary to full time employees? Even professional employees earn far less than the $21,120 average salary for University professional staff."

New Greek officers tackle fee

By CARLENE MURPHY
Staff Reporter

The Greek Area recently elected officers that will be faced with an issue — the universal resource fee — that could seriously hamper their future growth or may mean their very demise, according to a spokesperson for the area.

These newly elected officers are experiencing what they describe as a "turning point" for the Greek area and its government. "The Greeks are becoming more aware of themselves and their place in the campus community. They're also experiencing a renewal of interest in the Greek way of life. But their new hopes and prospects may be short-lived if the universal fee becomes a reality," said John Tata, president.

Alleged oil fraud studied by federal agencies

Probe of embargo pricing policy sought

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A two-pronged federal probe of petroleum pricing activities during the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo has alleged widespread conspiracies to fraudulently overcharge consumers millions or perhaps billions of dollars, it was learned yesterday.

Sources familiar with the investigation said there was a possibility organized crime was involved.

Spokesmen for the U.S. Custom Service and Federal Energy Administration said there were two main thrusts in the government probe:

— Investigation by custom agents at 40 ports around the nation of possible document falsification by importers and suppliers to double the apparent cost of foreign oil shipped into the United States.

— A three-way FEA investigation of alleged manipulations by oil suppliers, shippers and brokers that may have raised petroleum product prices as much as 300 per cent between refineries and consumers such as electric power utilities, hospitals and schools.

FEA officials said their investigations had turned up allegations one utility company alone had been overcharged $15 million. Sources said total overcharges uncovered in both investigations might run at least as high as $1 billion, and the Washington Post reported it could be as much as $3 billion.

Spokesmen refused to disclose many details of their agencies' activities, saying the investigations are still under way.

But FEA sources said that agency plans a major announcement soon on its findings. And the Post reported grand juries have been convened in Jacksonville, Fla., New York and Los Angeles in connection with the customs probe.

The Post also said other grand juries might be called in Houston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Boston as the evidence of illegal activities mounts.

"It's a major fraud case, a very major case," said a customs spokesman. He declined to comment on the reported grand juries, but said customs is turning its information over to the Justice Department.

The spokesman said the investigation involves alleged falsification of shipping and custom documents showing the country in which imported oil was produced.

Such manipulation might allow a shipper to show an oil tanker's cargo as Venezuela oil, which sold for about $10 per barrel during the embargo, when in fact it was Nigerian oil which cost only about $5.

The customs investigation began in August of last year, the spokesman said, and has concentrated on east coast ports, which received most foreign petroleum during the embargo. But he said a total of 40 ports around the nation were involved.

The FEA investigation, unlike that of the Custom Service, is concentrated on activities solely within the United States.

A spokesman said the FEA's three main investigations are code named Project Escalator, Project Manipulator and Project Speculator.

Cambodians recapture position; Phnom Penh shelling continues

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Cambodian government forces recaptured Tuol Leap outpost in the Communist rocket belt west of Pochentong airport but rebel gunners pounded the airport and capital again yesterday.

Neak Luong, the last government enclave on the Mekong River in the south, was near collapse.

At least ten rockets exploded in Phnom Penh near the presidential palace and the foreign embassy compound, killing one soldier and wounding all eight members of his family. Twelve other persons were wounded in a Buddhist temple housing refugees.

More than 1,600 refugees have fled the Buddhist pagoda compound 100 yards from the U.S. embassy to escape rocket attacks that killed three and wounded another 20 over the past week.

Observers feared the rebels may be preparing a major offensive on the airport tomorrow, March 18, fifth anniversary of the ouster of exiled Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

French diplomats have begun to leave Phnom Penh and the first evacuation flight for French citizens may be leaving Monday. Frenchmen milled around in their embassy compound to complete formalities for evacuation while three Chinese-made 107mm rockets exploded nearby.

Government troops supported by armored cars took Tuol Leap, six miles west of Pochentong airport, after a multi-pronged attack that captured 17 Communist 107mm rockets and killed 180 rebels in two days of heavy fighting.

Eleven government troops were reported killed, 90 wounded and three of the armored personnel carriers destroyed or damaged, according to field reports.

The American emergency airlift flew in 19 loads of rice and fuel out of Saigon in DC8 cargo jets — a record one-day shipment of 849 tons of rice and 46 tons of kerosene since the airlift began Feb. 27.

Portuguese Communists demonstrate support

LISBON (UPI) — Thousands of rain-soaked Communists yesterday shouted support for the left-wing military government's drive to turn Portugal's march to democracy into a Socialist revolution.

In a soccer stadium ablaze with red flags and banners, they heard top Communist leaders extol the nationalization of banks and insurance companies and urge further revolutionary moves.

Party chief Alvaro Cunhal praised his supporters for their part in defeating the abortive coup last Tuesday, but urged the estimated 10,000 in the stadium not to call for the execution of the men involved.

At Lisbon airport, employes of the national airline TAP closely scrutinized departing Portuguese to prevent suspected conservatives and businessmen from fleeing the country.

On the land border with Spain normal traffic has been stalled for six days as Communist vigilantes armed with shotguns manned roadblocks on main highways.

Indian hunting rights hit by wildlife group

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — Delegates to the National Wildlife Federation's annual convention yesterday called for a new national policy that would strip American Indians of special hunting, fishing and timber rights.

Dukakis tries to hold to tax pledge

Vow of no increase underpins his policy

BOSTON (AP) — The no tax campaign pledge made by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has become the fundamental economic principle which is the underpinning of all administration policy.

Continuing economic decline has broadened the issue to the extent that it involves much more than a governor simply trying to keep a campaign promise.

The ramifications of the Dukakis commitment are already being felt, especially by state employes and welfare recipients who are denied the 11 per cent cost-of-living increase that they are seeking.

And, of course, the beneficiaries of the no-tax program are the vast majority of Massachusetts families who depend on low and middle level wages. Massachusetts is without a graduated income tax, and these are the people who would bear the burden of a tax hike.

The governor outlined the philosophy behind his no-tax policy at a news conference last week. He made three points:

— "When you're in the middle of a recession or depression, taxing people makes no sense. It would further depress the economy, and as part of a national economic policy, it makes little sense for states to be increasing taxes while the federal government is reducing them.

— "The folks asked to pay the taxes, low and middle income people, are precisely the people who need the money the most, (and) they make the purchases in the market place.

— "There are certain restraints on how generous the state can be in human services . . . There are certain limits beyond which the state can't go and survive economically in this federal system."

By the last point, Dukakis means [illegible]

Meyer claims he's porno satirist

By PAUL BONARRIGO
Special Correspondent

Porno-film maker Russ Meyer in Amherst for the world premier of his film Super Vixens says his aim is to produce films that are "sexually outrageous."

Meyer appeared before Channel 3 cameras and a small audience in the Amherst Cinema last Friday afternoon to hold a panel discussion on "Sex and Censorship in American Film."

Although Meyer talked very little about the topic of "Sex and Censorship", he did talk about his own insight into what he refers to as "soft-core porno films".

"My aim is to produce films that are sexually outrageous," said Meyer. "I am mostly interested in porno satire and belly-laugh humor. My films are considered 'soft core' because I do not film the erotic zone," he said.

"Do you feel your movies are less successful because you don't film the erotic zone?", asked panelist David Kerr, assistant professor of Mass Communications at Hampshire College.

"No," said Meyer, "I think that filming that area leaves nothing remaining for the imagination."

Panelist Susan Wolf, a member of Filmwomen and a porno film maker herself, agreed with Meyer. She said, "By deleting the zone greater audience arousement is achieved."

"Why do all your actresses have big busts?", asked panelist Helene Keyssar-Frank, who teaches theatre at Amherst College.

Meyer said that his women are selected to his own personal taste. "I have found that women with big busts, waspish waists and round firm buttocks arouse my audience. I tried using slender women in two out of my twenty four films and both of them were flops," he added.

"Why are all your actresses portrayed as victims?" asked a woman in the audience.

Meyer said that the role of his actresses was "more satirical parody and humorous than victimizing."

"I cannot sit on a panel with a man who expresses such a view," said panelist Helene Keyssar-Frank who then stood up and left the panel.

"Why is the black man always portrayed as the 'super stud' in your films?" asked a man in the audience.

Progressive pool condemnations

According to Gardner, Matuska told him that violation of the law could lead to the invalidation of those who had registered that day.

"The leaflets merely explained the importance of registering to vote," Gardner said.

According to Gardner, the leaflets publicized issues like rent control, transit, and nuclear power plants. All issues that may be discussed at the Amherst Town Meetings in order to show students the importance of registering to vote in Amherst.

While Gardner and associates continued to circulate the leaflets outside of the commons, Fitz said that he had been called to the scene by Matuska.

Fitz had been serving in a liaison capacity between the student government and the Amherst Town Hall.

After warning Gardner that his leafletting activities might jeopardize the registration drive, Fitz said that he took Gardner's leaflets and dumped them in a trash can.

"I'm sorry for the rashness of my actions," Fitz said yesterday, "but I was mad at the way Gardner had mouthed off to Mrs. Matuska and felt that he was jeopardizing the registration drive. I support rent control too."

According to Doug Stanley of the PEP, Fitz's fears were groundless.

"The statute which Matuska cited refers to polling places, not registration places," he said.

Southwest funds may be cut out

Head of residence for Kennedy Lower, Bob Padgett, said the assembly's proposal is a "good idea." "Southwest Assembly is supposed to be combatting racism and sexism and right now I don't think they are."

Jean Davis, head of residence JQA Upper, said, conditionally, "If Southwest Assembly gives us the money for instituting these programs, then I agree with the bill."

The heads of residence of Moore House, Mark Cashman and Phil Salinger, agreed with the proposal but added there would have to be exceptions. Salinger said, "If one dorm has related problems of combatting racism and sexism then they shouldn't be expected to have a course exclusively on racism and sexism."

The only head of residence interviewed who was opposed to the bill was Margie Posner, head of residence for Emerson. "Dorms have access to these types of programs (racism and sexism programs). I don't know if every dorm is actually doing out these programs, but I don't think they should be restricted from receiving the assembly's funds. They should, however, be aware of Southwest Assembly priorities," Posner said.

More drums along the Mohawk

To the Editor:

The people of Ganienkeh, in an attempt to reclaim the religion and lifestyle of their grandmothers, have reclaimed their traditional homeland and being confronted with stiff resistance. These Mohawk people, living on an abandoned girls' camp near Eagle Bay, NY, have been threatened by a complete roadblock on people and supplies entering the area. This action, set to be carried out by the New York state police, is expected within six weeks. Last fall the state police Troop "D" [the same men responsible for the Attica Massacre of 1971] was on the verge of mounting an assault on Ganienkeh when the action was averted in last minute negotiations.

The land on which the Indians are situated is theirs in accord with the Canadaigua Treaty of 1794. The federal judges in the area see it otherwise and are attempting to impose their will on the Indian people. The treaty recognizes the Six Nations Confederacy, of which the Mohawk is a member nation, as a sovereign entity. Both these actions; the use of force against Mohawk people, and the attempt of the federal judiciary to pass laws or judgement on a member of the Six Nations, are in direct violation of the 1794 treaty.

Supplies are urgently needed to sustain the Indians through the remainder of the fierce Adirondack winter and until their first harvest inside Ganienkeh. Items such as potatoes, flour, grains, beans and sugar have been requested. Also tools for farming, making maple sugar, and building can be put to good use. In lieu of such items, money is also vitally needed at this crucial time. Contributions are tax deductible and checks should be made payable to:

Know thy worth(lessness)

To the Editor:

Not too long ago, a suggestion was made that substantial inroads could be made into the current financial crisis if upper-level [PAO] administrators were to voluntarily initiate salary cuts. This was quickly dismissed as impractical. After mulling it over, we're not so sure that it is. In a public institution of higher education whose commitment is ostensibly to provide educational opportunity at low cost, it seems rather incongruous that students are being asked to make up operations deficits, while upper-level administrators continue to accept large salaries without a second thought.

We must agree that there are administrators in this country who are worth the $36,000 to $52,000 paid to some UMass administrators. [This is the average range of upper-level salaries, President Wood's salary was not available at this writing, but is near the high end of the range.] If we had administrators who were capable of running the institution economically and above board, they might be worth the figures mentioned. However, it would appear, given the recent disclosures of apparent mismanagement and funding problems, that these talented and responsible administrators are not on the UMass payroll. We only suggest that people in top positions be payed what they are worth. We believe that these people know what they are worth, and that they should willingly accept that salary.

We think that this situation deserves a closer look. Consider the potential headlines: "UMASS UNDERSCORES COMMITMENT TO STUDENTS — Primary Administrators Accept Salary Cuts Rather Than Increase Student Fees." We like the idea. It would be a unique [unfortunately] case of the "haves" giving to the "have-nots," and would be a creative and extremely effective way of raising the credibility of Whitmore to exciting new levels.

Yes, it probably won't happen, at least not here. Too bad, isn't it?

Voyeurs voilà!

To the Editor:

Recently, a group of us attended a party at Tau Epsilon Phi Fraternity. Our main complaint in this letter does not concern the hospitality of the brothers that night, which did leave much to be desired. Our objective is to inform our "sisters", all women of the UMass campus, of the perversion which exists there concerning the supposed ladies room. This haven of privacy for women has been invaded by frustrated members of the fraternity. This was accomplished by standing outside on the roof in the cold peering through a skylight which appeared in the bathroom as a blackened hole in the ceiling. We are writing to you now as, obviously, unwilling stars in their peep-show, to expose their little charade and caution future female visitors to this fraternity. We do not appreciate the antics of these voyeurs with their antiquated ideas of women.

Portugal in perspective

As soon as I woke up last Tuesday morning I somehow felt that something was happening — I could not really grasp the feeling. I didn't really know what was going on, but I somehow felt uneasy. It was going to be "one of those days," and I knew it. As soon as I read the newspapers my anxiousness was transformed to fear. I read that an uprising had taken place in Portugal and its outcome was not yet known. This uprising was instigated and carried out by right wingers, ultra conservatives, and reactionaries, and it was manifested in the revolt by a segment of the army.

Throughout the day I was overcome with emotions that were too powerful to dissolve. The main emotion was fear. Fear for Portugal, its people, its newly expressed ideals, its future. Fear of a massacre, by the right wingers, of the people — something reminiscent of the bloodshed which occurred at end of the Paris Commune of 1871.

Portugal is on her way to tremendous transformations in the realms of politics, economics, and social institutions. They are the only country in the so-called "Western Europe" to radically change their approach to politics. Whether they will be able to achieve their goals will be determined by a number of factors: (a) how they will deal with their internal situation, and (b) how they will deal with their external situation.

Internally, the greatest problems which will face them will be opposition by the reactionaries, opposition by the bourgeois-owned press, inflation, and the threat of counter-revolution. Externally, they will have to face "Western" opinion, perhaps an economic blockade a la Cuba, possible invasion by a foreign power, and the C.I.A.

They must deal with both aspects decisively and correctly. Internally, their main problem will be the reactionary element of the population. This element is made up of right wingers, moderates, "liberals," and even socialists.

The upper class will be very reluctant (to say the least) to give up their wealth. They will be unwilling to sacrifice their enormous wealth for the good of the Portuguese people as a whole. Their wealth, therefore, must be, and will be, taken away from them. As a result of this expropriation, they will always remain as the dark and vile element within the Portuguese society. They will always, if allowed, undermine the efforts of the government, and as a result constructive changes will unavoidably delay, or simply will not occur at all. These right wingers are not the only obstacle to the way towards change. Moderates and "liberals" will also tend to undermine the government. They are the bourgeois — the middle class; they are as reactionary as the upper classes are. The destruction of their capitalism will mean the stoppage of their oppression of the people, the curtailment of their economic well-being, the elimination of their control of the means of production. They will no longer form a distinct class, they will no longer have their privileges, their factories, their "slaves." Their influence will be curtailed, their bankbooks will become meaningless pieces of paper, their colonies overseas will no longer shed blood and sweat for them. These moderates and "liberals" will align themselves with the right wingers and they will form a very dangerous opponent to the new progressive government.

More trouble will come from the socialists. They are the pseudo-Marxists who are naive enough to think that socialism will be the end of the political process called Marxism. They are naive enough to think that socialism is the final step — the decisive end. These Socialists are at odds with the Communists — they are at odds with them because they refuse to understand the Marxist theory concerning the stages and processes which will occur after a Marxist program is successfully initiated. Socialism can never be the final stage of a Marxist society. The events at Chile and the fate of the Allende government offer substantive and efficient evidence for such a claim. Socialism is a half-way measure and it will never succeed. The Socialists must immediately alter their petty bourgeois ideologies and lend their support to the Portuguese government. Only then can such a government successfully initiate constructive changes. The feud between the Socialists and Communists must end and a united front must be presented to the ever-present menace of reaction and counter-revolution.

The Portuguese people must deal immediately with the unwanted elements within their society (i.e. the bourgeois and the upper classes). Their action must be quick, firm, and decisive. Another Chile-like situation must not re-occur. I guess that this statement brings us to the topic of the ever-present C.I.A. Every trace of this organization within Portugal must be eliminated immediately — only then will Portugal be able to deal with her internal problems. Right now she is fighting a war on two fronts — the internal front, and the external front. Only when the external front is secured will Portugal be able to deal decisively with her internal front. We know the role played by the C.I.A. in Chile; we also know the danger which the Portuguese government faces from the same organization. Not to be over-redundant, every trace of the C.I.A. within Portugal must be eliminated. This is a top priority, and must be treated as such.

The government of Portugal is facing grave problems indeed. These problems can be eliminated if the government keeps in perspective its goals, the goals of Portuguese people, and the goals of the people of the entire globe. The problems can also be eliminated if the government does not repeat the mistakes of Allende.

My fear for the people of Portugal will not subside until all the major problems are eliminated. Until then, I will wake every morning with the same uneasy feeling that I had last Tuesday morning. That's all right though, the Portuguese peoples' revolution is still alive and well, and it has my full support. May the spirits of Marx, Engels, and Lenin give insight and inspiration to the Portuguese government, and may such a government build a truly Marxist society.

At this time

Every year at this time, RSO groups are working hard to present new budgets and proposals before the Budget Committee of the Student Government Association. This is one which vital function of the SGA provides to the student body...despite the fact that once in a while they relax the campus by providing a circus...

The SGA provides a vital service to this campus because is in charge in allocating the student tax money to student organizations which provide educational and learning experiences not provided by the regular academic programs, or providing services to the same students, otherwise not covered by the campus administration.

Among the hundreds of organizations that request new grants are those that are oriented to serve the entire student body, (some of them provide services to staff as well as faculty members), and those with a special interest or ethnic group constituency. In both cases student organizations fulfill certain needs of the university community. I think that SGA should request from all organizations an Affirmative Action policy and a wise spending policy as well as a guarantee that everybody will have an equal participation in the decision making and benefits or privileges derived in each RSO group.

One of the common problems that seems to be among the RSO groups is how many members each organization have and how the money had been spent. Concerning membership every group have a certain set of by-laws and constitution. Does it guarantee equal participation?

Concerning funds spending, it seems to be that many times, many organizations they wait to the last months to spend a great part of their budgets. Probably students and the university as a whole could have a better utilization of funds if the spending is made in regular intervals of time and plannified, providing to students more opportunities to participate in their activities.

The policy of RSO advertising seems to be oriented more to specific interest groups with a small constituency than to those that regularly reach the entire university. I think that if followed and observed, this policy could help the special interest groups to reach in some issues more students, as well as providing an atmosphere of intellectual freedom and knowledge.

Another aspect of the SGA-RSO groups relationship the should be looked upon and reviewed is the relationship of SGA-RSO groups with administrative and academic programs. Do we need a code of ethics to the administrative and academic programs concerning their role and participation in undergraduate students affairs and in the way that the undergraduates want to spend their tax, plus the educational and learning goals that want to achieve when they request a grant from the SGA?

In general, I think that is worth the efforts of hundreds of students in the different RSO groups, as well as those belonging to the SGA, to allocate the student tax in organizations and activities that could provide in return more and better educational and learning activities to the same student body.

Taking control

By MEREDITH MANNING
Progressive News Service

This is the second in a series of commentaries on rent control in Amherst.

Diane Romer, a candidate for the Amherst Board of Selectpersons, opposes rent control, although she favors "holding rents down."

Her objection to rent control is based on the misinformed belief that, "it has been tried in every part of the country and has never worked." The candidate assumes that all rent control laws are the same and, "only work for a short crisis period," as in World War II. Perhaps Ms. Romer needs to be informed of the critical situation the Pioneer Valley is now facing.

Romer maintains that the rent problem could be alleviated by subsidized public housing. Her solution is similar to the arguments of many landlords in this area. Of course, most people agree that more low-income housing is needed. But obviously, building more apartments is a time-consuming process. The people of this community cannot afford to wait while rents increase in proportion to the housing shortage.

Rent subsidies would help only a small fraction of the tenants who simply do not have the financial ability to live in costly apartments. There are only limited funds available for these programs. Also, during a housing shortage, rent subsidies do not affect those whose income does not constitute participation in these programs. Inevitably, rents would rise as landlord profits increase, with the largest burden getting dumped on the taxpayer.

Commentary

Other "officials" argue that rent control would cause housing deterioration. These opponents suggest that rent control discourages both the banks and the landlords from maintaining their investments. Unfortunately, many buildings deteriorate because owners neglect to make necessary repairs when they are informed of a problem by their tenants. Many landlords ignore deplorable conditions because they are well aware that their tenants have nowhere else to live.

Rent control would not solve the problem of housing deterioration, but at least tenants would not be forced to pay exorbitant prices for a decaying "home." If rents for substandard condition apartments were reduced, tenants could legally make their own repairs and deduct the TOTAL cost from their rent in less time than they can now, under the present state "Repair and Deduct" law. Under rent control, landlords would be threatened with income reduction via tenant "Repair and Deduct," and thus, they would be quicker to act on complaints in the future.

Ms. Romer's most disturbing point made against rent control focuses on the costs of administering it. She says that it is "unfair to ask Amherst taxpayers to carry the taxburden." She implies that students who are tenants are not residents of Amherst, although clearly, much of the Amherst population is comprised of students, grad-students or professors who opt to live here for a substantial length of time. Rent control would not be confined to helping only these people. It would assist tenants who are teachers, school employees, the elderly and all people who by necessity must seek low income housing. The cost of administering rent control does vary, yet it is a small price to pay for the huge amounts saved by this measure. In 1972, the tax increase for rent control in Brookline was 29 cents...in Cambridge, the increase was only 69 cents.

Landlords argue that rent control would discourage new construction. Yet, the state rent control enabling law, Chapter 842, exempts from it new housing built after January 1, 1969. This "date of exemption" applies to most of the apartment complexes in the Amherst area, but there is a very good chance that this will be changed by the state Legislature. The Local Affairs Committee, a group assigned to study Chapter 842, should recommend that new construction would be excluded from Chapter 842, once it is adopted. But in order for the change to be made there has to be obvious pressure from tenants.

Tenants of the Pioneer Valley will have the opportunity to show their support for making the change. The Local Affairs Committee will be conducting two rent control hearings exclusively for tenants this week. The hearings will take place at 10:00 a.m., Wednesday and Saturday, March 19th and March 22nd, in Gardner Auditorium at the State House in Boston. If you need a ride to the hearings, both the U.S.C.C. (tel. 545-0217) and the Commuter Assembly (tel. [illegible]) will be providing transportation. Please come and show your support for LESS RENT, MORE CONTROL.

Akbar concert tonight

On Monday evening, March 17, the world-renowned Ali Akbar Khan, India's master musician and virtuoso of the sarod, will appear in concert here under the sponsorship of the Arts Council in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

A legend in his own lifetime and the descendant of a long line of celebrated musicians, Ali Akbar Khan, tutored by his father, Dr. Alluaddin Khan, began his studies at the age of three. From age nine, he practiced music 18 hours a day for the next 15 years, learning vocal music, drums and other Indian instruments before concentrating on the sarod. While in his early twenties he became the court musician for the Maharaja of Jodhpur and ten years later he was given the title of Ustad, the Persian word meaning "master musician."

Appearing with Ali Khan in his March 17 concert will be Zakir Hussain, a twenty-one year old master tabla player and Mira, an American disciple of Ali Akbar Khan, who will perform on the tambura. The concert is a Third World cultural series event.

Tickets are now on sale at the Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall (Tel. 545-0202) and are priced at $4 and $3; one-half price for UMass students. Special group rates may be obtained.

Peoples' Bicentennial Commission to organize

By JOE MAHONEY
Staff Reporter

"Our basic purpose is to turn the American people on to the fact that we did have a Revolution — that the principles which came out of that Revolution are still very much in use today," said the New England coordinator of the Peoples Bicentennial Commission (PBC), Randy Barber, at a recent organizational meeting in the Campus Center.

PBC, an independent group in its fourth year, is undermining the exploitative treatment of the Bicentennial by corporate enterprises and the Government's commission, the American Revolution Bicentennial Association (ARBA).

"One of the latest efforts by ARBA," said Barber, "is something called the Freedom Train — a twelve car train that will tour all around the country with exhibits of industrial progress.

"They raised $8 million from G.M., Exxon, Mobil Oil, and a conglomerate construction company. The same day G.M. announced giving $1 million to the Freedom Train, they laid off 250 workers in Framingham.

"ARBA has just entered into a contract with Disneyland to have a Bicentennial Disneyland caravan going around the country with Mickey Mouse dressed up as a Minuteman," Barber said.

According to Barber, PBC is working on several projects that will put the Bicentennial in the proper perspective. These projects include:

—an extensive public education campaign focusing on economic issues and alternatives.

—rallies and other public demonstrations aimed at the tyrannical policies of the giant corporations.

An organizational caucus is scheduled for Wednesday, March 19 at 7:30 p.m. in the Veterans' Coalition Office, Room 411 Student Union.

It is the only way the insurance company can guarantee such extensive coverage at such an unusually low premium cost. The basic idea is that the Health Services can make arrangements to obtain hospital, surgical, and specialty services for students at a basic cost, and it can take certain steps to prevent the unnecessary use of these costly services.

For example, in previous years the Insurance Plan paid only part of the fees charged by general and orthopedic surgeons, but this year's Plan covers them completely if a participating surgeon performs the surgery. Previously, the Insurance Plan also paid only 80 per cent of a hospital bill after the first three days, but this year's Plan covers the hospital bill completely if the student stays at the affiliated hospital, The Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

...AND WHAT ABOUT THE AFFILIATED HOSPITAL?

The affiliated hospital (Cooley Dickinson Hospital) is one which has signed a contract with the University Health Services agreeing to accept 98 per cent of its usual charges as full payment from the Insurance Plan in return for some administrative advantages, such as the elimination of the use of insurance claim forms.

The 2 per cent discount by itself, of course, is not large enough to result in the dramatic increase in coverage provided for this year's Insurance Plan. Other savings result from the stipulation in the policy that Plan members be hospitalized at the affiliated hospital whenever the services they require can be rendered there. Because hospitalization rates in Northampton are significantly lower than the rates in other more metropolitan areas of the country, the total amount of the premium which needs to be allocated to hospitalization will be less than in previous years. Another source of savings is the stipulation that the affiliated hospital will accept laboratory and x-ray work performed at the Health Center and paid for by the health fee.

HOW DOES THE UNIVERSITY HEALTH SERVICES HELP KEEP THE PREMIUM LOW BY PREVENTING THE UNNECESSARY USE OF THESE COSTLY SERVICES?

Because the University Health Services is the place where all students should first go for medical advice, it is in a position to provide most medical services or determine in advance what additional services students might need. The insurance policy is written in such a way that most claims submitted by students must be authorized before they can be paid. The Health Services has established procedures whereby its physicians and nurses grant "permission" for emergency care, hospital admissions, surgery for non-participating surgeons, and consultation and treatment by specialists not available at the Health Center.

Everywoman's Center offers internships

Everywoman's Center is offering two administrative internships in exchange for credit for work on Project Self, a series of workshops designed to meet the unanswered needs of women. The internships will involve participation in planning and implementing the workshop series, and becoming a staff member at EWC.

Staff members attend and contribute to bi-weekly staff meetings and are responsible for staffing at the front desk for 2 hours each week. EWC would prefer interns who could make a two semester commitment (either summer '75 and fall '75 or fall '75 and spring '76) but would consider someone who could remain for only one semester.

Credit could be obtained through Outreach, 408 Goodell, or through faculty sponsors in academic departments. Credits are negotiable up to 15, hours at EWC should be between 20-40-week. For further information, contact Marilyn Bogue or Susan Weinberg at Everywoman's Center, 506 Goodell, 545-0883.

Organizing Comm nominations solicited

Nomination papers are currently available to any student wishing to apply for the chairmanship of the Student Senate Organizing Committee. Responsibilities of this position include: overseeing and reporting to the Student Senate the activities and progress of the Student Organizing Project, leading a committee which has been charged with the task of defining the Project's long range future goals; and Overseeing expenditures made from a 40 to 50 thousand dollar budget. Nomination papers can be obtained in room 420 Student Union any time during the day. They must be returned by Wednesday, March 19th at Noon. Affirmative Action policies are in effect.

CPB meeting tonight

The Coalition for a People's Budget that is organizing to demand a real increase in the University budget for 1975-76 will be holding its next open meeting Monday, March 17 at 7:30 p.m. in room 113 in the Campus Center.

CPB urges all students, staff and faculty concerned about budget cuts to attend and participate in developing campus wide action strategies.

It is critical for our demands to be heard at the State level in order to insure open access to public higher education in Massachusetts and to preserve quality education, human services and affirmative action policy. We need to act quickly and collectively.

Join the third biggest family in the world.

Imagine an order of 22,000 priests and brothers in 73 countries around the world. (That's a pretty big family.)

But that's what the Salesians of St. John Bosco are all about — a large family of community-minded men dedicated to the service of youth. (And no one gets lost.)

In Italy in the 1800's a chance meeting between a poor priest and a street urchin served to create a movement of such success that it is still growing today. Don Bosco became the priest who brought youth back from the streets — and back to God.

He reasoned that a program of play, learn and pray would make useful citizens of the world. He crowded out evil with reason, religion and kindness in a (what was then unheard of) atmosphere of family.

The ideals of St. John Bosco are still with us today. His work goes on in boys clubs, technical and academic schools, guidance centers, summer camps and missions. And his very human approach is very evident in the family spirit of the Salesians. This is the way he wanted it. This is the way it is. The Salesian experience isn't learned — it's lived.

BC wins in NCAA; PC with NIT upset

Compiled from Wires

For Boston College and Providence College the best may be yet to come. For Holy Cross and UConn, it was just a disappointing end to a long season.

Boston College, the New England representative of the NCAA tournament, defeated Furman, 82-76. Will Morrison scored 14 of his 20 points in the second half, leading the Eagles.

The victory advanced BC to the regional semifinals in Providence, against Kansas State, which stunned Penn 69-62.

In NIT action, Providence, behind the phenomenal shooting of sophomore guard Joe Hassett, upset nationally ranked Clemson, 91-86. Hasset hit his first nine shots, all from the 20-25 foot range and finished with 24 points.

Barnes Hauptfuhrer and Mark Hartkey each scored 18 points to lead the Princeton Tigers to an 84-63 victory over Holy Cross Sunday.

A 13-5 burst at the start of the second half triggered the Tigers to a runaway 50-32 margin with six minutes gone.

Mike Dunleavy's outside shooting and Alex English's inside work carried South Carolina to a 71-59 victory over Connecticut.

John Murphy was heads above all other performers in the first half of Saturday's game. The big man scored the first nine points for the Minutemen and 18 of their first 24, but was never able to score again.

Oklahoma takes second Iowa wins mat Nationals;

By JOHN BOCK

PRINCETON, N.J. — Eleven wrestling championships were determined Saturday night within the confines of Jadwin Gymnasium. Ten College wrestlers won the right to be called a National Champion for 1975 and the University of Iowa won its first title ever and became only the fourth team in the 45 year history of NCAA wrestling to take the team title away from the Big 8 Conference schools.

The Hawkeyes, coached by Gary Kurdlemeier and 1972 Olympic Gold Medalist Dan Gable, became only the second Big 10 team to win the NCAA team title. Defending Champions Oklahoma finished with 78 points, well behind the Hawk's 94.

Oklahoma State edged Iowa State for third place while Lehigh was the East's only top ten representative at fifth place. Wisconsin, Oregon State, Cal Poly, Northwestern, and Purdue rounded out the top ten.

At 118 pounds Oklahoma's Shawn Garel surprised the whole weight class by exceeding his fifth seed and beating third seeded Jim Brown of Michigan.

In what was easily the best match of the evening senior John Fritz of Penn State University upset two time defending champion Pat Milkovich of Michigan State 3-1 in overtime.

The two grapplers had wrestled to a draw in the dual match this season but Fritz came roaring out at the whistle and used his super fast duck under to get two ahead but gave up two at the end of the first period as Milkovich reversed him. Milkovich quickly escaped at the start of the second period and took Fritz down with a snap and go and rode him out. Fritz repeated this performance in the third period and tied the score at 5-5. In regulation Fritz scored an escape and TD in the third period to give him the victory.

Bruins, Celtics sink foes

BOSTON [AP] — Rookie Earl Anderson enjoyed his best game as a Bruin with a goal and two assists Sunday night as Boston beat the St. Louis Blues 7-2 in a National Hockey League game.

Bobby Orr, with a goal and an assist, and Phil Esposito with a goal and two assists, continued their duel for the league scoring honors. Orr has 124 points, Esposito has 120.

Hank Nowak, who came from Detroit in the same trade with Anderson, and Johnny Bucyk also had goals for Boston.

BOSTON [AP] — Dave Cowens set up John Havlicek for a layup and sank a basket and a free throw himself in the last two minutes Sunday to lead the Boston Celtics to a 99-94 victory over the Houston Rockets in a foul-ridden National Basketball Association game.

Cowens fed Havlicek going along the baseline for the basket that gave the Celtics a 93-90 lead.

Then, after a Rudy Gamjanovich basket for Houston, Cowens rolled in for a layup and was fouled. He sank the free throw to make it 96-92, an insurmountable lead.

NE matmen look respectable as Iowa captures Nationals

By JOHN BOCK

PRINCETON, N.J. — Dan Gable's Iowa Hawkeyes proved the worth of their season long national ranking as they took the 45th Annual NCAA Wrestling Championships in Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium with a team score of 94 points. The Hawks crowned back-to-back champs in 150 pounder Chuck Yagla and 158 pounder Dan Holm while Chris Campbell at 177, and Greg Stevens at 190, finished second, with heavyweight John Bowlsby garnering third.

The NEUWA entries in tournament all wrestled well but either ran out of gas or ran into too much talent. Dennis Fenton, UMass heavyweight New England Champ, was the only New Englander to wrestle a "rat-tail" preliminary bout and drew unseeded John Cole of Arizona State. Fenton scored late in the first period with his patented single leg takedown and led 2-0 at the beginning of the second period. Cole won the toss and elected to take the top position where he countered Fenton's attempts at escaping and subsequently threw in a leg ride and worked Fenton to his back for a fall in 4:19.

Cole drew fifth seeded Don Mayorga of Hofstra (25-2 on the season and Middle Atlantic Conference Champ) and was pinned in 1:31. With Cole out of the tourney, Fenton was ineligible for consolation wrestle backs.

URI's three time New England Champ Scott Pucino achieved the eighth seed in the 126 pound weight class and made it all the way to the quarter-finals where he lost 14-3 to two time defending National Champ Pat Milkovich of Michigan State. In the first round Pucino decisioned Joe Kittel of Oregon State, 11-2, and then blasted Oklahoma State's John Powell, 10-4, before losing to Milkovich. In the consolations, Pucino lost an 8-2 decision to Big 8 Champ Kenny Nelson of Oklahoma University.

Boston University's Sev Popolizio found himself riding the top seed's berth after beating the man who beat the man in the 134 pound class. Clarion State's Don Rohn was national champ at 134 in 1973, third in 1974 and top seed in 1975. In the first round he lost a 9-6 decision to UCLA's Steve Pilcher in the waning seconds of the bout. After knocking off Louisiana State's John Schutte, 6-4, Popolizio outlasted Pilcher, 8-4, to put himself in the quarter-finals where he lost to the eventual runner-up Brian Beatson of Oklahoma University. In his first wrestle back Popolizio lost a 4-1 decision to California State's Lloyd Ford.

University of Connecticut's Scott Casper won his first round match with a 2-1 squeaker over Dan Elliot of Oregon State but lost in the next round to sixth-placer Alan Housner of Purdue. Casper advanced a round in the consolation bracket by defeating Kansas State's Bruce Randall 6-4. Dean Dixon of Oregon University finally stopped Casper with a pin at 4:19 in the next round.

The only other New England Champ to achieve any success was BU's Jeff Lambert, who bested Miami of Ohio's Paul Schonauer in 3:38, before falling 26-9 to Montclair State's Division III Champ and seventh seed Nabil Guketlov. Lambert was robbed over a possible pin with both Guketlov and PennState's Wayne Packer as he toosed both of them on their backs with a head lock. Packer was so flat one could see the sweat from his back on the mat but again Lambert only got the near fall points instead of the pin. Packer rallied to beat Lambert 8-1 in overtime.

Top four victorious in NCAA

Led by unbeaten Indiana . . . easily — and revenge-bent UCLA — which did it the hard way — the nation's top four teams are still in the running for college basketball's top price — the National Collegiate championship.

Top-ranked Indiana, runnerup UCLA, third-rated Louisville and No. 4 Maryland came through Saturday with victories that sent them to the various NCAA regionals next Thursday and Saturday.

Cambodia important to US security, says Ford

Sees war upholding domino theory

Compiled From Wires

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — President Ford, citing developments he said "to some extent tend to validate the so-called domino theory," declared last night that the fall of Cambodia "could affect the national security of the United States."

In one of his strongest statements to date on the deteriorating situation in Indochina, Ford told a news conference that the United States must maintain its agreements with its Asian allies.

The President, on a St. Patrick's Day visit to the University of Notre Dame, also said "the prospects for peace are slowly but surely improving," and called on Americans not to slip into the "splendid selfishness" of a new isolationism.

At an early-evening news conference on campus, Ford said "I think it is" when asked if the survival of Lon Nol's Cambodia is essential to the United States.

"I cannot help but notice that since the military situation in Cambodia has become very serious and since the North Vietnamese have launched a very serious offensive against Cambodia," American allies have begun to have second thoughts about U.S. committments, in the Far East, he said.

"I think these potential developments tend to validate the so-called Domino Theory," he said.

"I think these potential developments tend to validate the so called Domino Theory," he said. "It could affect the security of the United States."

Asked about an announcement that government auditors found Cambodia had been shortchanged $21.5 million in arms aid, and whether this was a device to "get around congressional appropriations," Ford said:

"I was informed last Friday of what appears to be very sloppy bookkeeping in the Department of Defense. I do not condone it. I will not allow it again.

"I don't think it was any malicious action. If the money was approved and is available, it will be used."

Ford also disclosed in the session with newsmen on the University of Notre Dame campus that he has discussed with Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller the possibility of expanding the investigation of the Central Intelligence Agency to encompass allegations the CIA plotted the assassination of foreign leaders.

He termed the assassination allegations "a serious matter" and said that in the days ahead, "I will decide the best course of action" to take in answering the charges.

Ford said: "This administration does not condone under any circumstance any assassination attempt."

CAMBODIA AID OK'd

Meanwhile, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday voted 9 to 7 to provide Cambodia with $155.5 million in emergency military and economic assistance through June 30.

Clerical error gives Cambodia $21.5 million

WASHINGTON [UPI] — While Congress resisted President Ford's request for more military aid to Cambodia, the administration announced yesterday it had discovered a clerical error that will give the war-torn nation an extra $21.5 million worth of weapons and ammunition without congressional approval.

State Department spokesman Robert L. Funseth said government auditors have discovered that Cambodia was overcharged by $21.5 million for the military materials it received in fiscal 1974.

Thus, he said, the United States will repay Cambodia with weapons and ammunition valued at that amount.

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, told newsmen in South Bend, Ind., that the announcements that the United States owes Cambodia $21.5 million "does not change the President's $222 million request for extra military aid for Phnom Pehn."

The announcement came as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee met to act on a proposal for $125 million in additional funds for Cambodia, far less than the $222 million which Ford requested. But even the smaller amount was doubtful to win the approval of Democrats in Congress.

Told of the administration announcement as he was entering the committee meeting, Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott said the State Department should be directed to look for other similar errors to provide more aid to Cambodia.

"Well tell them to go back and look for more," he said. "Maybe that will solve it."

Speaker Carl Albert said in a broadcast interview PST "Washington Straight Talk" he doubted whether Congress would approve any additional aid for Cambodia or South Vietnam.

"There isn't any use in pouring useless money into a rat hole, as I see it," Albert said, in addition to the "whole philosophy" of such aid has changed since the early days of the Vietnam War.

Communists batter last Cambodian army outpost on Mekong River

PHNOM PENH [UPI] — Communist rebels tightened the noose yesterday around battered Neak Luong, the government's last outpost on the Mekong river, 35 miles southeast of Phnom Penh.

Cambodian military sources said the rebels had infiltrated some sections of the strategic ferry town and defenders had been unable to expel them.

Nearly 50,000 persons have been jammed into a shrunken two-mile defense perimeter around Neak Luong and rebel gunners have been pounding them with up to 500 rounds of mortar and artillery fire daily.

As many as 200 dead and wounded have been tallied each day, and helicopters have had difficulties evacuating the wounded, field officers said.

Officials in Phnom Penh described the Neak, Luong situation as critical, and said that loss of the government river enclave between Phnom Penh and the Vietnamese border would free more insurgents for the siege of the capital.

In Phnom Penh, residents got ready for an expected rain storm of rockets to mark today's fifth anniversay of the ouster of exiled Prince Norodom Sihanouk.

Sihanouk, titular head of insurgent forces surrounding the beleaguered capital, was ousted from office March 18, 1970, and the Communist-led rebels have marked the anniversay spectacularly in recent years.

Unidentified youths scattered leaflets saying rebel forces would hit the capital with at least 500 rockets to mark the anniversary. The leaflets supposedly were written by rebel commanders, but there was no way to verify their authenticity.

Spotter planes reported sighting supply concentrations around the capital possibly intended for Tuesday's action.

The American airlift of DC8 cargo jets took advantage of light opposition to fly in 19 loads of rice totalling 857 tons.

Only eight 107 mm Chinese-made rockets hit the city and the airport during the daylight hours yesterday. One of the rockets exploded within 30 yards of an aircraft under contract to the U.S. Embassy. Passengers took cover and there were no injuries.

Two flights by a French military transport plane took out about 130 French residents, including all but two officials of the French embassy.

Ethiopia to receive ammunition from US

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The State department announced yesterday the United States will sell Ethiopia up to $7 million worth of ammunition.

The action was in response to a request from the Ethiopian provisional military government last month for ammunition to assist it in quelling a rebellion in Eritrea.

It was reported that Ethiopia was seeking $20 million worth of additional military equipment and ammunition.

State Department spokesman Robert L. Funseth said the decision to sell Ethiopia the $7 million worth of ammunition was made because the United States has been virtually the sole supplier of Ethiopia's military needs for more than 20 years and the United States "did not believe that it could be totally unresponsive to the most recent request."

Funseth said he could not say what the Ethiopian government had officially requested but the $7 million decision was less than had been sought.

He said the United States had expressed to the Ethiopian leaders its strong hope that the two sides in the Eritrean conflict would soon begin negotiations to end the fighting and find an acceptable solution.

He added, "In this respect, the United States notes some encouraging indications of progress toward meaningful negotiations between the Ethiopian authorities and the Eritrean Liberation Front and the Popular Liberation Front."

Offshore oil ruled federal right

Decision clears way for new drilling

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court yesterday cleared the way for development of abundant offshore oil by declaring the federal government has exclusive title to seabeds beyond the three-mile limit in the Atlantic Ocean.

The justices, in an 8-0 ruling with Justice William O. Douglas still hospitalized, declared that 13 Atlantic Coast states have no title to seabeds of the Continental Shelf, which extends more than 100 miles out to sea at some points.

The Court agreed with a special master it appointed to hear evidence and make recommendations in the dispute, who concluded the coastal states gave up any claims to seabed ownership when they joined the union.

The Interior Department immediately announced it will resume plans to lease 12,000 square miles of seabeds between Long Island and Cape Hatteras. Geological surveys indicate the area may contain up to 8 billion barrels of crude oil and 44 trillion cubic feet of gas.

Oil companies will be asked to submit initial development plans within the next few days. Bids will be let within a year, a spokesman said, and gasoline and other products should begin reaching consumers in the early 1980s.

It is uncertain how much oil lies in the nearly 200,000 square miles of Atlantic seabed. Initial surveys estimate that the Baltimore Canyon trough alone may contain up to 8 billion barrels of crude.

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the Court, noted that Monday's ruling follows a 25-year history of offshore oil decisions dating back to a dispute over California's claims to seabed ownership in 1947. In that case, the Court ruled that states control lands only to the low-tide mark.

In 1953, Congress extended state jurisdiction to the three-mile limit.

The coastal states claimed in oral arguments last month that their colonial charters, or in Florida's case its 1868 Constitution, gave them title to seabeds beyond three miles.

Rejecting that argument, White quoted from an earlier ruling which said "the marginal sea is a national, not a state concern."

"National interests, national responsibilities, national concerns are involved," he said. "The problems of commerce, national defense, relations with other powers, war and peace focus here. National rights must therefore be paramount in that area."

Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton issued a statement saying in part that the decision "allows the department to explore and develop the outer continental shelf in an orderly and environmentally sound manner. I want to assure the governors of our coastal states that we will continue our policy of early and frequent discussions with them as we proceed toward the development of this precious resource."

Gov. James Longley of Maine, one of the states involved in the suit, said he was "extremely disappointed" by the Court's decision.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire said the ruling "is exactly what we expected" and urged the federal government to move quickly ahead to let private enterprise develop the offshore resources.

States involved in the case were Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida. Connecticut was not involved because it borders Long Island Sound, considered an inland waterway.

Parade in Dublin, Ireland, yesterday shows thousands of residents watching the event on St. Patrick's Day. Explosion rocked the main jail in Dublin yesterday in an apparent IRA escape attempt.

State still ranks high in welfare benefits, despite cutback plans

BOSTON [AP] - Despite Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' plans to tighten the state's $1 billion annual welfare program, Massachusetts will continue to rank as one of the nation's most generous states.

The governor's welfare task force is studying ways of saving money, chiefly by squeezing eligibility standards for General Relief and Medicaid payments.

But according to administration officials familiar with that task force, its long-range objective will be to contain the burgeoning growth of welfare expenditures rather than to lower costs by drastically reducing benefits.

Federal statistics show that even if expansion of welfare programs is slowed down, the commonwealth will continue to rank far ahead of all but three or four other states in welfare benefits, which are paid through several different programs.

"Massachusetts has a different kind of social climate than many other states," said one state official on the task force. "There's a concern with equity and social policy that isn't likely to change."

Dukakis himself said last week that Massachusetts should continue to rank high in welfare benefits-but not number one.

"There have to be certain restraints in how generous the state can be," he said. "That doesn't mean we should look to Mississippi. We should be in the top dozen."

State says teachers qualify for benefits

BOSTON [AP] - School personnel without tenure of 12-month contracts qualify for Special Unemployment Assistance, according to the state Division of Employment Security.

John D. Crosier, director, ruled yesterday that these teachers and other school personnel can collect unemployment benefits during school vacations, if they are otherwise eligible.

Basic criteria for eligibility, he said, is that the individual has earned at least $1,200 in the prior 12 months and is ready and available for suitable work. This eligibility is under a new federal law and benefits will be paid from federal funds.

Maximum single benefits are $95 per week with additional allowances for dependents, up to a ceiling of $143.

While Crosier announced that teachers in the specified categories will qualify for benefits, he also said that each application for benefits will be judged separately.

The director said he was not yet entirely certain whether, in specific instances, a teacher will be held to be available for another job if he applies for benefits in July with every intention of returning to the classroom in September.

news summary

Power shift studied

LISBON [UPI] - The 24-man revolutionary council created after last week's abortive coup met yesterday to discuss a pending cabinet reshuffle which politicians said would shift greater power to the Communists.

Sources close to the newly created revolutionary council said a communique to this effect would be issued "shortly". They said the country's two conservative parties - the Christian Democratic and Social Democratic Center parties - also would be dealt with in the same announcement.

Politicians said the meeting of the revolutionary council would result in greater Communist influence in the government at the expense of the socialists and liberals and the exclusion of several so-called moderate military officers, whom western diplomats call leftists.

Kissinger sees Sadat

ASWAN, Egypt [UPI] - Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met President Anwar Sadat yesterday with Israeli proposals for more Egyptian concessions as the price for a new withdrawal in the Sinai desert.

A senior official with Kissinger said there was slow and steady progress in the talks but conceded the going as tough and the progress might not be enough.

One official said the negotiations could be a "pain in the neck."

CIA probe expands

WASHINGTON [UPI] - The Rockefeller commission expanded its investigation of the CIA yesterday to include a limited probe of allegations the spy agency plotted the assassination of foreign leaders.

For the present the panel headed by Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller will limit itself to any domestic activities related to assassination plots. But White House sources said that President Ford was considering changing the commission's mandate to cover the entire area of assassinations.

NY doctors strike

NEW YORK [UPI] - Thousands of doctors protesting long working hours-sometimes up to 50 at a stretch-went on strike yesterday against 21 hospitals in New York City.

The American Medical Association said it was the first major doctors' strike in the nation's history.

New trial sought

WASHINGTON [UPI] — John D. Ehrlichman asked yesterday for a new trial in the White House "plumbers" case on grounds he was not permitted to claim national security as a defense and President Richard M. Nixon did not testify.

Tension mounts as Amherst Towing steps up pace from the UMass community. People who bought stickers for certain lots couldn't find parking places and they were angry," he said.

If someone buys a parking sticker, Joyce continued, they have a right to expect that someone without a sticker is not going to take their place. When this does not happen, Joyce said, "we get a lot of complaints so we have to do something about it."

According to Bob Kittle, director of Transportation and Parking, the transportation and parking council, a group of students, faculty, and administration recommended that towing be reinstituted. The council decided that cars parked in lots for which they had no sticker were interfering with the parking privileges of those who had purchased stickers, said Kittle.

There is also pressure by those who have stickers to enforce parking regulations. A resident of Washington who has a permit to park in Lot 50 said, "I'm not against towing. I pay to park in Lot 50 and I want to park there. I have had a sticker in Lot 50 for four years and until they increased the towing, I could never find a parking place.

Why is Amherst towing always called? Each year, the University selects one towing company and agrees that if it maintains certain standards, the University will only call that company for towing, according to Jake Bishop of the accounting department.

The selection process begins in December of each year when the accounting department sends out a request for a bid to all towing companies who have expressed an interest to tow for the university in the past, said Bishop.

The University asks for information as to the number of trucks, the hours available for towing, the size and specifics of the storage lot and the charge for towing and storage, said Bishop. It also asks for a copy of the license and proof of insurance, he added.

"What we are interested in is that the company be available 24 hours a day, that they allow ample time for picking up towed cars; that the storage lot be large enough so that cars are not damaged coming and going, and that they be securely guarded at all times," said Bishop.

Last December, Bishop said, bid requests were sent out to Cal Sunoco, Amherst Auto Body and Amherst Towing. These were the only companies that were thought to be interested in towing for the University and who are capable of meeting its standards, he said.

This year only Amherst towing responded to the request and their bid was accepted, said Bishop.

Bishop emphasized that no contract as such exists between Amherst Towing and the University. The contract is between the owner of a car being towed and the towing company. The University is simply a supervisor in the process.

The only agreement between UMass and Amherst Towing is that if Amherst Towing will abide by its bid, the University will only call them to tow illegally parked cars, Bishop added.

Bishop said the agreement was not written down "but it is clearly implied."

He also said that no demands concerning the conduct of the employees of Amherst towing were made in the agreement but that if the alleged assault on the Collegian photographer proved to be fact, he was certain those involved would be called before University officials.

The owner of Cal Sunoco, one of the three companies that received a bid request said the reason he did not respond to the request was simply that he "did not need the aggravation."

"My main reason for not reapplying is the attitude of those people who have their cars towed. I have a repair service that would suffer from the ill feelings and bad publicity that is involved," said Cal.

He also said there are only four local firms with appropriate license. Of the four, Amherst towing does not have the other aspects of business that would suffer because of the towing. He seemed to feel neither Amherst Auto Body nor Plaza Shell, would touch the bid for the same reasons.

The owner of Plaza Shell said he would not consider towing for the University. "I wouldn't touch it for $500 a car," he said.

University," Neumann said.

"I think because I did not specifically word it the way you wanted it, you're not satisfied," Bromery responded. "As a result of some of the stuff you put in the Hampshire Gazette some of the students are going to be hurt down there."

On Suzuki's grievance, Bromery declined specific comment, saying it is a "personnel matter." Suzuki, former administrative Dean in the School of Education first brought questions of funds misuse in the school to the attention of University authorities last October.

"There is a problem," Bromery said. "There have been some administrators in positions of accountability who did not live up to that accountability." He said he still believes only one or two individuals personally pocketed money, and most of the abuses were administrative errors - using the wrong money for the wrong program.

But the Chancellor added that he has "never been briefed ... nor have I got a piece of paper" of audit information about the School from Johnson.

"I don't think the federal people would have gone and got a subpoena for the records if there weren't something there," he said.

The School has been the subject of FBI and HEW investigations into allegations of misuse of funds at the School.

Smith presents Kroll reading

The third lecture in the 1975 Vanderbilt Lecture Series will be given at Smith College by Judith Kroll tonight in the Alumnae House at 8:00 p.m. She will give a poetry reading from "In the Temperate Zone."

Kroll was graduated from Smith in 1964 and received a Ph.D. degree from Yale University, where she was Woodrow Wilson Fellow. Kroll's first book of poems is "In the Temperate Zone" (1973). Several of the poems are based on her travels in India while visiting her husband's family. She currently is on leave from Vassar College, working on new poems with the help of a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

The public is welcome to attend.

Voter registration

Voter registration tables will be open today, on the concourse area of the Campus Center between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. All non-registered students are urged to register for the upcoming April 8 elections.

England's Open University topic of Internationai Programs lecture

Naomi McIntosh, pro vice chancellor, Open University, Great Britain, will deliver the International Programs office lecture at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, tonight at 8 p.m.

She will discuss the Open University as an access to higher education for non-traditional students in England. The theme of the lecture is "it's never too late to learn."

The event takes place at Herter Hall, 6th floor lounge. A film and question and answer period are also scheduled.

What is the Open University?

It is a program which helps students obtain degrees in a non-traditional way. It opened in 1971 and is centered at Milton Keynes, a new city. About 50,000 students are now enrolled.

"The principal point," said McIntosh, "is that the students are adults studying part-time and that a large majority have jobs.

Study is home-based. The university's physical plant is set up for faculty and administration. Course materials are produced there and mailed to the students. Television and radio programs are an integral part of the university in cooperation with the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Students must earn six credits for an "ordinary" degree, eight credits for an "honors" degree. Twelve hours work a week for an academic year 32-36 weeks long is worth a single credit. Only a few students attempt to earn two credits a year. The program is primarily one of liberal arts. Specialized vocational areas are left to the polytechnic schools.

The Open University concept evolved in the mid 1960's as a result of an increasing awareness that large numbers of able people, through no fault of their own, were undereducated, said McIntosh. Undereducated?

The British educational system is one which, through a series of tests at various levels of age and competency, sorts out students so that only about 22 per cent actually complete "grammar" school at age 18. This small percentage yields those who become college students in the American sense.

The Open University "busted into" the traditional structure, according to McIntosh. It helps people who may have been sorted out at an early level as a result of hardship, the death of a parent, a divorce or other problems.

Students who are accepted pay about 10 per cent of the cost of the heavily subsidized program, or about $[illegible] a year per credit.

McIntosh said high standards are maintained. She said the question of innovation is a "hot one" in Great Britain, but standards cannot be innovatory. There is, however, another reason the Open University is one of quality standards.

"We are trying to get to the disadvantaged and it is exactly for that reason that we cannot afford to give them something second rate," McIntosh explained. "For many it is the most fantastic dream to get a degree."

McIntosh expects the open concept to have great impact on the Third World. She is currently concerned with the problems of how to use the techniques in places like the Middle East. She will soon visit Iran to help set up a similar open university.

McIntosh will end her stay at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst in a week.

Students organize to acquit Daniels

UMass students in coalition with the Friends of Belchertown Association and the Boston 8 are volunteering their own time and effort to bring about the acquittal of Russell Daniels. Daniels has been the victim of what is considered "the greatest miscarriage of justice in Massachusetts criminal history."

Since public awareness is of vital importance the student action group is sponsoring "Russell Daniels [illegible]" tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Engineering East auditorium. The program will include a showing of the award winning film "[illegible] in Norfolk Prison" as well as a panel session held by Dr. Benjamin Ricci, president of Belchertown Friends, [illegible] Daniels, and Jessica Kites of the Boston 8.

A UMass group brought about the transfer of Daniels from Norfolk Prison to Belchertown State School last year after his conviction of second degree murder. The decision has since been overturned by the Massachusetts State Supreme Court of Appeals. The only evidence supplied by the prosecution was a signed confession which Daniels could neither read nor understand. Daniels is 36 years old, black, and retarded.

A new group of students as well as those involved last year are now working to raise money for the coming retrial. The outcome of this trial will include decisions of national importance. Legal questions surrounding retardation that have never been raised before will be answered in a court of law.

Internships offer leadership practice in psychology

The Internship in Student Development, under the direction of Dr. Theodore Slovin and Allen Greenbaum, is a program which affords about 15 undergraduates the opportunity of theory and practice in discussion leadership.

The 12-credit program involves seminars in theory and the actual weekly team teaching of two discussion sections of Psychology 2018 — Psych of Adjustment which is primarily intended to help freshmen increase their communication and life-planning skills.

Applications will be available until March 21 at 102 Berkshire House (Student Development Center) and 430 Machmer Hall (Classes).

Put up or shut up!

By MIKE IZDEPSKI

> "The constructive work of the world is done by an appallingly small percentage of the general population. The rest simply don't give a damn...."
> James Michener

You don't need a crystal ball to see what UMass students are in for this coming September: Freshmen will have the privilege of contributing a hefty $190 Universal Fee towards the Gage Retirement Fund, while skyrocketing off campus rents cause married and other financially less gifted students to pack their bags and head for the hills. Tuition next semester may well be twice as much as it is now, while Whitmore doubles its professional staff and assigns each student his-her own security guard "for protection." Amherst Towing will still be having its hayday, but now at a new "student special" rate of $30 per tow job (storage going extra of course), and if we're real lucky, the Campus Center Fee will go up "due to inflation," or, most hilariously, the price of Bluewall beer. Poor UMies.

Poor UMies like hell! For if any or all of the above should really happen, it would be the fault of nobody else but the students themselves and the seemingly insurmountable amount of apathy they have shown in face of some of the most crucial and financially consequential issues to surface this campus in years.

All this bull about "screwing" the students! Well, if we masses are going to sit on our backsides while world-knows-who is picking our pockets and trying to tell us what is best for us, if the extent of our action remains limited to blasting officials with a barrage of four letter words, then we deserve to pay and might as well place our (and our parents') wallets and checkbooks into the custody of Wood & Associates or Amherst Towing.

There's a lot of complaining to be found these days in the Collegian's Letters-to-the-Editor section on such noble issues as world starvation or the naughtiness of graffiti in UMass restrooms.

But just look for some comments on something as "unimportant" as the "Universal Fee," and you'll be at a loss!

Many of the letters the Collegian receives are written just for the sake of bickering. Saying this or that "sucks" is so easy, any moron can do it, but getting really involved in working towards lasting solutions is quite another story.

One thing many students forget is that while the Collegian can direct attention to problems, it cannot directly solve them. That has to be up to the people in government, in our case the Student Government Association.

STUDENT UNITY

Yet student senators receive virtually no mail at all from their constituents. Even the Senate Speaker Cindy McGrath admits, though she gets around 20 letters each week, that only 2 or 3 come from students with some gripe or suggestion, the rest are from university officials and other non-student groups.

Why no letters? Simple: you can't write to someone you don't know and most students simply don't know their SGA representatives. After all, only about 40 per cent of the dorm students voted in the last Senate elections and at least 25 dorms didn't even have an election, because there was only one candidate dumb enough to volunteer for the seat. No wonder then that a lot of kooks are sitting in the Senate today: where there is no competition, there is no selectivity (an old Darwin rule).

This in turn is reflected in the number of different people involved in the Senate's work: Only about ⅛ of the Senate's 116 members took part in working out the well over 100 bills introduced since last semester. Of these bills over 25 per cent were introduced by either the President or the Speaker.

It's too late to run for the Senate now, the deadline for handing in the nomination papers has long passed. But you can still play an important role in deciding whether or not the 44 seats up for grabs again should go to members of the "silent, passive majority" by casting your ballot today and tomorrow.

Commuter students are usually the loudest screamers when it comes to the question of rent control. Too bad all that huffed up wind remains just that: less than 1 per cent of the 8000 eligible commuters voted in the Executive council elections two weeks ago.

Almost 40 students are running for a seat in the Amherst Town Meeting, they desperately need your support. Even if you are currently registered to vote in another town or city, register today at one of the tables about 2 minutes and gives you a decisive say in what goes on around here. You live in Amherst, so why not vote in Amherst? Important as the local elections of your hometown may seem to you, Amherst needs you more!

Remember: rent control will extend to dorms also if imposed. So all you dorm folks in districts 2 and 3 get with it, register today and vote in the right people on April 8!

Finally, get your signatures on those petitions floating around campus to throw Amherst Towing off of UMass parking lots! There are plenty of petitions in the Collegian office, if you can't find any in the dorms, so drop by!

To sum it up: there are three things you had better do today:

1) in the Campus Center — register to vote in the Amherst Town Meeting elections

2) in your dorm — cast your ballot in the Student Senate elections

3) in your dorm or at the Collegian office — sign the Get-rid-of-Amherst-Towing petition

Of course you might decide to stretch out in front of the Campus Pond and take in some sun instead. Just don't forget that more than just a sunburn will be waiting for you when you return to UMie-land in September. In fact, hell can get pretty hot...

Tales of majestic mischief

And in the beginning there was the 22 million dollar Waffle.

And John Porker looked out over the powerless masses, and then up at the concrete Creation, and he saw that it was good.

And on the first day, with the help of his two court jesters, Winsey and Linchester, he summoned his faithful knights (they had all gone to knight school together) by the names of Amaco and Stiffellow, from the township of Hartford Connecticut. And then the three had perused Porker's new kingdom, taking a close look at the tax system which was levied against the subjects to sustain the palace. And they saw that it was good.

And on the second day the trio decided to assess the wealth of the kingdom over which they ruled. They found that the tariffs paid by the peasants together with the profits of the burgeoning businesses, which the peasants patronized, made more than enough to keep the palace operating as well as pay off the palace investors of long ago. And they saw that this was good.

They also found that visiting dignitaries could eat well at the luxurious Top of the Palace, while the peasants would drink beer and beg for free peanuts and stale Slim Jims. The Slim Jims and peanuts were costing too much however. So to cut back on the cheaper fare, it was ordered that the meat be taken out of the spaghetti (a favorite of those peasants who could squeeze in an occasional TOP meal) and that 11 oz. cups of beer (another peasant favorite) be sold at 12 oz. prices. And as a final measure Porker declared, "Let them eat soybean!" So the tuna fish and chicken dinners were cut with soybean filler.

And on the third day, they assessed the work-force of their kingdom. They saw that peasants worked for pittance wages, in poor conditions, and with no job security. They noticed that female workers had it worst of all — with unequal pay and little job advancement. And they saw that this was good.

But Porker decided that there was one too many workers, so without reasons given, a serf named Tony was delivered a parchment scroll which read, PUNCH OUT PERMANENTLY!"

And on the fourth day a celebration was planned. Stiffellow, whose daughter was to be wed in the palace, summoned friends and family to the gala festivities. The wine and other spirits flowed freely, and crab, lobster and other delectible delights were served by the patient peasants. It was a regal affair quite fitting for a princess. And Stiffellow, seeing that the bill was great, blocked it from his mind so that it would not ruin his good fortune. The guests went home full and content, and the peasants went home tired and hungry, not realizing to exactly what extent they had contributed to the affair.

And on the fifth day, a slow and steady murmuring could be heard among the peasants in the palace, a murmuring which gained momentum, spreading out into the residential areas surrounding the palace. Workers were angry that their peer Tony had been ordered to leave the kingdom. Everyone was outraged at the fact that they played "father of the bride" by financing a wedding to which they weren't even invited! They were especially angry about the fact that this was supposed to be THEIR palace, run by THEIR monies, and with THEIR Board of Governors in democratic control, (the king would usually snicker at any decision that the Board would make).

On the sixth day, King Porker decided that he had to respond to the clammering out in the street with some decisive action. With trumpets blaring, flanked with Stiffellow and Amaco on either side, Porker came out onto the balcony overlooking the disgruntled masses.

"As long as this is my Palace, serf Tony will never work here again!" And then he blared "The more you peasants get, the more you want!"

Porker and his cohorts then turned abruptly, and filed back to their eighth floor sanctuary.

And on the seventh day the peasants stormed the Palace. They demanded democratic control over the management and operations of THEIR palace, with non-ripoff enterprises, cooperative services including child care, people's art workshops and displays (before the coup, posters and notices of cultural events had been banned from most areas). They made it an exciting, colorful place to be for a variety of activities. Before it had been a place to get drunk and forget life, now it was a place to enjoy and share.

And the King and his crew slipped through the emergency exit, out to the Campus Center Garage where a helicopter was waiting to depart. Perhaps they would go to some other kingdom. But perhaps they won't be able to find one that will take them.

A "Peace" of the action for everyone

Adjunct White House Press Secretary Bribs Winwade announced last week, in a long expected statement, that the United States would "take care" of Iran's arms problems in the next few years. Elaborating on just what exactly this meant, Winwade revealed that the U.S. had just agreed, among other things to sell Iran six battleship destroyers, twelve nuclear powered submarines, five hundred phantom jets, a complete multibillion dollar intercontinental ballistic missile system (ABM), nine trillion bullets not to mention passage right-through the Mississippi River and some swamp land in Florida.

When asked just what in hell the small rich Persian nation needed this incredible amount of military hardware for, Winwade replied that the hugh arms stockpiles were "necessary for the peace and stability of the area. With the Iranians that strong, those bastard Afghanistanians will have to think twice before starting anything!"

The Shah of Iran was even more explicit. Through his emissaries he let it be known that unless the border with Russia was fortified beyond comprehension, then no Persian child could ever hope to sleep peacefully without the ominous possibility of being blown to bits at any moment. The arms also provide the material for a planned invasion of the Isle of Madagascar off the African Coast, for which the Shah has been lusting these many years.

This hugh arms deal has highlighted the U.S. foreign policy of late — to secure its influence around the world by arming every nation to the teeth in its battles with real or imaginary enemies, even against each other. This explains the series of arms sales over the past several months with different nations. Among them are:

1. Iceland — four massive aircraft carriers and nine billion dollars worth of flame throwers and anti-tank guns in an all out effort against its arch enemy: Greenland.

2. Greenland — one hundred thousand tanks and fifty thousand machine guns, not to mention the population of Nova Scotia, to do battle with those Icelandic swine.

3. Lapland Freedom Fighters — six battery powered reindeer equipped with remote control BB guns, to secure their own homeland.

4. Bolivia — nineteen battleships and 64 submarines, not to mention a harbor dredging unit. This, despite the fact that Bolivia is completely landlocked and will have to rent coastal space from Venezuela.

5. Venezuela — fifty billion dollars worth of harbor mines and torpedoes to be used on the Bolivian navy.

6. Canada — three trillion dollars worth of border fortifications, to keep the barbarians out.

7. Egypt — six hundred custom designed tanks with nine different "reverse" gear speeds and two "forward" ones in case the attack is from the rear.

8. Poland — six thousand bayonets, complete with instruction manuals.

9. Saudi Arabia — sixty camels armed with bazookas attached to each hump, fatigues disguised to resemble sand bags, and a thousand white flags.

10. Peru — two hundred U-2 submarines, that were lying in cold storage from the last war, especially effective against fishing boats.

Winwade stated recently that only with this policy of spreading the arms wealth around the underprivileged nations of the world, who have been deprived for far too long of the vaunted ability to blow each other into smithereens, can the Nixonian goal of "Peace In Our Times" be truly realized.

God Save Henry Kissinger and the Bomb-Shelter Industry.

Commentary - on energy

Technology the ultimate answer

By NORMAN ROBINSON

For thousands of years, the dominant employment of "mankind" was agriculture. Industrialization, as we know it today, has only emerged in the last two hundred years. But the importance of industry is phenomenal. The whole world greatly relies on industry for progress and growth.

Unlike agriculture, which doesn't really harm the earth, industrialization requires great amounts of raw materials to be extracted, of which nothing is put back into the earth. How long can this one-way street continue?

In 1850, it was estimated that in the United States human and animal power contributed to 63 per cent of total work output, and the earth's fuels only accounted for 7 per cent. However, today animal and human power only contribute about 1.5 per cent, and the earth's fuels are relied upon for over 90 per cent of the total work output. Thus one can see a very heavy reliance on our raw materials for energy. But many of our resources are rapidly diminishing, and many others are unfeasible. For instance, if we reverted back to coal, pollution would be widespread, the environment would be damaged, and more important to our future, the increased carbon dioxide would exert a greenhouse effect on the earth. As a result of this the earth would warm up more and more, and deglaciation could take place within a hundred years, not the usual thousands. If the Antartic ice cap melted, the ocean water level would rise around 200 feet all over the world. This means that nine tenths of the earth's population would be affected.

Shale is another source of energy which is potentially detrimental to our environment. Shale lies underground, and has to be heated to 900 degrees Fahrenheit before oil flows forth. Consequently there is a big problem getting it out of the ground. And lastly, we all know what the Nukes can do to the environment.

The point I'm trying to make is that we cannot rely on past or present energy sources. Even oil cannot last as modernization continues. By the turn of the century, even the Arab nations could go dry. The solution to our problem lies under the title of Technology. Technology, (regarded as dangerous or helpful) will be the key factor to the handling of our future. The world has been brought this far by technology, and only technology will make or break our future. It all depends on how we use it. But one thing is for sure. The increasing population and depleting resources cannot be checked by themselves.

There are a number of areas in which technology could be applied for energy, such as: Energy of moving water (from rivers and from tides), geothermal energy, energy from winds, solar energy, and the less desirable, energy from nuclear fusion. Coal and shale hopefully will be hampered by the efforts of environmentalists, or until better ways are found to extract and use them.

If a real solution to the energy problem is to be found, we must explore new alternatives rather than rely upon old answers..

It will probably take until the end of this century to effectively harness some of the alternate sources of energy. Until then we will be forced to live rather uncomfortably at times. But at least we will be fully aware of the fragility of the world's economic basis, and hopefully all of us will push for a more realistic education of the public.

The common business cycle usually entails four characteristics: (1) Expansion. (2) Recession. (3) Contraction. (4) Revival. These phases usually last anywhere from 8 to 16 years. Our present business cycle appears to be of short length. Our present contraction and recession should decline this year and revival will soon start as inventories decrease and assets depreciate or wear out. Adam Smith used to account for this cycle completing itself by the force of the "invisible hand," or the individual units of an economy looking out for their own self needs. Today the "invisible hand" is no longer sufficient to alleviate our current modern problems, especially those revolving around energy. Until we become sufficient in producing energy, these business cycles will likely occur more frequently and revolve faster. Fluctuations will occur when new technologies are discovered which will bring about revival and temporary expansion.

So it seems that technology appears to be the solution for our most demanding needs. Not only for energy, but for other vital areas such as birth control. The population must be subjective to checks. If not, the world will eventually become a ghetto. No matter how we view the future, it appears logical that life will be harder as time progresses. Our descendants will have their hands full with problems. Should we prepare now for their future? If so, give some thought to the current world. If not, well, sit back and reach for all the gusto you can, and enjoy it while it lasts. If it lasts.

Norm Robinson is a Collegian Commentator. The Collegian welcomes responses to "on energy" commentaries as well as new ideas regarding energy.

Terrorism as a political tool

By DENNIS PERRY

In West Berlin a mayoral candidate is kidnapped; in Brazil schoolchildren are gunned down; in Northern Ireland a young teenager is executed; and in Paris a bomb explodes in a drugstore, killing several patrons.

Political kidnappings, hijackings, assassinations, and bombings are all part of the repertoire of terrorism used by urban guerilla groups and local revolutionary armies to achieve long-range political goals. Yet, however, variously motivated (whether by political, ethnical, or religious considerations), there can be no justification for the ruthless and calculated terrorist campaigns conducted by such groups as the Black September, the irish Republican Army, and the Tupameros in Uruguay. Legally, it deprives the individual of his (or her) right to life and liberty. Politically, it paves the way for repression and, ultimately, tyranny. Morally, it is repulsive to the universal man and everything he represents — brotherhood, equality, and justice.

Terror, even as a means toward the highest ideals, has historically, become an end in itself. Robespierre and Stalin are living testimony of this. Innocent people were used as their weapons and, eventually, as their targets. Today, we are confounded by a revolutionary minority using innocent victims as political pawns, bargaining counters, so that they could dramatize their numbers, their strength, and their appeal. Such tactics strikingly illustrate the nature of their political strategy: they are condemned to be written down as crimes against humanity.

It is therefore essential that the international community mobilize against such atrocities by way of uniform legislation on terrorist activities (instead of sporadic, individual efforts). It also necessitates an evaluation of the matter of political asylum and extradition, as well as a parallel examination of international organizations, international politics, and international law.

Physical violence should be counteracted by the regeneration of faith in the traditional tools of diplomacy — negotiation, conciliation, and arbitration. Perhaps this can best be exemplified by the peaceful efforts of some formerly dependent African Territories in settling their differences with the colonial rulers.

Yet, however lucrative these peaceful approaches might appear to be, they are still at arm's length. For it has been difficult, within recent years, to wrestle terrorism from the ideal of self-determination. Surely, the dehumanizing effects of oppressive, racist or colonial regimes breed counterviolence. But can one really equate terror with revolution? Shouldn't one be able to see the difference between murder and the struggle for self-determination? When the smoke clears, is there any assurance that one brutal regime won't replace the other — the apprentice, so to speak, learning from the master? Surely, in the end, the creation of a republic and democratic institutions can be better served through peaceful means, rather than through physical violence.

Letters to the Editor

Art Warren talks back

To the Editor:

As they say when you've got the ball, run with it — well, it's been thrown to me and now I've got to try to run with it!

There are qualified nutritionists and dietitians in the Food Services Department who produce menus and recipes for good balanced meals for the students who are on the board plan at the University. The menus are varied in an effort to accommodate the varied tastes of the students. By implementing the Comment Card system, we have learned the likes and dislikes of many students and rely on this student input for future menus. Through this system we have received great suggestions which we have carried through. We have also learned one student finds something "too spicy" where another will say it's "too bland" — one "too greasy," another "great" or "excellent." These are quotes from some of the Comment Cards.

This pot really boils down to the fact that not everyone is going to be satisfied with every food item, but we in the Food Services Department will continue to work our hardest to satisfy most of the students most of the time.

Arthur Warren

Register to vote today!

To the Editor:

Tomorrow is the last day that students will be able to register to vote in the upcoming town elections. The Town Clerk's office has set up a registration table today in the Campus Center where anyone can stop by and register.

Registering to vote is a very simple process. It involves no elaborate proof-of-residence and no "swearing in" of the new voters. Students who are registered to vote elsewhere can change their registration without any difficulty at all. All that registration demands is a few moments at the Town Hall — or if you register today, at the Campus Center.

The issues at stake in this election are not small. Voter registration will determine whether or not students will have a voice in the issues which affect all of us, from rent control to the construction of the [illegible] Library. The Amherst Record has pointed out that past student participation in town elections has been so low that no student has ever won an election over a non-student resident. In other words, our votes not only count but can be the deciding factor in many issues. It's worth a few moments in the Campus Center — or, if you miss registering today, even a quick trip down town — to make sure that you will be able to vote next month.

Towing - who's at fault?

To the Editor:

I'm sick and tired of reading about the issue of towing cars, day after day. It seems as though each day there is an article or editorial written by someone who has nothing better to do with his time than to illegally park his car and then later bitch about being ticketed and towed.

I feel that if someone is ignorant enough to park in a fire lane, tow zone, or to operate an unregistered motor vehicle on the road, then these people have no legitimate gripe about having their cars towed. If they really cared then perhaps they'd use a little bit of common sense when selecting a parking space. The laws are known, if you get caught violating them then you should accept the consequences.

As for Amherst Towing, if all those people who are forever bitching about them would start following the laws for a change maybe you could drive them out of business.

Sign in support of "No Nukes"

To the Editor:

Now is the time for all NO-NUKERS to focus their energies on the State House. Tomorrow there is a hearing on the "Nuclear Safeguards Act," Senate No. 576. This act requires that the safety of the plants must be proven effective to the State Legislature. Emergency safety systems have not been tested under actual conditions and there is no adequate permanent storage for radioactive wastes.

The Act also requires that the utility companies will be made liable for any accidents. As it stands now, the government has exempt them from any responsibility.

Today in the Campus Center Concourse there will be petitions to sign which will be read at the hearing on Wednesday. Your signatures are needed! Also, any written opinions to be placed in the hearing record may be dropped off at MassPIRG, room 424 Student Union.

Response from Butterfield "babies"

To the Editor:

On Monday, March 10, 1975, the Collegian printed a front page article on the dishonesty of the former [illegible] group - Rainbow Productions. There also appeared a letter about "The Eyes of Hell", a Rainbow [illegible] "Rip-off." Your readers will be pleased to know that we, who wrote that same letter, received a reply. In the Campus mail on March 13, 1975, the four of us received Butterfield Productions envelopes containing our very own 3-D glasses. On the glasses were written, [illegible] We think some crybaby from Butterfield Productions was trying to insult us. It's laughable in a way, but sad to see that the person who sent us the message should resort to insult through campus Mail, rather than voice his opinions in a letter to the Collegian, where students could openly see his hostilities. In conclusion, we sincerely hope that these people "grow up," if possible, and start representing their student group with more taste. They have already lost our respect.

Were you there: Ruchell Magee's trial

Ruchell's last 10 years in prison stem from a conviction he received in Los Angeles in 1963. On the advice of his codefendant's court appointed lawyer Ruchell pleaded guilty to a $10 robbery-kidnap charge. The case involved Ben Brown, a musician at L.A.'s Tropicana club who sold Ruchell and his cousin a lid of marijuana and then offered to drive them and a woman named Barbara to a certain destination. In the car Ruchell and Brown got into an argument which ended in a brief scuffle. Brown jumped out of the car, called the police and reported he had been robbed of his car and $10 (the price of the lid). When the L.A. police arrived, they beat Ruchell so badly that he was hospitalized for several days and still suffers pain from the attack.

At the trial Brown's own testimony was so contradictory that it was thrown out of court, yet Ruchell was convicted of kidnapping and robbery and sentenced to life in prison. His previous conviction (at age 16) had been for attempted rape of a white woman in Louisiana—despite the fact that she couldn't even pick him out of a line-up.

In 1965 in a retrial of the 1963 conviction, again, Magee's court appointed lawyer entered a false plea on his behalf and over his strenuous objections.

Magee feels that if he obtains the complete and accurate transcripts of both cases, that he will be able to easily argue for a reversal of the 1963 conviction and subsequent retrial. This has been denied.

The illegality and unfairness of this robbery-kidnap conviction is the basis of Ruchell's "right to rebel" at the Marin County Court House on August 7, 1970.

COURTHOUSE REBELLION

On the morning of August 7, 1970 James McClain was acting as his own attorney in his Marin Courthouse trial stemming from the killing of a guard in retaliation for the death of an inmate. Ruchell was one of his key witnesses and was on the witness stand when Jonathan Jackson entered the courtroom and announced, "All right, gentlemen, hold it right there..." Jonathan gave a sawed-off shotgun to McClain, who taped it to Judge Haley's neck. Ruchell and William Christmas, another convict from San Quentin who was waiting to testify for McClain, were also armed by Jackson. The Assistant D.A. Gary Thomas, three women jurors, and Judge Haley were taken hostage by the four men.

They did not get very far. The hostages were taken to a waiting van, and Jonathan began to drive it out of the Civic Center parking lot. But before they were even able to get out of the lot, Marin County Police and San Quentin guards rushed there and riddled the van with bullets. After nineteen seconds of firing into the van, Jonathan Jackson, James McClain, Willie Christmas, and Judge Haley were dead. Ruchell lay critically wounded, and Thomas was paralyzed from the waist down for life. None of the three women jurors were seriously injured. The action was described in the press as "violent" and "premeditated" but in prisons, black and brown communities all over the country, people felt differently. The "Courthouse Slave Rebellion" brought back images of Nat Turner's slave revolt and John Brown's raid at Harper's Ferry.

SAN FRANCISCO TRIAL

Ruchell was charged with first degree murder and aggravated kidnapping. [illegible] established that all those killed in Marin were shot by San Quentin guards. The San Francisco jury found Ruchell not guilty of first degree murder [illegible]. The same jury found Ruchell not guilty of aggravated kidnapping.

Yet because the jury did not reach a verdict on all the lesser charges Judge Morton Colvin suppressed the acquittals on the primary charges, and ordered another trial. The fact that the new trial was not even allowed to take place shows the extent to which the State fears Ruchell and wants to silence him.

CONVICTION AND "GUILTY" PLEA

Ruchell was being sentenced on Jan. 23 because of his decision to plead "guilty" in May 1974, out of frustration and due to the backstabbing efforts by his court-appointed lawyer, Sheldon Portman, and Judge Ingram's continued refusal to grant him the right to defend himself. However, when he learned that Ingram had already secretly agreed to dismiss Portman from the case, Ruchell insisted on withdrawing his plea and continuing the trial.

Ingram, however, refused to let the trial continue and attempted to sentence Ruchell on June 5. But due to the pandemonium created by Ruchell and his courtroom supporters, Ingram was forced to adjourn and postpone the sentencing. Ruchell told the audience "This was what their 'justice' is like — you ought to bring guns into the courtroom."

Proceedings were then delayed while the Court of Appeals in S.F. debated whether to set aside the guilty plea. They decided to [illegible] and set another date for sentencing.

This was halted when Deputy Public Defender Frank [illegible] petitioned Supreme Court Justice William Douglas to stay the proceedings until the Supreme Court has the chance to look into Ruchell's case. Yet the Supreme Court in January refused even to hear the case. Under these circumstances sentencing was finally carried out.

RUCHELL'S CIVIL SUITS

Prior to sentencing, Ruchell filed two civil suits to renew his legal offense. He is suing the state and its officials with conspiring to deny him his civil rights from the beginning.

—Ruchell Magee v. Judge Morton Colvin and others, No. 73-1697, [illegible], pending in the U.S. District Court in Los Angeles, is filled with facts concerning the L.A. court-appointed attorney's false guilty-by-reason-of-insanity plea and the court officials' falsification and suppression of records. It also contains facts showing how the S.F. court officials have used the unlawful original conviction to justify his continued enslavement-incarceration in California's prisons. Finally, it contains evidence of jury tampering in the San Francisco trial last year.

—Ruchell Magee v. Judge Wm. Ingram, Atty. Gen'l Evelle Younger et al, No. 74-1186, [illegible]. Ruchell again charges the State for suppression of the acquittal verdict on the aggravated kidnap charge, a charge to which Ruchell would not be able to legally plead guilty. Ruchell also challenges the state law based on legislation introduced by Younger in 1972 which denies the accused the right to self-representation because it is a great [illegible] for judges like Ingram to deny the accused their right to speak for themselves and expose their plight. Summonses are being suppressed by U.S. Marshals in this suit.

Of course unless Ruchell is sprung, either by the pressure of a mass movement or other means, he is faced with the prospect of spending the rest of his life in San Quentin.

B.N.S. stress collective unity among Black students

We are experiencing a very sneaky school semester. It seems, although late in the year, that school has just begun. The reality stands that the year is rapidly flowing outrageously out of hand.

Given this fact, ask yourself, what have I done to assist in the total up-lift of the race? Have I supported organizations, activities, and community issues constructively or did I sit comfortably idle, while the most sinister predicaments occurred?

This is not an interrogation by no means, but the fore-mentioned questions do offer a chance to probe yourself(?), in personal evaluation.

For the remainder of the academic year, the Black News Service extends our warmest solidarity to the masses, working for positive change.

The Black News Service can now be contacted at the New Africa House, Rm. [illegible] Mon-Fri. from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. We invite the entire community to drop in and share your ideas with us. All phones are [illegible].

Temple No. 13 Memorial Service

By DEBORAH J. JOHNSON
Black News Service

Muhammad's Temple No. 13, Springfield, Mass., will hold a memorial service for the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, in tribute to the great work that the Honorable Elijah Muhammad has done among the Black men and women in America.

The service will be held Wednesday, March 19, at 8 p.m. at [illegible] Union Street, Springfield.

The Honorable Elijah Muhammad has labored forty-three years to bring pride, dignity, freedom, justice and equality to a down-trodden and a depressed people. It is only fitting that we honor our beloved brother, who made us proud of our Blackness and gave us a heritage which now the whole world recognizes — that the Black man and woman are truly the elite chosen of Allah.

There will be a bus leaving New Africa House Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. for those who wish to attend.

Quilapayun Concert

The world famous Chilean Music Group, the Quilapayun, will be giving a fundraising concert in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts on March 18 at 8:00 p.m. The Quilapayun was one of the leading musical groups in Chile during the Allende years. The group uses a variety of Andean Indian Musical instruments. Their songs are political and social comments with themes centering upon their commitment to the popular unity government that was overthrown in a military coup, upon foreign domination of the economy of their country, and upon their comrades killed or imprisoned by the Military Junta now in power.

During the Allende years they played at rallies to audiences numbering in the hundreds of thousands, on tours throughout their country and abroad, on television, at informal concerts, in factories, cooperative farms, and shanty towns. As they were touring Europe when the Coup took place, the Junta has only been able to deprive the Quilapayun of their nationality. Their records, at present, are banned in Chile. The musicians who sang the music of the Chilean people have been one focus of repression by the Junta. The brutal torture and murder of the internationally renowned Chilean singer, Victor Jara, is just one example.

The Quilapayun has recorded many albums which are widely available throughout Latin America and Europe. Their album "[illegible] De La Libertad" has just won the French Grand Prix International Du Disque 1974. Their most famous album, "The Saga of Santa Maria De Iquique", has just been issued in the country by Paredon Records.

The Quilapayun concert in the Amherst area on March 18 will be their first in the U.S. Tickets can be purchased at the door or prior to the date of the concert, at [illegible] Bookstore, [illegible] Bookstore, or in the lobby of the Campus Center at the University. The price per ticket is a $3.00 donation. The Quilapayun works with Chilean refugee groups, and part of their concert earnings go to these groups.

Your Birthday

By Stella Wilder

TUESDAY, MARCH 18 — Born today, you are one of those impatient persons who cannot bear to see others making avoidable mistakes. At the same time, however, you also cannot bear to make others unhappy by criticizing their behavior or the quality of their thought or emotions. For this reason, you often — indeed, usually — take your impatience out on yourself, blaming yourself for being so "picky" about things rather than blaming others for irritating you. Obviously, you know much frustration during the course of most normal days.

Although you have an inclination toward moodiness, you also have a good sense of humor which keeps you from falling too deeply into depressions and even from soaring too freely in euphoric transports. Easily swayed by a hard-luck story, you will have always to guard against those who, knowing your reputation for aiding the troubled, will take advantage of your soft heart. By seeing through such people, you can save yourself much emotional and financial outlay.

Because you are a far-seeing individual who sets distant rather than present goals, you may seem to some to be impractical. It is true that you sometimes neglect today's duties because you are too concentrated on tomorrow's opportunities; but it is also true that, because you keep an expectant eye on tomorrow, you cannot be seriously discouraged by any of today's failures. Thus, optimism reigns.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

* * *

Wednesday, March 19

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — An opportunity for gain early in the day must not be overlooked — unless you are willing to live with the financial status quo for some time to come.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — You should be able to take over a position of authority today. Direct other family members in the ways you would like them to go.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Matters having to do with money come to the fore today. Decisions made in the afternoon may well be irrevocable — so make them with care! Seek advice.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — An involved affair of the heart may suddenly be eased — if you are wise enough to keep your patience. Don't be discouraged by an argument.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A favorable day for the Cancer willing to put himself out in the interest of harmony on the home front. Seek to help children with decisions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Concentrate your efforts on matters having a bearing on the successful attainment of ultimate goals. Present goals take care of themselves just now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — This is a day presenting many opportunities for completing projects presently underway. Disregard a tendency to shelve your efforts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Meet friendly overtures with friendly overtures. Turn away from none in need of help, especially should they be young or ill.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Though the morning appears good on the surface, you would do well to take your time before committing yourself to new involvements.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Plan your activities in accordance with your opportunities. It would be most unwise were you to attempt to take on more duties at this time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Look to your own financial situation before you give advice to another about his. Study the undercurrents to be safe.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Optimistic Aquarius is justified today in his favorable outlook. There is little or no reason for disappointment this exceptional day.

Passover meals to be served by DC

Kosher Passover meals will be served by the Kosher Meal Plan in the Hampden Commons from breakfast on Monday, March 31, through dinner on Thursday, April 3.

Any combination of these meals may be eaten, but in order to guarantee that enough food will be prepared for each meal, those wanting them should sign up and pay in advance for all meals they wish to eat. Sign up will be from today through Thursday, from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Hillel office, SU302.

Please bring your meal ticket booklet with you if you have one. Those signing up for meals will receive a ticket for each meal chosen. All people wishing to eat Passover meals (including those already on the Kosher Plan) must sign up in advance at Hillel.

The cost of the Passover meals is as follows: For those with no meal plan booklets, the cost is: breakfast, 75 cents; lunch $2.60; dinner $3.10. For those people with a University meal plan booklet, the prices are: 30 cents for breakfast; $1.80 for lunch; $2.10 for dinner. For those who have a University kosher meal plan ticket the prices are: 30 cents for breakfast, $1.80 for lunch, and no extra charge for dinner.

Zamir features Israeli music

Drop into the UMass Hillel Office in SU 302 for a few minutes during the day and chances are you'll hear or read about Hillel's latest venture, a half hour radio show on WMUA. It is called Zamir and it is aired between 2:30 and 3:00 p.m. every Sunday afternoon on 91.1 FM.

Zamir did not arise from a crying need for a Jewish show on radio but rather by students who enjoy listening to popular Israeli music and news and events of interest to the Jewish community. Michael Shekel and Tricia Collins make up the news team, and Ken Temple and David Mehler take care of the engineering part of the show. Zamir hopes to have more than just news and music to offer its listeners, and is already planning to have a live singer, interviews, and debates in future shows. We would be glad to hear from you for any suggestions or special requests.

So tune in for a little [illegible]. You may find Sunday afternoons and Israeli music go together very well.

Seder tonight for Soviet Jewry

The Passover Seder symbolizes the struggle for freedom from oppression throughout the history of the Jewish people. Slavery and oppression of the Jews did not end with the exodus from Egypt 3000 years ago, and oppression of Jews exists today in Russia.

A model seder, dedicated to the struggle for freedom for Soviet Jewry will be held tonight at 8 p.m. in Campus Center 101. All those interested in showing their concern for Soviet Jewry and dedication to the cause of freedom are invited to attend.

Skiers sixth at Can-Ams

By PETER MCDONNELL

The UMass men's ski team concluded its season with a sixth place combined finish among 15 participating schools in Can-Am competition held at Sunday River, Bethel, Maine, this past weekend.

The skiers took fourth in the downhill on Friday and third place in Sunday's giant slalom.

Chances for a successful defense of their Can-Am championship which they won back in January, went down the drain with an eleventh place in Saturday's slalom.

Senior Larry Peck led UMass in the downhill with a seventh place individual effort. Competing against 90 of the best amateur skiers in the East, that ain't bad.

Steve Tonelli, Jim Hawkins, Dick McWade and Gary Peck all had good performances as they finished 22nd, 27th, 33rd and 34th respectively.

In the slalom, it was Steve Tonelli in 14th and best for UMass. Not far behind was freshman Dale Maynard in 10th and Gary Peck 38th. Unfortunately, the three other UMass performers all suffered falls in the event.

"We ran into some tough luck in the slalom. The best four finishers from each school are calculated to determine the standings, but since only three of our guys managed to stay on their skis, we came up short," said Coach Bill MacConnell.

UMass came back very nicely after Saturday's disappointment with a third place team finish in the giant slalom. Dick McWade, Dale Maynard, Jim Hawkins and Gary Peck all finished in the top thirty.

Johnson State College took team honors in both the slalom and giant slalom while the Univ. of Maine at Farmington won the downhill.

Individually, Boomer Mumford of Johnson State and a regular on the Can-Am circuit, won all three events.

In the combined team standings, UMass was sixth behind Johnson State, UMaine at Farmington, McGill, Amherst and Plymouth State.

"Even though we didn't do as well as we expected this past weekend, I still think that this year's team was as successful as any that I've had at the university," said MacConnell.

Steve Tonelli on his way down in the slalom last Saturday as he was first for UMass and fourteenth overall in the Can-Ams. UMass ended up sixth in the competition and failed to repeat as champions.

South Vietnamese abandon Central Highlands

Retreat negotiated by Thieu, Viet Cong

SAIGON (UPI) — Hundreds of thousands of South Vietnamese streamed out of the abandoned Central Highlands toward the sea yesterday in a massive retreat that high government sources said was negotiated by President Nguyen Van Thieu and the Viet Cong.

Diplomatic sources said the withdrawal from what the government called the indefensible provinces of Pleiku, Kontum and Darlac represented the worst setback for anti-Communist forces in Indochina since the French were defeated at Dien Binh Phu in 1954.

The control of the Central Highlands, where American troops entered the Vietnam conflict in the 1960's on a large scale, virtually cuts South Vietnam in half on an east-to-west axis and gives the Communists a powerful base and supply line to attack the coastal cities remaining in government hands.

The sources said the withdrawal was negotiated by Thieu and the Viet Cong who said at first they would grant a three day safe passage for the residents of Pleiku City. The Viet Cong then ordered the residents of Kontum and Dalat to leave as well, the sources said.

There were about 550,000 persons in the area and as many as 250,000 were reported on the roads in miles-long convoys or on foot, some dying by the wayside. Many had fled with only a handful of belongings after seeing their homes demolished and in flames.

The high government sources said the United States was informed of the deal and that the embassy moved U.S. missionaries and U.S. aid officials out of Pleiku and Kontum by air over the weekend. Nine Americans already had been reported captured in the district capital of Ban Me Thuot, one of the cities abandoned in the great evacuation.

One 60-mile-long convoy of troops and civilians withdrew from Pleiku, the capital of the highlands. Hospital patients were abandoned in their beds where they lay. Eyewitnesses reported the sounds of ammunition dumps exploding and the city in flames.

Witnesses said most of the walking refugees were the poor who could not afford transportation — women, children, the elderly. They were without food and without water as they straggled far behind the thousands of cars involved in the exodus, ordered at a moment's notice and with no preparations.

When the rear of the convoy cleared out yesterday, Pleiku looked like a ghost town. Government engineers blew up the II Corps headquarters, the airfield, and bunkers. Tearful residents smashed and burned their own homes.

Engineers led the way, clearing roadblocks, repairing bridges, and building bypasses as the refugees snaked through 100 miles or more of Communist-controlled mountain passes southeastward from Pleiku toward the government stronghold of Tuy Hoa on the coast.

Young girl carries her grandmother as the two flee the Communist advance yesterday, [illegible] miles north of Saigon near Duc Trong, in one of the areas that was abandoned by the South Vietnamese.

Americans begin evacuation as Cambodian shelling continues

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Communist-led rebels, marking the fifth anniversary of the Cambodian war, rained rockets on government positions near Phnom Penh yesterday and probed defenses of the capital outskirts in search of bases for pounding the city with more deadly artillery and mortar fire.

A U.S. spokesman in Bangkok, Thailand, said an Air Force plane has evacuated personal effects of the U.S. embassy personnel, and in Phnom Penh an embassy spokesman said some documents have been burned and private relief agencies have been asked to thin out their staffs, especially in outlying areas.

Most foreign embassies have already begun evacuation of their diplomatic staffs as well, but an American embassy spokesman denied immediate plans to follow suit.

Meanwhile, President Ford was told yesterday his appeal for $222 million in emergency military aid for Cambodia has reached an impasse in Congress, and that support for a scaled-down compromise is dwindling away.

Rep. William Broomfield, R—Mich., said in an interview that he had told the President at a Republican strategy meeting in the White House he was "doubtful" that the House would approve a compromise $135.6 million in military and economic aid unless the administration dropped its objections to a cut-off for further military aid after June 30.

In one of the heaviest barrages of the current dry-season offensive, 56 rockets hit an island in the Mekong River east of Phnom Penh Monday night and yesterday killing 15 persons in Chruy Chang Var village and forcing refugees to flee by boat into the capital with 42 wounded.

The rocket barrage was apparently timed for the March 18 anniversary of the overthrow of former chief of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk, now titular head of the insurgents living in exile in Peking. His ouster marked the start of fighting in Cambodia.

Military sources said the government beat off a rebel attack Monday night on Phnom Penh perimeter on the east bank of the Mekong, but the insurgents brought up an estimated 800 new troops during the night to reinforce the attack.

Senate begins work on tax bill; Ford may accept increased cut

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate began work yesterday on the largest tax cut in history with President Ford indicating he would accept a far larger cut than he first proposed.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said the Senate would stay in session into the weekend if necessary to pass the bill, which emerged from the Finance Committee [illegible] billion cut. This was [illegible] greater than Ford proposed and $8.2 billion larger than the House approved.

The Senate defeated 58 to 38 an amendment by Sen. George McGovern, D—S.D., which would have reduced the Senate bill to the same size of the House bill — $19.9 billion. This was the first vote on any aspect of the bill.

McGovern was supported mainly by Republicans and conservatives who want the bill chopped down in size and by liberals who fear a large tax cut will deplete funds available for social programs.

Pressed by the need to begin the flow of rebate checks to all taxpayers — as well as the need to recess for Easter — the Senate hoped to send the bill to a conference committee with the House by this weekend and to stay in session to send the final compromise bill to Ford.

"The nation needs this tax cut and needs it soon," said Finance Committee Chairman Russell Long, D—La., as he opened debate.

A fight over whether to end the oil depletion allowance was expected to be the only major dispute, but it was expected to be resolved by Friday.

Ford told Republican congressional leaders he was willing to compromise with the Democratic Congress. Although he did not indicate an amount, Rep. Elford Cederberg, R—Mich., said in answer to a question that he felt Ford might accept a bill as high as $25 billion "if it came out clean without extraneous amendments."

State can easily borrow, experts say

Credit rating called good by agencies

BOSTON (AP) — The state of Massachusetts should have little trouble borrowing money to meet current bills if it presents a plan to get out of financial trouble, according to financial experts.

The state's deficit for the year ending June 30 has been estimated at more than $350 million. Last week Gov. Michael S. Dukakis said his administration had whittled that down by $85 million.

Dukakis also has said the state is on the verge of floating a bond issue to meet the gap — something it's never done before. "The municipal bond market has in the past not looked at the purpose of a borrowing — it's looked at the credit of the issuer," noted Franklin X. Coleman, vice president for municipal finance of Goldman, Sachs & Co., a leading Wall Street investment firm.

"But if the rating agencies were a big red flag, either a change in rating or a warning, it could be different," he said. And in those agencies, for a deficit financing plan, "The nuances will be poured over."

At the moment, the state's credit is good, though the two principal rating agencies disagree on precisely how good.

Standard & Poor's awards the state a rating of AAA, its highest, while Moody's Investment Service rates Massachusetts and 14 other states AA, behind 20 AAA states.

The ratings are important because the higher the rating, other things being equal, the lower the interest cost to the state. Also, in many states, banks and insurance companies are limited by law in their investments to only the highest ratings.

Massachusetts now has about $1.58 billion in outstanding general obligation bonds backed by the taxing power of the state. This is why a state can borrow to cover deficits where a family can't — the full taxing power of the state stands behind the bonds. Revenue bonds, such as those backed by the bridge tolls of the Massachusetts Port Authority, are not included in general obligation debt.

In February, the state borrowed $125 million in the bond market at an average interest cost of 5.68 per cent — a cost bankers call "extremely favorable."

States get such low interest rates because the interest they pay comes tax-free to the bond-holder.

All the bonds outstanding up to now have been used to finance construction and other long-lived projects, with certain special exceptions.

A key figure in the sale of the February bond issue, Fred Coburn, vice president of the New England Merchants National Bank, said of a deficit-covering issue: "I do not have any doubt that a syndicate could be formed and the bonds sold at a reasonable price."

On the possible effects among the rating agencies on the state's credit, Coburn said, "I don't believe it will be severe, so long as such a financing scheme appears to be part of a larger, forward-looking scheme to get finances under control."

Portugal outlaws three political parties, delays elections again

LISBON (UPI) — Portugal's leftist military government outlawed three political parties yesterday and announced the April 12 elections for a constituent assembly may have to be postponed for a second time.

Politicians called the announcement a victory for the official Communist party, which has been steadily gaining influence in the ruling coalition of military officers that overthrew a 48-year-old rightist regime last year.

A government decree said the Christian Democratic party on the right, and, on the far left, the Maoist party and the Workers-Peasant Alliance, had been declared illegal until after the elections because of their "antidemocratic activities."

The Maoists reacted to the news by gathering in downtown Lisbon in what politicians said could turn into the first serious antimilitary demonstration since the army took power a year ago. About 1,000 youths armed with red flags and banners calling for "Death to the Fascists" crowded into Rossio square for the rally.

The announcements came as Prime Minister Vasco Goncalves met with representatives of the four major parties to discuss a pending cabinet reshuffle that politicians predicted would give the Communists and their allies greater influence in the military-dominated government.

The ban on the two leftist parties favored the Moscow-line Communists because it eliminated two important competitors on the left, political sources said.

Egypt, Israel remain in wide disagreement

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger said Tuesday there was still "substantial disagreement" in the way of a new accord between Egypt and Israel for a further Israeli withdrawal east of the Suez Canal.

Both he and President Anwar Sadat of Egypt conceded that agreement may not be reached in Kissinger's latest shuttle mission between the two countries. Kissinger said he would remain in the area until it was clear one way or the other.

Sadat said there was no agreement yet even on the principles of a new accord for what he called a "very limited withdrawal."

Two hours before Kissinger arrived here from Egypt, Defense Minister Shimon Peres, a member of the Israeli negotiating team, told a Hebrew University audience that Israel wants a "positive change" in its relations with Egypt and was willing to take its time in negotiations through Kissinger to achieve it.

Reduced mining OK'd

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The House yesterday approved, 333 to 86, new legislation designed to reduce the scarring of lands by strip mining.

Despite the big margin, a spokesman for the coal industry immediately urged President Ford to veto it as he did last year's strip mining bill.

Similar legislation has been passed by the Senate, and differences between the two measures must be resolved before a measure goes to the White House.

MD strike continues

NEW YORK (UPI) — Hospitals hit by the nation's first doctor's strike yesterday turned away many non-emergency cases and warned medical care could deteriorate if the walkout continues. It was predicted the strike could spread around the country.

The strike also got moral support from the American Medical Association. The AMA's two top officers issued a statement in Chicago saying they believed the strike was a move for better patient care.

The doctor's basic demand is for a maximum 80-hour work week. They claim that long working hours — frequent 100 hour work weeks and shifts that sometimes stretch up to 56 hours — reduce their efficiency and endanger patients.

Busing foes protest

BOSTON (AP) — Bostonians bussed, and took cars, trains and airplanes to Washington yesterday to demonstrate to federal officials their opposition to forced school busing.

It was estimated that more than 2,000 persons would make the trip, sponsored by Restore Our Alienated Rights (ROAR), a citywide antibusing coalition.

From South Boston, a center of opposition to court-ordered busing to desegregate the city's public schools, 18 buses with [illegible] persons left for Washington Tuesday morning.

The South Boston Information Center said 1,500 more persons would go to Washington during the day by car, airplane and train.

Unemployment rises

BOSTON (UPI) — More than 105,000 New Englanders were put out of work in January as a declining economy hit "every major manufacturing and non-manufacturing industry" in each of the six states, it was reported yesterday.

A decline in the number of employed persons was reported in every major metropolitan area of every New England state, the U.S. Labor Department said.

Onassis buried

SCORPIOS, Greece (AP) — Aristotle Onassis was buried yesterday in a cypress grove overlooking the Ionian Sea on his private island, the plain oak coffin carried to the grave with a last kiss from the widow.

Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis knelt to kiss the coffin, part of Greek funeral ritual, at the end of a simple service in the chapel where she married the shipping magnate 6½ years ago.

Inspection of mails reported

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A Postal Service study yesterday revealed that separate federal, state and local agencies requested more than 8,000 mail surveillances over the last two years.

The analysis of the use of "mail covers" — inspection of an individual's mail short of actually reading it — was presented to the House Civil Liberties subcommittee by William J. Cotter, chief postal inspector.

Subcommittee chairman Robert W. Kastenmeier said the study included requests from organizations not usually associated with law enforcement, such as the Departments of Agriculture and Labor, the Fish and Wildlife Service, as well as state welfare agencies and a real estate commission.

'Identakit' aids UMass cops

Composite picture made from victim's description

By ERNIE KING
Staff Reporter

What has 104 eyes, 37 noses, 53 chins and a wide assortment of other facial features and works for the UMass Police Dept.? It's nothing more than a series of plastic layovers know as the "Identakit."

The Public Safety Dept. obtained the kit six months ago from the Smith & Wesson Company of Springfield. The dept. sent three officers to Boston to be trained in the use of the kit. UMass now has a total of 12 officers trained in the use of the kit. Prior to the time the Public Safety Dept. got the kit, they had to go to the Mass. State Police to have composite drawings made.

The kit itself, is a series of plastic layovers based on age, height, hair color and style, noses. It runs the whole gamut of descriptions that can be used.

According to Capt. Robert Joyce of the UMass Police Dept., "The kit has paid off in results in that we have apprehended, brought to court and obtained convictions in a number of cases through the use of the kit." Joyce added, "the kit is very effective in many areas where the suspect was not know to the victim , but a description could be provided."

Once a compostite picture is made though a victim's description, it is circulated to other area police departments. On the following day the circulation is broadened to the entire state and if necessary it can be transmitted nationwide.

Officer Doug Wilson is one of the Identakit operators. He explained, "The kit is not intended to be a photograph, it is a likeness. You may pick out three possibilities but it narrows the field."

To build a composite you have to start with standards. A persons age group, height, weight and then you go to the facial features starting with the eyes, ears, nose, and lips.

According to Wilson, "The victim sits in front of you and doesn't see the composite until it is finished. Sometimes you have to prod his memory as to whether or not the suspect had a beard or was wearing a hat or anything else that may help in completing the composite." Once the drawing is completed it is shown to the victim to see if there are any changes that have to be made. In some instances the composite has to be filled in with a grease pencil to get a more accurate likeness.

'Peoples' Liberation Week': An expression of unity

By Progressive News Service

A massive cultural exposition under the theme of "People's Liberation Week" will take place May 1-4 in Hampden Student Center, Southwest.

The purpose of Peoples' Liberation Week is to bring people together in an expression of solidarity through various art forms as they relate to the progressive movement.

This event is designed to be a creative and mass based effort involving art exhibits, drama, dance, and music performances, symposia, workshops, poetry readings, films, political commentaries, and more — a collective statement of the progressive community, reflecting the unity and beauty and strength which emanate from the celebration of ongoing and world wide struggles for human liberation.

The PLW Organizing Committee has begun contacting people involved in progressive political and cultural development within the community to participate.

The "Peoples' Liberation Week" idea first came about as a response to the need for a tool, a time, place and process whereby people involved in different aspects of the struggle for social change might come together and share in their work and accomplishments. Peoples' Liberation Week is intended to foster increased communication, mutual respect, and appreciation for cultural and racial identity and to share with the community the humanitarian and revolutionary achievements of oppressed peoples.

The Peoples' Liberation Week Organizing Committee is working out of The Center for Racial Understanding, Moore House, Southwest. If you would like more information or to become involved and-or to be on the PLW mailing list, contact [illegible], [illegible], or [illegible].

Bennett College Choir gives Concert at Smith College

Black News Service

The famed Bennett College Choir, of Bennett College, located at Greensboro, North Carolina, will present a concert on Thursday evening, March 20, 1975 8:00 p.m. Helen Hills Chapel of Smith College. The public is welcome free of charge.

The choir, on a two-week tour of southern and eastern states, is presenting a concert program which includes sacred and secular compositions from the sixteenth to the twentieth centuries. Among the works to be performed are "The Gates of Heaven" by Randall Thompson and the cantata "Naomi and Ruth" by Tadesco. The group will also present excerpts from the opera, "The Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart. Works will be performed which stem from the Black Experience in music — Negro spirituals, Gospel songs and soul music. Compositions by R. Nathaniel Dett, who in earlier years served as Director of Music at Bennett College, are his well-known anthems, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," and "Listen to the Lambs."

Muhammed's Temple No.13

By DEBORAH E. JOHNSON
Black News Service

Muhammed's Temple No. 13, Springfield, Mass. will hold a memorial service for the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, in tribute to the great work that the Honorable Elijah Muhammad has done among the Black men and women in America.

The service will be held Wednesday, March 19, at 8:00 p.m. at 495 Union Street, Springfield.

The Honorable Elijah Muhammad has labored forty-two years to bring pride, dignity, freedom, justice and equality to a downtrodden and a dejected people. It is only fitting that we honor our beloved brother, who made us proud of our Blackness, and gave us a heritage which now the whole world recognizes — that the Black man and woman are truly the chosen of Allah.

There will be a bus leaving New Africa House, Wednesday evening at 7:00 p.m. for those who wish to attend. Please be there.

U.S. new nerve gas

North Vietnam's official Vietnam News Agency has reported that the U.S. is supplying a new type of bomb with increased killing power for use against the National United Front liberation forces in Cambodia.

According to a Los Angeles Times report, the North Vietnamese said that the new "CBU-55" cluster bomb unit increases its "killing power by consuming all the oxygen within a 100-foot radius. The paper said that there was "no U.S. response to the report."

Meanwhile, the Army and Navy are requesting funds from Congress to develop a new "binary bomb" containing deadly nerve gas. The request was made known to Congress in an annual report submitted Feb. 5, by the head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General George Brown.

Military sources say about $5 million is being requested to build a production facility for the gases. The Pentagon argues that the binary gas is "safer" than old nerve gases, because it is made up of two non-toxic chemicals that are stored separately and become deadly only when mixed together.

Under the 1925 Geneva Protocol, ratified by the Senate last Dec., the U.S. joined in renouncing first use of chemical weapons. But the Pentagon argues that it still needs to develop new means of chemical warfare to counter a "first strike" and to serve as a "deterrent."

"I consider the day I was operated on for cancer my second birthday."

"Cancer of the colon, the doctor told me. Well, I cried, my husband, the tough cop, he cried, my kids cried. Anyway, a short time later they operated. I remember the date—because that's the day my life began again. December 7, 1966, the day I was saved from cancer. What really saved me was recognizing one of cancer's seven warning signals early. That gave the doctors time to do something about it. Ask the American Cancer Society for the list of cancer's seven warning signals. And give. We want to wipe out cancer in your lifetime."

Commentary

For Academic honesty

By STEPHEN LINSKY

Just a month or so ago Gerald Ford was being interviewed by two correspondents from NBC news. One of them asked him how he felt when he heard that some people believed he wasn't that brilliant a man. Ford responded that it didn't bother him at all, because having finished in the top some-odd per cent of his class at Yale, he knew therefore that "there certainly must be quite a few people dumber than me."

I'm sure that here at UMass this statement would re-enforce the idea that he really isn't all that brilliant, in fact he's even less intelligent than previously thought. But while we may snicker and sneer, ironically what Ford said is really, whether we want to admit it or not, what this and other institutions of higher education practice. We cling to a system that gives basis to the claims of a Gerald Ford, while dismissing the claims of countless other people originally branded outcasts, but later acknowledged equally important and accomplished people. The tragedy is that this system remains more a matter of expediency than as a tool of education. Grading has become an expedient way of measuring achievement. It's so much easier to be told you received a B or C or D in a course than by determining yourself what achievement was truly gained.

The system really becomes and has been a game, with certain rules on how to play and "win." Easier courses are selected over more difficult ones, easier professors over difficult ones, and the list goes on. Ford's reasoning sounds so absurd because we know that life really doesn't follow the whims of the grading system to its logical conclusion, we should assume that God stands at the gates of Heaven - gives out final report cards, and then directs people, depending on their overall cumulative average, to where their final resting place will be.

THE PROPOSAL

It is time finally in our system of higher education to at least partially liberate ourselves from this system, and in turn allow education to be what it should be. What this basically involves is to finally make education the responsibility of the student. An important step in this direction would be setting up a system that would allow those who do not wish to take courses for a grade, who would prefer to judge their own achievement and take responsibility for it, to take courses on a pass-fail basis. At the same time, those who still prefer grades may still receive them.

The system would work generally in the same frame as it presently does. The student has one month to decide what courses he or she wishes to take pass-fail. Any number of courses can be taken pass-fail. If the student takes three or more 3-credit and courses pass-fail, then the cumulative average is thereby forfeited, but the grades for the courses taken not pass-fail shall remain on the students record and are to be figured in to the student's overall cumulative average.

Grading has become an expedient way of measuring achievement. It's so much easier to be told you received a B, C or a D in a course than by determining yourself what achievement was truly gained.

Finally, we will have a system that gives students the choice as to how, and in what environment he-she prefers to learn. But nothing will ever become of this if there aren't people really willing to make it happen. There are forces both on campus and elsewhere ready to take away what little freedom there is at UMass. Among some of their proposals which have been recently revealed in the Collegian are ones to count F's on the cumulative average, and cutting the course change period to ten days. Their belief is that there is no room for student responsibility in making UMass a "place of academic excellence." They realize as we all do that UMass breeds apathy, and therefore, they expect little or no student opposition to their plans.

We feel that academic excellence will never come to UMass until it is realized that it's not that students must serve the needs of the University, but that the University must serve the needs of the students. It all boils down to whether we as students are willing to remain servants to the system. University administration and bureaucrats are betting that we will do. If you want to show that you are not, you can help us.

Talking to the top

By B. J. ROCHE

Though Chancellor Bromery and Dr. Wood are the chief decision-makers for the UMass Amherst campus, the final say rests within an assemblage known as the Board of Trustees. The Board has the power to appoint the President, Chancellors, and Treasurers of the University, as well as being the ultimate decision and policy maker for UMass.

On the first Wednesday of each month, the Board meets at one of the three UMass campuses; this month April, the Board will be meeting at Amherst.

I had hoped to run an editorial explaining to students the procedure for obtaining the right to speak at a Board of Trustee meeting, but after researching the idea and calling Dr. Wood's office to find out the details, it was discovered that it is highly unlikely that anything presented at this time will be likely to be put on the agenda.

After consulting with Rick Savini, who is a member of the Board, was decided as an alternative that a statement would be made for him to present to the Board. The statement will deal with such issues as the Universal Fee, the tuition increase, and the state of administrative cooperation with students on policy and decision-making which directly involve them.

Though it is too late for students to speak at the Trustees' meeting, it is not too late to do one or both of the following:

First, make a note to show up at the meeting. This is the only contact the Trustees will have with the students in a face to face situation. It must be shown that we will not stand trial and accept financial reprisals due to the mistakes of certain administrators. We must demonstrate to the Board that we really DO care about what is happening out here, far from the maddening crowd at Washington Mall. There is a real need to say to the Board that a Universal Fee will not go down well at UMass Amherst. In the words of Van Morrison, "Take your hand out of my pocket, ain't nothing there belongs to you!"

The second action to be taken is to get Governor Dukakis on this campus for the meeting. We saw a lot of him before he was elected, but now, since there is no subway line running to Amherst, the Governor has decided he can't make the trip. A massive letter writing campaign is in order asking, if not demanding his presence... It would seem fitting, since he turned down our commencement this year in favor of Harvard's.

Send it to: Governor Michael Dukakis, State House, Boston, Mass. [illegible]

The Board of Trustees meeting will be held April 2 at [illegible] in [illegible] Campus Center. Let's hope that it will have to be moved to the Auditorium. Or better yet, let's put that Stadium to some good use....

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space, according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

My pal Gerry

Dear Gerry,

You don't mind me calling you Gerry, do you? I mean the way you come off on television and in all those pictures you seem so cool, so friendly, and so, um, well natural, I guess. I feel as though I can talk to you. You know what I mean?

Anyway...

A few things are bothering me and I'd appreciate it if you could clear some of them up.

You're the President. Right? You're supposed to be smart, seeing as you're the head of the country, even though you weren't elected by the people (not that it makes a difference or anything). Well, a couple of months ago I was watching you on t.v. You were making a speech to the Future Farmers of America. You were telling them that a way to beat food costs was to have everyone grow their own food. Then something clicked in my head. Why would you want to tell the Future Farmers of America, people who are going to make their living growing food, that everyone else in the country should grow their own food? Gee Gerry, that doesn't make any sense. Are you sure you wanted to do that?

And another time you were on t.v. you didn't do too well either. One of the reporters in the audience wanted to know what you thought "detente" meant. And then you said, and I even have the actual quote written down, "Well, I'm not exactly sure, but it's French, isn't it?" Boy Gerry, I didn't think that was exactly what the reporter wanted to know. If you want to be a comedian Gerry, I think you'd better get a real joke writer.

Another thing that bothers me Gerry, is your sidekick Nelson. He's not a very nice person you know, making people in South America work in copper mines for peanuts and having nasty books written about his opponents because he wanted to win (not your kind) and having prisoners shot in Attica because they thought they were getting a raw deal. Besides, Nelson has enough money so that he really doesn't have to work. So Gerry, why not fire him and give someone else the job. Believe me, there are enough out of work people who could use the money. And boobey, it would help the economy.

And while we're on the subject of the economy Gerry, I have a great suggestion. Why not legalize marijuana? Wowie kazowie would that create jobs and pump money back into the economy. It would also make you very popular with some of my friends. (Hey, if you did that they might even vote for you, if they decided to register.)

So Gerry, I'll be looking forward to hearing from you. I don't want to think that you're as dumb as you look. I hope you can come up with a few explanations of your actions. And make it soon, Gerry, because right now you're not standing with me.

Until then, I remain

Your pal,
Joyce

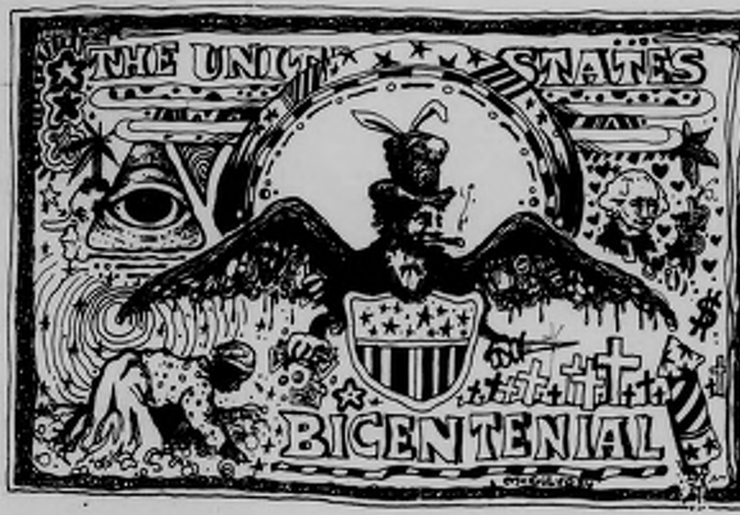
The texture of America

Abe's honest gestures and Ben's kite and John's Hancock all serve to remind us again that it's Bicentennial time. The Shell Oil Company sponsors "Historic Minutes", expecting America to take it all in.

We're looking for something that doesn't exist and never has. These folks in their times were neither more nor less challenged and hated than those we choose to lambaste now. But we make them be what people never are.

People don't go around spouting off like a tenth grade history book. They say real things like "that fucking asshole," or "Where did I put my hat?" Wouldn't it be great if Abe Lincoln lost his hat on one of those shows? Then people could relate to him instead of worshipping him.

Leaders become too often gods and rarely persons.



Our history gets lost in what we should've been and neglects what we've been ... a nation of deviants with a history of war and slavery. Staring at magnificent declarations of human liberties, we view ourselves as the true saviours of godlike wisdom.

It has nothing to do with right or wrong, guilt or innocence. It's merely the moment in which we live. Everyone does what they think is right or they wouldn't be doing it.

Testing the texture of the times is more relevant than reviewing the reaction. We're taught to believe that those who began this nation were always sincere and correct in their judgements, and never once did they act like the "floundering fathers" they often turned out to be. The work they produced was a conglomerate of all that had been said before, and many of Jefferson's greatest words were borrowed from Locke.

But the secret of America is the dream. We're not so old that we've completely lost it yet. We want to look for something that we don't know where to find. There's no one to ask but us, and we don't know.

Americans judge our nation on what's been said. Others judge us on what's been done. Our national pride far exceeds our international stature.

The coming Bicentennial celebration should focus on the [illegible] of Aaron Burr as well as that of Alexander Hamilton. It should blend My Lai with Midway and Nat Turner with Jim Bowie. It should examine America from the inside — from the bureaucracy of the Pentagon to the secrecy of the CIA. It should uncover itself, reach a conclusion, and hold its two hundred years in front of the world and say, "This is America — judge for yourself."

Women's Day issue 'a sham'

To the Editor:

We feel that the editorial spread of [illegible] in commemoration of International Women's Day cannot pass without comment. It was a sham.

The purpose for having an International Women's Day was to recognize and celebrate the talents, ideas, feelings and accomplishments of women around the world. This is an important point because International Women's Day was created by and for poor and working women, as well as young, white, middle class women. However, it appears as though the focus on these pages was limited to the latter, rather than providing the broad perspective on universal sisterhood it should have. It was a time when people should have given special thought to how far men and women have gone together in this struggle termed "the women's movement" and consideration to how much more has to be done. We feel that the Collegian had a responsibility to the UMass community to design Friday's issue in the spirit of this, rather than in the sloppy, "we don't want to rock any boats," patronizing, apologetic attitude (it most definitely cannot be called spirit) it took on.

The groundwork for this attitude was laid in the editor's "perspective." The editor's compact history, vague discourse on the purpose of the spread was totally inadequate. In short, we feel that it was the editor's responsibility to ask the right questions, and perhaps offer a few of her own answers, because she is in the position of setting the tone, and this responsibility was reneged on.

The content of the spread was supposed to provide food for thought, but as far as we are concerned, it was slim pickin's. Apparently, Mr. [illegible] has not yet considered the notion that perhaps his sisters would rather have been out there playing baseball with him instead of enlightening him to the realities (or is it illusions?) of the "other side." [illegible] that was tremendous! Sure, the point is that the "other side" needs the reinforcement of which you speak, too, but more importantly, the freedom to choose exactly what it is to be reinforced! And we were enraged by Mr. [illegible] being considered a "token". This subtle brand of sexism has no place here.

The other editorials, graphics, and photos were O.K. [illegible] however, generally non-committal. This is O.K., too, but why was there no balance? There was insufficient representation of poor and working women, women from other countries, and third world women, and what little there was, the messages were smothered by appeasement and vagueness. We understand that many people are frightened by talk of "feminism" (by the way, all it really is, is "humanism") but where is there a vehicle for this expression if not in a spread dedicated to International Women's Day?

Finally, we'd like to make one more comment. It is maintained by Ms. Roche that women are underrepresented in the editorial pages on a daily basis. We understand that this is most likely attributable to a lack of submissions. However, we would like to suggest some possible solutions to this problem: 1) A section devoted periodically to thoughts and ideas on the schism between the sexes. 2) The implementation of a women's editor whose function would be to encourage expression from women, and to ensure publication. 3) We are open to suggestions!

We'd like to stress here, that these suggested measures should not be viewed as alienating or "making the problem worse," but rather as a method of drawing out this "Silent Majority."

Turning off Tartaglia

To the Editor:

I've never written a letter to the editor, and I didn't think I ever would, but I feel I must write on the Tartaglia case now before the Board of Governors.

Tony Tartaglia is just another student on campus who is being screwed by the administration. Tartaglia was fired from his job, was not notified directly, was given no reason for his dismissal, nor were any of the normal dismissal procedures followed. The Board of Governors heard the grievance and John [illegible], Campus Center Director, refused to answer the grievance in open session.

The following week in closed session, Mr. [illegible] still refused to state his reasons. This is an unfair treatment of any human being; treatment which no student should be subjected to.

Tony Tartaglia is still out of a job because the Campus Center administration seems to have the power of releasing students without cause and without having to answer to any grievance procedures. This is unjust and something must be done to correct this great injustice.

Gossip indigestion

To the Editor:

As Student Manager at Butterfield Dining Commons I am disappointed to find the Collegian accept and print apparent gossip in the Tuesday, March 11 "Meal Ticket" article as probable truth.

Butterfield enjoys its Dining Commons' success as a result of our continual effort to improve our student administration and staff. Our operation has not "embarrassed" University Food Services. Ms. Kosofsky's article fails to recognize the fact that Butterfield's high standard to a large degree reflects the students' effort to cooperate with, not to embarrass Mr. Warren and UMass Food Services.

As a concerned and visible organ of the UMass community, we of Butterfield House sincerely hope that any future Collegian report that mentions Butterfield Dining Commons will reflect factual truth and not "speculation."

Purging the Puritans

To the Editor:

This is in response to Mary Driscoll's letter concerning Marilyn Chambers and the advertisement of her in the Collegian. You should have been born 30 years ago. This is UMass. For years, the puritanical outlook on sex has hounded us and attached the word "dirty" to sex. Granted that the movie that ad was advertising for was getting away from the beauty of the human body, but the ad itself was just a good picture of a beautiful girl. As far as I'm concerned, as long as we have such ridiculous censorship as Driscoll suggests, sex will continue to be something learned and talked about behind the barn and people will continue to be confused and embarrassed about their bodies.

I commend you Collegian people and others who are helping to enlighten those people who still hold on to the ancient belief that a pair of breasts is obscene. The human body is beautiful and why should we continue hiding a thing of beauty. It's good to see a college newspaper finally loosening up a bit. Keep it up. (No pun intended.)

Crackdown on cruelty

To the Editor:

Approximately 10,000 dogs and cats are being born this hour. Of this 10,000, 9,000 will be thrown in garbage cans, left in the woods to fend for themselves and starve to death, die of disease, get hit by cars and last, destroyed in our public and private pounds, because they are unwanted. Many people let their pets breed litters of kittens and puppies that can never be placed in homes and that die by the end of their first year of life. We of the Animal Betterment Citizens Action League need you to help us pass laws that will force people to care, or have their animals taken away from them.

Let's rap on science!

To the Editor:

This letter is to inform the UMass community that the national Vice-President of F.A.S.S.T., (federation of American students supporting science and technology), Mr. Thomas Brownell will be in the Amherst area on the last week of March. On March 24th he will be at Amherst College and the University of Massachusetts later in the day. On March 25, he will conclude his New England tour at Hampshire College. Come to hear him if you want to rap about the Nuclear Power Problem, pro or con, the Space Program, where its been and where its going, the energy crisis, or any other problem you want to rap about which is related to science. Students, and Faculty of all fields are invited. He will be in the Campus Center concourse if no rooms are available, ready to talk with you. He will also talk about forming a UMass chapter of F.A.S.S.T. with interested persons and discuss possible projects and events, such as organizing a pro-con Nuclear debate between, for example, Dixie Lee Ray, (former chairwoman of the A.E.C.) and Sam Lovejoy. Other programs possible include an astronaut to talk about the Space Program and free films about several science related topics. Come for yourself for more information or write to: F.A.S.S.T., 1780 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Tackling student apathy

To the Editor:

Congratulations to B.J. Roche for her column on Friday (3/14). B.J. has brought up one of the biggest problems that Student Government has had in the past few years: lack of participation and the reasons for it.

The responsibility for the problem and the problem itself are interrelated. What it boils down to is the lack of communication between students and the issues that affect them. People can't become involved or informed if they don't know what's going on. The longevity of the Vietnam war bears this out.

The solution to the problem is to have our Senators and the Collegian increase their contact with us all on important issues. The responsibility for the lack of knowledge and minimal involvement belongs to all of us. It lies with the Collegian and its limited, but improving coverage of the Senate. It lies with our lack of interest of what happens outside the classroom. It lies with the Senate, because it has not made a concerted effort to explain the issues and it lies with the [illegible] that an "adverse relationship" exists between officials and the group these officials are paid to serve.

With the set-up of the new Organizing Committee, which was implemented for the express purpose of getting a broader base of input into the idea and ultimate reality of a Student Union, it is the Senate's hope that YOU will get involved. If you don't who else will? If you are interested in the idea of building a strong union and concerned about the lack of interest in student problems contact either Cindy McGrath, Rick Savini or Doug Phelps at 5-2341. This new plan was meant to involve YOU.

With the proposed Universal Resource Fee and the proposed increase, I suggest that your empty wallet entice you to get involved. Can any of us afford not to?

Human Interaction course to be offered

The Division of Humanistic Applications of Social and Behavioral Sciences in Education at the School of Education is offering a course in human interaction for undergraduates.

The course, titled "Human Interaction and Group Dynamics" is primarily intended to be a laboratory training experience which will focus on personal growth and group development. The major part of the classroom time will be devoted to T-Group sessions which will provide and opportunity for each participant to develop a greater insight into himself-herself and his-her personal value system; develop an awareness of his-her impact on others. Outside reading and theory-skill sessions in class, hopefully will contribute to an understanding of group dynamics theory and practice as well as to individual development.

The course meets from March 20 through May 16 on Thursdays 7-11 p.m. A number of openings are available and can be registered for in Room 368, Hill's South, School of Education. The deadline of the registration of this course will be Thursday. The first meeting will be held in the first floor lobby, Hill's South (March 20, Thursday, 7 p.m.)

Nature Center to sponsor forum tonight

The Long Plain Nature Center will sponsor its second Personal Environmental Action Forum entitled "Food: Facts and Fads" tonight at 7:30 p.m.

The Forum will take place at the old East Street School (currently the Science Resource Center for the Amherst schools) across from the Fort River School. Participants in the Forum will discuss current food issues including organic foods, health foods, food additives, junk foods, and ways to get more for your food dollar, including food cooperatives.

Participating in the panel discussion will be Fergus Clydesdale from UMass, Professor of Food Science, and representatives from the Amherst Food Coop and Yellow Sun Natural Foods. In addition, there will be a display by the Hampshire County Extension Service on how to stretch your food dollar. The panel will welcome audience participation. Bring your nutrition questions and our panel will help separate the fact from the fad concerning this most basic topic in our everyday lives.

Prof to speak onenvironment

This week, the Coalition for Environmental Quality will present Professor Charles Cole who will speak on "Tropical Resource Management". Dr. Cole has spent much of his time working in El Salvador, most recently over the past intersession. His lecture this week will focus on the adverse effects of industrial and production concerns in El Salvador on the quality of the environment there. A major example of this is the polluting of estuaries through the heavy use of pesticides on cotton, which is one of the major industries.

This lecture will be presented today at 8 p.m. in Thompson 102, and is another in a series aimed at informing the public on aspects of the environment.

"Today, more than ever before, there is increasing pressure and stepped-up activity for "underdeveloped" countries to develop and become self-supporting. These economic goals are often in direct conflict with a growing concern over the environment. No more evident are these conflicts than in many countries of Central America.

Dukakis will discuss issues

Governor Michael Dukakis announced today he would hold a "town meeting" for Western Massachusetts residents on Monday evening, March 24 in Greenfield.

Residents from throughout the area are invited to attend the meeting for "a candid discussion of state and local issues," the Governor said.

The town meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. on March 24 at the Greenfield High School auditorium, Lenox Ave., Greenfield.

The town meetings, to be held every two weeks in cities and towns across the Commonwealth, "will give ordinary citizens the chance to speak their minds about state government," Dukakis said.

Dukakis said he will not give a formal address at town meetings. Instead, he plans to begin the meeting with a few brief remarks and guidelines, and then open it up to discussion.

He said he hopes the town meetings will be "more than discussions about potholes in the street."

"I want to hear whether state government is working, and whether its institutions and programs are serving the needs of our people. If not, I want people's suggestions on how to bring about corrective action."

'Folksong' lecture at Smith tonite

Ellen J. Stekert, Professor of Folklore at the University of Minnesota and folk musician, will present a lecture entitled "Folksong: From Europe and Africa to North America" tonight at 8:00 in Wright Hall, Smith College.

Ms. Stekert will explore the elements of the European folksong adopted and re-interpreted by American musicians, and will give a musical demonstration.

The lecture, jointly sponsored by the Comparative Literature, American Studies and Afro-American Studies departments, is open to the public.

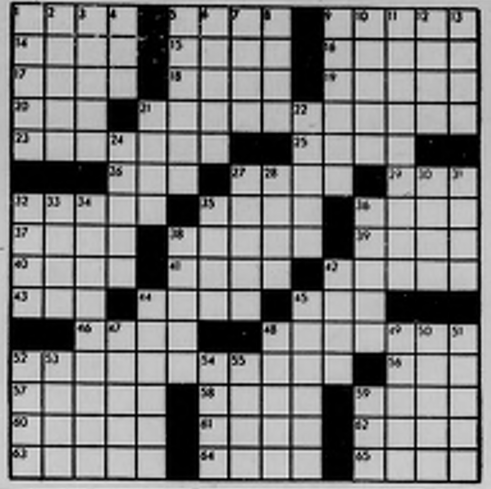
Yesterday's Puzzle Solved



Your Birthday By Stella Wilder

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19 — Born today, you are a highly artistic person with a strong sense of the dramatic that enables you to gain more than most from even the most mundane of circumstances. You may find your niche in the theater where your talent for acting and directing could join forces with your imagination and creative energies in a career from which you could make not only a good material living but great spiritual joy. You delight in pleasing others under any circumstances; to please people for a monetary reward is even better!

You are a wonderfully adaptable individual and are able, therefore, to adjust to almost any new or different situation or circumstance in which you become involved in any way. Indeed, there is no condition of life which you could not ultimately accept, given a little time to match your great willingness to take things as they come. Your adaptability is a gift not to be either ignored or belittled, for it is one which can lift out of the ordinary and into the sublime.

There is, however, one difficulty. You may eventually learn to adapt so readily and so unquestioningly that you will begin to accept adversity without a fight. This could cause you to lose out on a great many of life's good things, for it could create in you a kind of non-productive acquiescence to life's ills - or, at least, those of life's ills to which you fall heir.

To find what is in store for you tomorrow, select your birthday and read the corresponding paragraph. Let your birthday star be your daily guide.

Thursday, March 20

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You can get ahead on the employment scene with relative ease and rapidity today — if you are careful to take coworkers into your confidence.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — If you would do your best today, you must look and feel your best. Don't interrupt another's efforts to make good. Try doing your own "thing."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Contact those who can be of help to you this afternoon. Make an impression on one who can be influential in getting you where you want to go.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care that the harsh words you use against another don't come home, like chickens, to roost. Put your trust in the truth in the afternoon.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — There is very little that is worth sacrificing a good friend for. Think twice before you make up your mind about accepting a new job.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — This should prove a good day for the Leo interested in being in style or keeping in step. Don't try to keep up with those in another money bracket, however.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Take care that you don't stretch another's good mood too far. Things could go into reverse if you insist upon having things your own way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Keep to your present course of action; if anything must change, let it be the energy you put into your work, not the work itself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — All levels of your life should benefit from an increase in effort. Make a genuine attempt to bring friends together from great distances.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You would be wise to consider "maybe" instead of "no" today when children ask for favors. There's no good setting the young against you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Another's scheme for quick success may look good but you would do well to investigate thoroughly before coming to a decision about it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Where co-workers and family vie for your attention, take your time deciding which will win out. There is good on both sides.

Captured YanCon crown — Finished with 4-3 mark

Track season was satisfying

By SCOTT HAYES

The UMass indoor track team didn't put together the best season of the winter schedule, but the squad had its share of success. The trackmen compiled a 4-3 dual meet record, captured the Yankee Conference Championship and placed fifth in the New Englands.

Toney Pendleton set a school record in the long jump as the trackmen thumped Rhode Island 70-48 in the opening meet of the season. Other outstanding performers in the first meet were Curt Engemann, Joe Martens, Mark Healy and Tom Lonergan.

The team travelled to Storrs for a quadrangular meet against UConn, Vermont and New Hampshire and scored 52 points for a second place finish. The Huskies won the meet with 67 points while New Hampshire and Rhode Island managed only 16 points each.

The Minutemen were idle for nearly eight weeks between the meet at Storrs and the next scheduled contest against Northeastern (after intersession). The trackmen were outclassed by a powerful Northeastern squad, 76-42. Three days later, the track squad was nipped by Dartmouth 68½-67½ after battling back from a 62½-48½ deficit to within one point with two events remaining. The Big Green victory spoiled more record-breaking performances by Ken Adamson, Healy, Chris Farmer and Randy Thomas.

UMass had little trouble downing New Hampshire in the final dual meet of the season. The Adamson brothers, Bob and Ken, along with Mike Geraghty, moved the Minutemen into an early lead and Ryan, Kendall, Pendleton, Engemann, Tom Wilson, John McGrail and Healy won their respective events for an 80-38 triumph that upped the squad's record to 4-3.

A balanced attack and several record-setting performances enabled the trackmen to win the Yankee Conference indoor title at Kingston, Rhode Island. Martens was a double winner, placing first in the 50-yard dash and taking first in his specialty, the high jump. Wilson lowered the Conference two-mile record to 8:58.8 and the two-mile relay team of Jim Hunt, [illegible], Bill Gillin and Thomas combined for six more points by capturing first in their event.

The trackmen did not do as well as they had hoped in the New Englands, but they managed a fifth place finish, scoring 16 points. Ken Adamson contributed a point with his fifth-place finish in the long jump. Thomas and Gillin placed second and third in the mile, the biggest event of the New England competition for UMass. Martens tied for fourth in the high jump, Healy tied for third in the 600-yard run and the mile relay team of John Richards, Healy, Stegerwald and Steve Crimmins rounded out the scoring with a second place showing.

The top individual performances during the season were by Martens and Thomas.

Celts melt Pistons

DETROIT (UPI) — Veteran forwards Don Nelson and Paul Silas teamed up in the fourth quarter to lead the Boston Celtics to a 116-96 win over Detroit Tuesday night, dropping the Pistons into the cellar of the NBA's Midwest Division for the first time this season.

Boston scored 40 points, the most against Detroit in a quarter this season, in the final stanza to move within a half game of Washington in their battle for the best record in the NBA.

Nelson scored 12 of his game-high 27 points in the final quarter and Silas had six of his 20. Boston outscored Detroit 18-8 in the first four minutes of the quarter to move from a 70-67 third quarter advantage into a commanding 91-72 lead.

The Pistons played without regular center Bob Lanier, whose ailing left knee had him limping, but Detroit overcame a slow start and led 50-48 at halftime. Boston then scored the first nine points of the third quarter and never trailed again.

George Trapp led the Pistons with 23 points and Howard Porter added 18. Center Dave Cowens had 18 for the Celtics.

A changing scene

Take a look inside the Cage. The basketball surface that was the home court for John Murphy and teammates is gone. Nets drop from the rafters so baseball players can practice indoors. Take a look outside. Lacrosse nets stand amidst the athletic fields and runners can be found no matter which way you look. These runners aren't harriers, but just people out for a jog, to enjoy the beautiful weather. Baseballs, softballs and frisbees fill the air and people gather around the campus pond to relax in the sunlight. These are just a few of the signs of Spring, which begins officially this Friday.

Another indication is the transition from winter sports to the Spring schedule. Coach Dick Bergquist's baseball squad will open the season on March 23 when his team travels to the University of North Carolina for an away contest. The game against the Tar Heels is the first of a seven-game southern stint that includes High Point College twice, North Carolina again, Wake Forest, Guilford College and Randolph Macon College as opposition. The road trip will take place during vacation, but the baseball team will be away once again at the beginning of April. The Minutemen will be at Southeastern Massachusetts University for the [illegible] Tournament. The first home contest will be April 8 against AIC.

Dick Garber's Gorillas open the lacrosse season at Adelphi University on March 26 as they meet Cornell. The stickmen swing by Hofstra March 29 before the first home game on April 3 against the Huskies of Connecticut.

The outdoor track team starts the season at home with an April 2 meet against Boston College. Three days later, coach Ken O'Brien's trackmen host Boston University and Northeastern. The highlight of the season should be the New England Championships, which are being held at the UMass track on May 17.

The varsity tennis schedule gets underway April 7 with a home match versus Tufts. The netmen will have to travel for the next three meets against Yankee Conference opponents Rhode Island, Vermont and New Hampshire.

[illegible] varsity golf squad faces Rhode Island in a home match on April 8, then visits New Haven, Connecticut to challenge a pair of Ivy League teams, Yale and Columbia.

The women's softball squad, coached by Jackie Elliott, initiates its season at Bridgewater State College on April 17. The women will be up against Westfield in the home opener on April 22.

Most of the Spring teams have already been practicing for one or two weeks and the interest will shift quickly from basketball, hockey and gymnastics to baseball, lacrosse and outdoor track.

Take a look around. If everything suddenly seems different it's because Spring and a new sports season are rapidly approaching.

Friars eliminate Pitt 101-80

NEW YORK (UPI) — Providence stomped all over Pittsburgh's "Amoeba Defense" for a 101-80 quarterfinals victory in the 38th National Invitation Tournament Tuesday night.

St. John's met Manhattan in the second game of the doubleheader.

Providence, led by 6-foot-5 freshman Bill Eason, punished Pitt [illegible] under the boards in the first half, rolling to a 57-36 lead at the intermission. Eason, who finished with 18 points and 16 rebounds, pulled in 10 of his rebounds in the first half as the Friars outrebounded the Panthers 30-17 in the stanza.

Mark McAndrew had 17 points and Gary Bello added 16 for Providence.

Pitt, which never came closer than 14 points in the second half, was led by freshman Larry Harris with 15 points.

Outside auditor hired to verify Ed School findings

By JUDY [illegible]
Staff Reporter

UMass President Robert C. Wood said yesterday that an outside accounting firm has been called in to review already completed internal audits at the School of Education.

Wood said he hired the firm Coopers & Lybrand, an international accounting firm with special expertise in university financing, to evaluate fiscal procedures at the School of Ed and conduct whatever additional audits are needed.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery requested an internal outside audit in a meeting with the president yesterday.

Bromery said that UMass Treasurer Kenneth W. Johnson's staff was inadequate to handle the audits at the scandal-plagued School of Education.

Bromery said his relationship with Johnson had been "strained" and that Johnson, under orders from Wood, has not provided him with any information on the audits.

"This review will in certain respects parallel, but not duplicate efforts by internal and external auditors and investigators, and it is particularly important that it be complete."

The School of Education has been the subject of FBI and HEW probes into allegations of misuse of funds. The FBI have acknowledged that $100,000 may have been criminally mishandled by the School of Ed administrators.

A preliminary report on the internal audit conducted by Johnson has revealed that $3,900 was paid to two consultants who may not exist. Also, the report revealed that monies earmarked for a vocational training program has not been located in local bank accounts.

A federal Grand Jury sitting in Boston has subpoenaed School of Ed records.

"The entry of the federal grand jury into this matter has intensified concentration on allegations with criminal implications. While the work of both the academic visiting committee and the external audit continues, it is also vital that the university undertake a review of fiscal and administrative procedures of the school beyond the immediate scope of the present investigation", said Wood.

A special blue-ribbon committee was appointed at the March 5 Board of Trustees meeting with the charge of studying the strengths and weaknesses of the School of Ed. The faculty senate also appointed an ad hoc committee to study academic standards and procedures of the School as well as to investigate the relationship between School of Ed administrators and campus administrators.

Wood said "in engaging the firm of Coopers and Lybrand, I have had the full support of Chancellor Bromery and Treasurer Johnson, both of whom share my concern that all aspects of the present investigation be completed in a thorough and timely manner."

Wood said the firm would report to him directly with periodical reports, but set no deadline.

Administration hit with budget cut

Not to affect academics

By DONNA [illegible]
Staff Reporter

State Secretary of Education Paul Parks said yesterday he has instructed UMass President Robert C. Wood to make budget cuts in administration — not academics.

In addition to speaking to him verbally, Parks said he sent a letter to Wood about a week ago telling him "not to cut academics or support, but to concentrate on cutting the administrative budget".

Cutting the administrative budget, he said, does not mean salary cuts, but possibly laying off administrative staff.

Parks told the Collegian as Secretary of Education, he has approved the budget. He said Wood has an obligation to follow the directive because he (Parks) is "Dukakis's agent."

"If Wood does not present me with the kind of budget I request, I won't approve it," said Parks.

SGA President Rick Savini's Task Force will meet with Parks, Monday to discuss the UMass budget, according to Mark Kaiserman, Orchard Hill Area Government president and member of the Task Force.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said last night that Wood did not mention Parks directive at a budget meeting they attended in Boston yesterday. Bromery also said he had no knowledge of it.

Wood could not be reached for comment yesterday.

Bromery stressed last night that any cuts in administrative staff would eventually hurt the students.

"I'm willing to make cuts in the administration if the students are willing to put up with the hassles of longer lines and less efficiency."

He also questioned what Parks considered "administration". Bromery said his idea of administration is the offices of the President, the Chancellor and the Vice Chancellors.

"All others keep the system moving. If I dropped my staff I'd have to go on a 24 hour day, seven days a week and I still would have more work than I could handle."

"If we make cuts it is my intention to cut equally or at a greater level in the administration," he said.

"We can trip the fat, there's no doubt about it, but it's not a simple thing to do."

'Rent Control will be extended'

Commitment made by Senate chairman at hearing

BOSTON (AP) - The legislature's Local Affairs Committee told a crowd of angry rent control advocates yesterday that the five-year old law will be extended before it expires at the end of the year.

The commitment was made by Sen. Stephen J. McGrail, D-Malden, Senate chairman of the committee, early in the State House hearing in Gardner Auditorium. The hearing was halted for about 30 minutes by an outburst from the crowd, made up primarily of young people.

"There is no question that rent control will continue to exist in the commonwealth," McGrail said after the hearing resumed.

Three persons were arrested when they tried to display a pro-rent control banner and the audience of about 300 began a hand-clapping chant of "get the cops out," referring to Capitol police who made the arrests.

The three were later charged with disorderly conduct and one of those arrested was charged with assault and battery stemming from a tussle with police when the arrests were made.

Capitol Police Chief Paul Doherty called in a contingent of about 15 Metropolitan District Commission Police some in riot helmets in case of further trouble, but there was none.

Earlier, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis had testified in favor of his bill to make rent control a permanent local option. It is now in force in the governor's home town of Brookline, plus Boston, Cambridge and Somerville.

"Rent control is not a panacea for our housing ills, nor is it a substitute for new housing construction," Dukakis said. "But our experience with rent control has shown that a well-administered program can be instrumental in halting runaway rental costs."

Later, after the disturbance, McGrail told the audience, "It is fair to say that rent control will be extended."

The Local Affairs Committee has already taken a preliminary vote favoring rent control extension for eight years.

Senate approves popular election of SGA president

By CHAS D'CONNOR
Staff Reporter

For the first time in the school's history, the president of the Student Government Association (SGA) will be popularly elected next year.

After lengthy debate on the subject, the Student Senate voted by a 23-11 margin to establish the new format.

All members of the student body will be able to vote in the election. Likewise, all members of the student body are eligible to run, provided they get 250 signatures on a nomination petition.

The Senate also moved to allot $1,500 for the funding of the election. Those monies would be equally divided among the candidates, provided that none of the candidates receives more than $250 for his campaign.

In other action taken by the Senate last evening, a recommendation to the Board of Trustees to establish a $10 application fee was tabled for three weeks.

The University is one of the only institutions in the U.S. that does not charge an application fee. To establish this fee for the fall of '76 would be to create added revenue, delaying the elimination of some student programs.

The Senate also moved to allow the Human Rights committee to define the term "cultural" in relation to debate over whether or not the Asian American Student Association should be funded from a "Culture fund." That fund was previously set aside by the SGA for special interest cultural awareness groups. Primary opposition to the funding of the organization with non allocated SGA funds came from Treasurer Jack Margossian.

Margossian's objections stemmed from the fact that out of an approximate $900,000 projected budget for next year, $267,260 has already been approved. "The budget will run about $100,000 over once the Student Senate Transit Service and the Student Senate office budget are added in," Margossian said.

"The Senate has obligations to serve the greater majority of students first," said Margossian. "Those organizations I am referring to are those such as the area governments, WMUA, the Collegian and the SATS."

"America is the melting pot of the world and UMass is a microcosm of America, but to fund this special interest awareness group and not the rest of them on campus would be a great injustice."

A report from the Academic Affairs Committee stated that the committee is planning to organize a student lobby in the state legislature if at all possible.

Art major creates visual 'essay'

By JIM PAULIN

Art with a capital A, an essay written by beat philosopher Allan Watts was interpreted via acrylics, oil paints, pastel, magic markers by a UMass art student.

Nancy Elwell a senior art major displayed her work in the Student Union gallery. The exhibit opened Sunday and ran through Wednesday.

Nancy Elwell, explaining her works to the critical eyes of art department faculty members.

The essay by Watts dealt with art today, tomorrow and yesterday. Watts says art was primarily for the aesthetic embellishment of practical, functional objects. "No one ever made anything for the express purpose of adorning a museum or being shown in a gallery of being commended in a newspaper," said Watts.

Elwell took Watts excerpts from Watts essay and put them on canvas. The paintings do not betray the visual for the verbal, however, most of the writing is colorful illegible scrawlings. She said her goal was design, not dictation.

"It went from using quotes to using symbols that looked like letters," she added.

The project earned Elwell six credits and consisted of 28 paintings.

During the show, Elwell said she was frequently asked the proverbial question "what's it all mean."

"This whole thing has drained me. I get tired of defending everything. You just play with paint spontaneously, and you look at it, and if it's not balanced, you throw it away," she said.

Voter registration drive attracts 650 new voters

By GARY McWILLIAMS
Staff Reporter

Amherst received over 650 new voters as the result of a two-day drive for student voter registration in the campus center, according to Town Clerk Estelle Matusko.

Matusko said she was not surprised at the large amount of students seeking to register. "The real significance" she said, is whether they turn out and vote."

Acting on a petition by the Student Organizing Project (SOP) and the Student Senate, the Amherst Board of Registrars set up enrollment tables in the Campus Center and a Southwest Dining Commons.

Doug Stanley of the Progressive Candidates Pool (PCP) said campus groups had requested four locations to accommodate student voter registration. "I'd have to assume," said Stanley, "that more locations would have increased enrollment."

Members of the University State Communications Council (USCC) provided last minute registers transportation to and from the Town Clerk's office on Wednesday. A USCC sponsored van patrolled nine campus locations picking up those who wished to register.

Tuesday, 545 students registered at tables stationed on the Concourse level of the Campus Center, according to Matusko. Four town officials working from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. attracted large crowds of students throughout the day, she said. Long lines of students waited to register to vote in the April town elections.

Last week a similar campaign netted 105 new voters at Berkshire Dining Commons in Southwest.

Ahora treasurer quits

Cruz attempting to form new group

By FRED GOSIEWSKI
Staff Reporter

The treasurer of the organization of Spanish-speaking students on campus has resigned in what appears to be a personal dispute with the rest of the officers, and has sought to transfer one-half of the funds of that organization to start her own group.

Doris Cruz, former treasurer of AHORA, handed in her letter of resignation last weekend, and asked the Student Senate to appropriate funds to form the Young Pragmatists Association.

The Student Senate has refused to act on the funds transfer, in part because the organization proposed by Cruz and her husband Juan does not appear to have broad-based support.

"I don't think we can cut a budget in half for no legitimate reason," said Student Senate Treasurer Jack Margossian, in reference to the AHORA budget.

"We can't take the money away once it's been allocated," he added.

Cruz claims that she felt "alienated" in the organization, in part because she is a woman. "My feelings aren't being listened to," she said.

"I think the organization (AHORA) is headed for trouble," Cruz remarked, because of possible legal disputes that the group may be involved in.

She said the Board of Editors of Eco Latino, the newspaper of AHORA that is inserted in the Collegian, may be violating copyright laws, and that the persons who are controlling the publication have the impression that they can't be sued.

Possible problems arising from contract disputes may confront AHORA, says Cruz. She feels that the persons who are formulating the budget for the organization are not familiar with the constitution of the Student Government Association.

"I have kept the organization out of the courts," asserted Cruz. "I did the job better than anyone."

GSS seeks 'more input'

Wood requests 'white paper'

By STEVE TRIPOLI
Staff Reporter

A Graduate Student Senate committee preparing a "white paper" requested by UMass President Robert Wood, is in need of more input from the graduate community according to Graduate Senate Vice President Barbara Stack.

Wood requested the paper in the hope it will be used as part of the University's rationale when the battle for the UMass budget goes to the State legislature.

"We feel it is something the whole graduate community should know about," said Stack. She explained that the paper would have two main parts.

First, it will examine "the role of graduate education vis a vis the University, community, and state, to justify it (graduate education) as an investment to the decision makers," she said.

The second part of the paper will deal with "a review of graduate education as it is, and a suggestion of directions it might take," according to Stack.

Stack said at the present time the committee which is working on the paper consists of graduate students in the fields of linguistics, German, geology, psychology, economics, and business. "You can see that there are gaps," she said.

"We'd like to invite people from other areas to join the committee."

After next week's vacation and prior to the release of the paper the committee will be working on other means of soliciting input. A questionnaire will be issued "to fill in gaps in the data we already have," according to Stack.

Open hearings will also be held. "We'll ask people to speak on two issues," said Stack, "the justification of a graduate education, and the conditions of their education and their experiences on this campus."

Stack stressed that the data being collected is not only for the white paper, but will be generally available to grad students. "Not only will this committee come out with a white paper, but we will have something for a future reference,"

These groups will be able to avail themselves of the information that the committee compiles.

Persons from the graduate community interested in taking part in the committee are requested to contact Barbara Stack in Room 919 Campus Center or at 545-0970.

SW committee will listen to fund requests tonight

The Southwest Budget Committee is holding open hearings tonight from 5 to 7 p.m. for Southwest groups which are requesting funds for the 1975-76 academic year.

The committee which is composed of nine Southwest students and six staff members asks groups to submit three requests: one set of figures at 100 per cent of the money needed for their planned activities; and the second and third requests set at 90 and 80 percent of the desired budget, indicating where cuts would be made and why.

The hearings for each group are scheduled on 15-30 minute intervals and include requests from various dormitories, SW centers, and offices.

Possible parking solution: upgrading of bus system

This is the final article of a three-part series on towing and parking at UMass. Tuesday's Collegian examined the sudden increase in towing; the use of Amherst Towing and not some other firm; and the agreements existing between Amherst Towing and the University. Yesterday's Collegian looked at the parking situation in general. Today's final article analyzes the problem and makes some recommendations.

By DANIEL LEWIS
Staff Reporter

The ultimate solution to the parking problem may be in upgrading the bus system and initiating a pedestrian campus, according to directors of parking, transportation and transit operations.

Bob Kittle, director of Parking and Transportation, has forwarded proposals to this effect and Bob Gooding, director of the Student Senate expressed his agreement with the idea in an interview. Gooding stressed, however, that a much improved bus system would be necessary before such a plan could be implemented.

The administration is presently preparing an application for federal funds to finance necessary improvements, according to Kittle. At peak times, the buses would have to run as often as every five minutes if the plan is to work, he said.

Already there are small steps being taken to reduce the number of cars on campus. This year the parking registration fee was reduced from five to three dollars for people willing to park in peripheral lots, Kittle said.

While these proposals may be solutions to the problem, they are not likely to be implemented in the near future because of cost and administrative difficulties as reported in Tuesday's Collegian. In the meantime, if tension is to be relieved, short range steps must be taken.

If parking regulations are necessary, which those who purchase stickers seem to feel, and if ticketing is not sufficient enforcement, then minimizing the ill effects of towing may be one way to ease tension.

Last semester people who bought stickers had great difficulty in finding a parking space in their assigned lot because of illegally parked cars. One student who purchased a sticker for lot 32 started his own towing service as a result.

Non enforcement seemed to encourage people to park in illegal spaces.

The possibility of a University or student-run towing service was researched by the Student Government Treasurer's office last year.

The study concluded that the cost of towing would have to be 40 dollars a car if the operation was to

Vietnam evacuates Hue, six provinces

SAIGON (UPI) — South Vietnam ordered evacuation of the northern city of Hue yesterday, swelling the tide of refugees to over half a million and leaving roughly 80 per cent of the country open to Communist control.

High U.S. officials expressed doubt the government eventually would be able to retain control of more than the III and IV Corps in South Vietnam — the military area around Saigon and the Mekong Delta where the Viet Cong has strong enclaves.

Refugees began flooding out of three provinces Sunday and three additional more yesterday amid reports of imminent surrender of huge chunks of South Vietnamese territory.

The withdrawal from the six provinces, combined with territory in South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia that is already in Communist hands, accounts for about 75 per cent of Indochina.

Officially, the South Vietnamese government has only ordered the abandonment of Hue, the capital of Thua Thien province, and three provinces in the Central Highlands — Pleiku, Kontum, and Darlac.

But in fact these withdrawals have sparked a mass exodus from all of Thua Thien province, the neighboring province of Quang Tri, and the province of Tuyen Duc in the Central Highlands, bringing the total number of provinces evacuated to six.

In Manila, Phan Quang Dan, South Vietnam's deputy premier, appealed to Philippines President Ferdinand E. Marcos to mediate a cease-fire, and there were increasing signs of secret negotiations with the Communists and South Vietnam.

Vietnamese government officials urged more than 300,000 civilians to flee the former imperial capital of Hue, South Vietnam's third largest city and capital of Thua Thien province.

The provincial governor told residents two North Vietnamese divisions were poised for attack.

It was a strong indication the Saigon government was preparing to abandon the two northernmost provinces of Quang Tri and Thua Thien near the North Vietnam border in addition to three surrendered in the Central Highlands.

Refugees from neighboring Quang Tri province immediately joined those fleeing from Hue.

The government Sunday officially ordered an evacuation of an estimated 250,000 civilians and soldiers from the Central Highlands provinces of Kontum, Pleiku, Darlac.

Panic also spread to the Central Highlands province of Tuyen Duc, where refugees from Dalat, a city of over 80,000, joined the fleeing crowds along dusty dirt roads.

Politicians, students ask Lon Nol to resign

PHNOM PENH (UPI) — Government paratroopers supported by propeller-driven bombers counterattacked yesterday to clear rebels from villages within mortar range of Phnom Penh. In the capital, politicians, generals and students expressed more opposition to the Lon Nol regime.

Sources close to the government leadership disclosed that a group including young political leaders and generals had asked President Lon Nol to step down, but the aging field marshal refused after first indicating he might consider a face-saving arrangement to retire.

About 400 university students met in the capital yesterday to debate whether they should take a stand in favor or against further American military aid, but were unable to reach a decision and called another meeting for tomorrow. There have been several student demonstrations in the past against Lon Nol.

Student leaders urged that a demonstration be staged against American aid on grounds it was prolonging the fighting in Cambodia, but they were shouted down by supporters of the assistance.

The move to get the resignation of the 62-year-old field marshal, which has become stronger since a cabinet reshuffle eight days ago, apparently reached an impasse.

The impasse was said to be created because of Lon Nol's insistence on having some of his supporters in seats in the new government. Those who seek his resignation also feel that the U.S. Congress would be better disposed toward providing more military aid if Lon Nol left the scene.

Government silent on submarine affair

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford had a personal "no comment" yesterday to disclosure that the CIA had partially salvaged a sunken Soviet submarine which carried nuclear warheads, secret codes and target plans.

The Departments of State and Defense also refused to talk about the Pacific Ocean salvage operation, performed with a specially designed vessel owned by billionaire Howard Hughes, or its possible effects on U.S.-Soviet relations.

Ford gave his two-word response to the disclosure when he was questioned by reporters while waiting outside the White House to greet visiting Yugoslav Prime Minister Dzemal Bijedic. There was also a "no comment," in English, from the Soviet Foreign Ministry in Moscow.

But already demands were being made for an investigation of the secret operation in the depths of the Pacific which almost garnered a treasure trove of Soviet coding machines and ciphers, battle plans and nuclear tipped missiles.

Intelligence sources said the Hughes-owned Glomar Explorer, a floating laboratory for underwater research, located and recovered about a third of the hulk of a Soviet G-class diesel-powered nuclear missile submarine last summer three miles down on the bottom of the Pacific between Hawaii and the Far Eastern Soviet naval base of Vladivostok.

Intelligence sources said that the submarine, which normally carries a crew of about 86, exploded for unknown reasons in 1968 and went to the bottom.

After Soviet ships tried and abandoned salvage operations, the CIA quietly moved in under cover of an ocean-mining vessel the agency designed and financed but which was built by Hughes' Summa Corp.

There were indications that the deal may have been made directly with the recluse billionaire known for his secretiveness and penchant for flamboyant projects. Hughes was last reported living in isolation in the Bahamas.

The CIA-designed Glomar Explorer, equipped with grappling irons, claws, underwater television, and sonar and other sophisticated equipment managed to raise the Soviet hulk almost to within a mile of the surface, intelligence sources said.

Then the back of the 320-foot long craft broke, dropping the most important intelligence-potential part back to the bottom. The portion salvaged, with a number of bodies of Soviet sailors still inside was brought to the surface.

The bodies were buried at sea "with full honor respects according to the Russian Naval manual," the sources said.

news summary

Oil threat denied

JERUSALEM (UPI) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger yesterday gave a public assurance to Saudi Arabia that the United States was not threatening military force against its oil fields.

He then returned to Israel for the decision of a crucial cabinet meeting on Israel's next proposals for an agreement with Egypt.

A senior American official said Kissinger's attempts to bring about a new agreement between Egypt and Israel were moving more slowly than he had originally expected. The main hangup was still over the price Egypt will pay in return for an Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai passes and oil fields.

Busing foes protest

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than a thousand demonstrators, most from Boston, marched on the U.S. Capitol yesterday in a pouring rain to lobby for federal anti-busing legislation.

None of the members of the Massachusetts congressional delegation attended the demonstration. "I'm standing here like you waiting for one single member of the Massachusetts delegation," City Councilor Albert "Dapper" O'Neil told the crowd, "and I'm ashamed of them."

Senate votes on aid

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate passed a $3.6 billion foreign aid appropriation bill yesterday after stripping from it [illegible] million in proposed reconstruction aid for Cambodia, South Vietnam and Laos. The vote was 57 to 40.

Before final passage, the Senate added $100 million in increased funds for birth control and food programs abroad.

The House last Thursday passed a $3.6 billion version of the foreign aid appropriations, and the two bills now go to a joint conference committee to adjust the differences.

Nixon called 'crook'

NEW YORK (UPI) — The late Chief Justice Earl Warren was quoted yesterday as having said that former President Nixon was "a cheat, a liar and a crook" who abused the American people.

Writing in the current issue of Esquire magazine, Alden Whitman, a writer for the New York Times, said that Warren also referred to his successor, Warren Burger, as "a horse's ass."

Five College Black studies seminars

The Five College Black Studies Executive Committee will be sponsoring three seminars this semester. The first to be held Thursday, March 20, presents Professor Althea Waites of the Music Department of Smith College in a lecture-demonstration entitled: "Piano Music of Early 20th Century Black Composers". Professor Waites will discuss Black composers during the post-emancipation period and the obstacles faced by Black musician-composers who work in the European idiom. The highpoint of the seminar will be an analysis, with demonstrations, of the piano music of several Black composers. The seminar will be held at 6 p.m. in the Gerald Penny Black Cultural Center at Amherst College. The entire Five College Community is invited to attend. An informal reception will follow immediately.

Folk concert at Hampshire tonight

A folk concert to benefit the Mohawk nation in Ganienkeh will be held tonight at 8 p.m., House 3, Donut 5, at Hampshire College. Donation is $1. Beer will be served.

The people of Ganienkeh (Land of the Flint) are attempting to live a traditional life on their traditional homeland near Eagle Bay, New York. They have met with stiff resistance, due to the U.S. government's refusal to recognize the Treaty of 1794. The people of Ganienkeh have been threatened with a roadblock, which would cut off all traffic and supplies.

We are hoping to supply Ganienkeh to outlast the roadblock. Contributions can be dropped off at the Veteran's Coalition, 411 Student Union, UMass.

The two faces of Gallo

By DAN HOROWITZ

Joshua Simon's shag haircut must have cost more than Vince Silva's whole outfit. Someone looked out of place, either the Gallo rep with the mod suit or UFW's rep with jeans and track shoes. J. P. Morgan was in the ballroom. He kept holding up signs saying "look sincere." Simon looked sincere for over an hour, after that he looked stupid. Stuff some dummy in a suit, give him a simple point (we're just innocent bystanders caught in a jurisdictional dispute) and he can talk your ear off for hours. The UFW rep seemed like a nice guy, sort of a nice guy to debate with since [illegible]

How sweet it is

By JIM PAULIN

In the beginning of the school year, vast stainless steel tubs of sugar in tablespoon bags were set out on tables in the dining room section of most Dining Commons. But, as the cost of sugar rose, the little bags were moved from the area into the lunch line area (which is in a separate room) because too much sugar was going into coffee outside the D.C.'s. The idea was that if the sugar could be closely supervised, if it was nearer the D.C. employees, less would leave in peoples' pockets instead of their stomachs. But, evidently sugar "security" was inadequate because soon the little bags disappeared and the sugar was now domiciled in cylindrical glass containers with a silver plated dome and a hole in the top for the sugar [illegible]

As sometimes, steaming, hot coffee rises to my lips I scan the streets below my apartment. It is quarter to nine (what am I doing up at this time anyway); the door of the lower apartment from the two-family across the street opens and out steps a young pseudo-executive clad in white trench coat and double-knits, a brown leather brief case at his side; a contemporary Olympian.

He strolls across the porch and descends the stairs into the driveway. The blinds at the window rise rapidly and a small child with mother appear. The elder takes her child's hand and waves it to the departing father. He turns back not once, but hurriedly reaches for the car door. The red Plymouth is facing out into the street prepared to make a hasty departure, [illegible]

Greek sophomores chosen to join 'Arcon' guide service

By CARLENE MURPHY
Staff Reporter

Twenty-two sophomores from the Greek area were selected on March 8 and 9 to become members of Arcon, the University Guide Service.

The 83 applicants went through "two intensive eight minute interviews designed to test their knowledge of the University, ability to react favorably in a high pressure situation, and their poise in dealing with large groups of people," according to John Tate, selections chairperson of Arcon.

Arcon, which means "guide" in Greek, is sponsored by the Greek Council and is a standing committee of the Council. It is the only existing guide service of the University. Arcon was originally established in 1966 by a group of Greek men to improve what they called "the beer-drinking image of Greeks." It remained an all male group until 1971 when women were admitted to the group.

In the past Arcon has given tours to state legislators, and prominent individuals such as Ramsey Clark, Warren Berger and Francis Sargent. Its main service, however, is to acquaint parents and visitors with the Amherst campus.

Tours are available Monday through Friday at 1:00 and 2:00, Saturday 9-12:30 and Sunday 1-5.

opposing arguments, saying that combatting racism and sexism were the responsibilities of the Southwest Center for Racial Understanding and the Southwest Women's Center. She denounced the proposal as being similar to "core requirements" and said that "ramming sexism and racism down throats will only alienate houses from the SWA and the Southwest community."

Assembly members had been directed by the SWA Executive Committee at their last meeting to ask for feedback from their dorm residents.

Black caucus member George Arnett asked that each representative tell the Assembly who they had talked with and what feedback was received. Twelve members had talked to their constituents and the responses were diverse. One representative said her dorm had "no space" for a colloquium.

Treasurer Brian Harrington then made a motion to "table" the proposal until the second meeting after spring break to give the representatives time to go back to their respective dorm governments. SWA President Sanderson concurred, saying that "viable programs" needed to be defined.

Michelle Frank from Melville and Bob Padgett, head of residence of Kennedy, [illegible], opposed the motion to table, saying there was no need for postponement.

NYC - another view

By RON ARENA

Being from Massachusetts, I've always possessed a negative view of New York. In fact, I've always hated the place.

As a Boston sports fan, I've conditioned myself to feel this way. It's the loyal thing to do. I've learned to hate Walt Frazier, Rod Gilbert, and now Catfish Hunter. I hate the Knicks, Giants, Yankees, Jets, Nets, Mets, and the Sets. And the guy who thought up those unimaginative names causes my stomach to churn with anger.

But my hatred extends beyond the sphere of the sports world. I'll favor Kennedy over Rockefeller. I'll argue that the Charles is less polluted than the Hudson, that the Prudential Center is higher than the Empire State Building. I'll drink Narragansett before Knickerbocker, and I refuse to touch a New York Sirloin. I mean I'm a diehard. The only New Yorker I can stand is my roommate, and only because he's a UMass fan.

Also being a Minuteman follower, I decided to sacrifice my partiality and attend the NIT, feeling it worth the risk of entering the "Concrete Jungle." For a week prior, I contemplated the myth of this city. Would I get mugged? ...stabbed? ...raped? Like I said, it would be worth the risk.

We left for the city on Friday night. There were ten in our party. After a couple hours of driving we reached a sign warning, "Entering New York". I had the Alka Seltzer ready and the window open. But to my astonishment, I needed neither.

After spending the night in the suburbs of the city, at the Grasso Hotel, we headed in for the hopeful UMass manhandling of Manhattan. We reached the city and parked our cars. Cautiously opening the door, expecting a rush of polluted air to enter at any moment, I maneuvered out into the city. Immediately, the myth was shattered. The air was safe to breathe. I could see the top of the Empire State Building. I saw no hookers flaunting their credentials on the sidewalk. And speaking of sidewalks, they were not even covered with garbage.

We took a subway on 42nd street, or 18th street, or 110th street, or whatever. (Whoever named these streets had less imagination than the immortal guy who named the sports teams.) Climbing up from the subway tunnel, Madison Square Garden became a reality. This was it, the "Magical World of M.S.G.", and it wan't even on a T.V. tube. It made Boston Garden look like the YMCA.

After failing in my attempts to scalp an extra ticket, we entered. Escalators! Comfortable seats without having to dodge support beams and hanging balconies to view the action. Not even any signs decorated with four-letter words. For the first time in my life, I admitted New York possessed something that outclassed Boston.

By now it was gametime. With dreams of an NIT championship, I ecstaticly watched John Murphy pump in his first four shots, thinking he was Dave Debuscherre. At the cage, I always envisioned him as John Havlicek, but being so enthralled with this legendary place, my mind was playing tricks.

But after 40 minutes of basketball (or was it 34?), the dream was shattered. And to lose to a team from New York - I was heartbroken.

It took me the entire P.C. - Clemson game to recover from the shock. Then it took me another hour to recover from the Friars' stunning upset.

Finally we exited to the streets again. A member of our crew suggested eating - a fine idea since our stomachs were gurgling. We chose an Italian restaurant, Enrico & Paglieri. Again, I was impressed by something in NYC. What was happening to me? I kept telling myself I'm supposed to hate this place. Had the UMass defeat affected me this seriously?

After a couple hours of indecision, it was time to leave. In a group of ten, a unanimous decision seems as far-fetched as the Knicks winning the NBA championship. Some wanted to go dancing, other carousing, and still one, to the East Side. (I think that's where the ladies of the night were)

Even though we had lost, it had been a good weekend. I still hate the Jets, Nets, et. al., but New York still has class. Maybe I'll even visit again next year if UMass makes the NIT. But if my newest dream materializes, I won't get the chance. UMass will win the NCAA.

Dancers impress multitude

By SUSAN DOSKOCIL
Staff Reporter

The University Dancers were well received in Atlantic City at the Eastern District General Assembly of the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education and Recreation after their 1:30 p.m. Sunday performance.

"My pride continued to grow every second. I thought their performance was absolutely outstanding!" remarked Dr. [illegible] F. [illegible], Department Chairman of the University's Department for Professional Preparation in Physical Education and Dance.

According to Karen [illegible] "Many people were amazed at the sophistication of the University Dancers — that any University group could be so advanced! But they really thought that the performance quality brought it across professionally."

"The audience felt we really enjoyed it!" according to Wendy Laakso.

"A lot of people saw things that they'd like to integrate into their programs now. They want to use us as a source of inspiration," said graduate student [illegible].

"There were lots of mouths hanging open in that audience," added [illegible]. "One man said that he was so excited by what he saw that he kept wanting to jump up and down right at that moment."

Jo Orlando spoke with some people who'd left the Five College area, but had seen the group perform when it was first getting started. They said that it was exciting to see how much the group had grown in just five years.

"Someone approached me with a problem he'd been searching for a solution to for years" continued Jo. "He was sure that there was some [illegible] of Physical Education or Recreation that would draw evenly from and integrate both males and females. He was amazed at what he saw in our performance — how dance drew everyone together — and he decided that DANCE was the solution he'd been searching so long for."

UMass was well represented by a large number of faculty members, too. Dr. Lynn Vendien, Dr. Betty Spears and Dr. Larry Locke all received awards. As part of a five person panel, Dr. Larry Locke presented a paper which captivated the audience. Dr. Carol [illegible] presided over one of the meetings. Dr. Walter Kroll delivered a paper on the Psychology of Sportsmanship, and Dr. [illegible] also delivered a paper.

The University Dancers will next be performing on campus in the annual Spring Dance Concert, which will be held in Bowker Auditorium, April 16-18, along with the Concert Dance Group.

The weekend of May 17 they will be going to Colby College in Maine. Among other pieces to be performed as part of that program will be a dance choreographed by Tina [illegible], a UMass '70 graduate who is a member of the faculty up there.

They now have lots of invitations from people who saw them in Atlantic City. It looks like they're going to be a well-traveled group!

Bongers intramural champs

By RUSS SMITH

Another Intramural basketball season bounced to an end last night with the completion of the campus playoffs at Boyden Gymnasium. The men's title went to the Bongers, the co-rec title to the Dunkshots and the women's championship to the Swishes.

There was a big turnout for the game between the Bongers and the Black Oldtimers. I'd estimate almost two hundred students from all over campus. Even some of the Minutemen, Chuck Stevesky, Mike Stokes, and Jim Burke were amongst the spectators. But, no sign of Coach Leaman, who witnessed last year's game.

The game can be divided into two parts: Part one was a good example of basketball. The tapoff to start the game was won by the Bongers, but subsequently stolen away, and the Oldtimers had the lead 2-zip. The Bongers bought the ball right back down court for an easy layup, and the pace was set for the evening.

If I had sat down and written to those of you who didn't make it to the game everything that happened in the contest; how many shots were blocked, how many were missed (etcetera), this whole page of the Collegian would be filled. So, I'll try to be brief about it.

The Bongers built up an 11-6 lead, but only lead at half-time 20-16 (this is the end of part one).

Part two was a completely different story - a bad story with a decent ending. With both teams still playing a man-to-man, the Bongers got hot in the next six minutes, outscoring the 'timers 15-6 to lead 35-22. This is probably the most crucial point in the game. The Oldtimers had the ball, but couldn't get it through the hoop. The Bongers whipped a long bomb down court to an open man for what looked to be a sure layup. But one of the Oldtimers ran up behind him and threw and I mean THREW the Bongee off the court, towards the cement wall. Luckily, he didn't become part of it. Two minutes later, another Bonger was the target of a head-lock foul (I thought I was at a wrestling match!). Now I wanted the Oldtimers to win this game, up to this point, but this wasn't good basketball, this was a joke! (Last year in the finals, a black team was going against a white team, but none of this shit happened--). The director of the intramural program, Earl Edwards, had the game stopped for a minute, and talked to both coaches.

Strangely, the Bongers weren't hostile back, kept their cool, and deserved to win the game. And I'm glad they did. The final score was 49-37.

As it turned out, these stupid fouls hurt, as no less than 20 points of the Bonger's total were scored at the charity stripe. Now, I'll admit the refs did miss a few calls, especially on the Bonger's big man, but the way I look at it, the fact that that kid didn't break his head open into the cement wall was reason enough for the refs to miss some obvious fouls. Plus, the good calls even out with the bad ones in the end, anyways.

Jim Kenney, Bob Langlois, and Coach Bruce Guzowski combined for 34 pts, with Rich Drown throwing in another 10 for the Bongers.

Cheap shots: I know I've been sort of unfair to women's intramurals, and the co-rec program. Maybe I'll change over vacation — and maybe not ... the Swishers (women's title) defeated Little Michhs 31-23 ... the Dunkers ran over SAE for the co-rec title 62-16 — hopefully more on them tomorrow...

Hayes scores 29 points, Bullets annihilate Celts

LANDOVER, Md. (UPI) - Elvin Hayes scored 29 points and Mike Riordan 20, Wednesday night as the Washington Bullets smashed the Boston Celtics 97-80 in a showdown of National Basketball Association Division leaders.

The victory gave Washington a 53-20 record and a one-game lead over the Celtics in the loss column [illegible]

[illegible]

Hayes scored 18 first half points as Washington took a 50-38 lead. The Bullets had grabbed an early 16-5 lead behind Riordan and Hayes, but the Celtics closed to within two, 22-20, at the end of the first period.

Hayes then added eight second quarter points as Washington expanded its lead to 12. The Bullets [illegible]

The Bullets were outrebounded early, but Wes Unseld made his first appearance in nine games and quickly offset Boston's advantage. Unseld played with splints on his broken right pinkey finger.

Excellent dramatic study of psychic phenomena. A couple (Julie Christie and Donald Sutherland) living in Venice are tormented by signs of the possible resurrection of their dead daughter, instigated by a blind clairvoyant and her friend. Director Nicholas Roeg issues a spellbinding maze of clues and terrors, culminating in one of the freakiest climaxes in recent horror history. I'd get high for it if I were you. A WOMAN UNDER THE INFLUENCE [illegible] bare, and with one realistic character after another drifting in and out of the crisis-haunted rooms, you feel you are living inside their very brains. Gena Rowlands, Cassavetes' wife, plays Mabel Longhetti so expertly: a [illegible] Falk, as her husband, Nick, is fascinating to watch, as he struggles vigorously to protect his love and balance the reactions of his friends simultaneously. Cassavetes' screenwriting, cinematography, everything is superbly rendered. Never have I [illegible] This is not simply a woman under the influence, but a portrayal of a diseased situation where the entire world is under some kind of influence, some kind of pressure. It is a work of art. (Campus Cinemas)
